Col. Logan H. Roots, of Little Rock, Ark., entertained a notable assembly in honor of his guest, Rev. Dr. J. H. Vincent, of New York: Bishops H. N. Pierce, of Protestant Episcopal Church; H. W. Warren, of Methodist Episcopal Church, and C. B. Galloway, of Methodist Episcopal Church, South; together with twenty D.D.'s, and a number of distinguished laymen.

Rev. William M. Patterson has been transferred from the Central Mexican Mission Conference to the Memphis Conference, and appointed agent for the American Bible Society in Venezuela and adjacent States of South America.

We are pained to learn of the affliction which has fallen upon the home of our brother, Rev. Sam W. Small, in the loss of his little daughter, Annie Frank, who died in Washington, February 16. He will have the sympathy and prayers of his brethren in this time of grief.

Mrs. Cleveland has joined the Ramabai Circle for the Elevation of Women in India. This organization is the outgrowth of the work in this country of the Pundita Ramabai, who has been laboring in various cities of the United States since March, 1886, to awaken interest in the establishment of a normal school for high caste child-widows in Poona, India.

Miss Ida Joe Brooks, a daughter of the Gov. Brooks, of Arkansas, who was substituted by Gen. Grant with Gov. Baxter, and who was a Methodist preacher, has been elected as delegate to the General Conference of Methodist Episcopal Church. She is a noble woman of rare gifts and accomplishments. The "invasion" of women into that august body will be formidable, though small.

The address of Rev. N. J. Roberts is Blairstown, La.

An old brother, long known as a zealous and spiritual Christian, says his heart has been burdened for the best results of the week of prayer and self-denial, and has desired us to request all the preachers during that week to preach upon "The Power of the Holy Ghost." Recollect that the week of prayer commences April 1.

The annual statement of The Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York is made public, and shows that the year 1887 was the most prosperous one this company has ever enjoyed. The new business written amounted to $69,457,468 37, or an increase of $12,621,719 over the new business of 1886. The assets of the Mutual Life now aggregate the enormous sum of $118,806,851 88, making it by far the largest financial institution in the world. It paid to its members during the year for death claims and endowments over $8,000,000, and the total payments to policy-holders aggregated $11,128,123 60. Mr. Thomas H. Bowles is the resident agent at New Orleans, and will take pleasure in giving all desired data and information. Office, 46 Camp street.

That Lord Dufferin has resigned vice royalty of India, and been appointed British Ambassador to Italy, shows England's conception of the real danger in the present political crisis, and the policy she intends to pursue through the services of this brilliant diplomat.

Notice.

I have the following books on hand and for sale at forty per cent. below catalogue prices (purchaser to pay postage or express charges): Wesley's Notes on the New Testament; Summers on Baptism; Brandus on the Preparation of a Sermon; Milman's History of Latin Christianity.

Address H. BRADFORD,
Meadville, Franklin county, Miss.

Rev. S. H. Werlein.

At the preachers' meeting in Carondelet Street Church, held March 12, 1888, the following preamble and resolution were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Rev. S. H. Werlein has been transferred from our midst to a distant field of labor; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we view his departure with regret; that we lose from our Conference, in his removal, an able preacher, devoted pastor, and Christian gentleman; that we accompany him to his new home in St. Louis with our best wishes and prayers, and commend him most heartily to the confidence and friendship of the brethren of that city and Conference.

H. D. KIMBALL,
Secretary.

Conference Minutes.

CORRECTIONS.

The preachers in charge request that the following corrections in Minutes of last session be made.

Louisiana Conference—Ruston, La: Value of parsonage, $1,621 55, instead of $621. Haynesville circuit: Amount paid presiding elder, $85 30, instead of $65 30.

North Mississippi Conference—Charleston circuit, Grenada district: Amount paid foreign missionary collection was $80, instead of $50.

Y. M. C. A. State Convention.

The State Convention of the Young Men's Christian Association will be held this year in Greenville, Miss., from April 5 to 8 inclusive.

Each local Young Men's Christian Association and every Young Men's Prayer Meeting is urged to send delegates.

All delegates are requested to write to A. M. Vance, Greenville, Miss., informing him of their purpose to attend.

Delegates will be entertained by citizens of Greenville.

R. W. JONES,
Chairman State Com.

The Southwestern Louisiana Land Company have established a branch office at Lake Charles, La., where land seekers can obtain all information necessary. The headquarters is Crowley, east of Lake Charles, on the the Southern Pacific railroad. Mr. W. W. Hudson, the energetic manager, will be found in charge, ready at all times to entertain visitors free of charge.

Items of Interest.

A proposition has been made to create in the Methodist Episcopal Church a new office for women—Bible reader. Her duties will be to assist the pastor by visiting the sick, reading the Bible, religious conversation and prayer, teaching and leading the young, assisting in public sevices, when their pastor may direct, and such other duties as the church may impose. They are to pursue a regular course of study, such as General Conference may indicate and, on approved efficiency and recommendation by Quarterly Conference, be eligible to ordination as deaconesses.

Bishop Wilson lectured recently at our Trinity Church, Baltimore, on "A Tour of the World," to a large and appreciative audience. Though not there to hear it, we venture the guess that his "lecture" was a trumpet peal for missions.

The Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions raised from all sources last year $781,177 59. The membership of the Presbyterian Church is 661,809, which is an average of $1 19 cents per member. Brother official member, don't you think your church could reach this, if you really tried? Why not?

According to a cartoon in a recent Harper's Weekly, admission into the political arena is guarded by a schedule of tolls. For competition for mayoralty, $25,00; Senate, $20,000; comptroller, $10,000; judgeship, $10,000, etc. The hoodlums keep the gate and must be paid in "campaign funds." Free whisky or fat offices. Every man of this ugly desperate race of "plugs," who works hard for one week, thinks he has made a living for one year, at least, and must be taken care of. Could not the vagrant law be made to apply to such cases and take effect one week before an election.

A Father's Protection.

Father, it is as essential for you to provide a safeguard against that night-fiend to your children, croup, as to their hunger. Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein will cure croup, coughs and colds.

Periodicals.

—The March number of the Century Illustrated Magazine is intensely interesting. Col. Rose's Tunnel at Libby Prison, though objectionable in some statements, is a thrilling account of an ingenious escape from the famous prison. Russian State Prisoners, by George Kennan, exhibits a refinement of cruelty (in prison life) in thought, confined to the dark ages, and yet, in such pathetic and beautiful style, we hall forget the fact in the beautiful narration. There is another number of War Papers furnished in Abraham Lincoln. The Call to Arms. Bismarck in his Harden, is the frontispiece to this number. Published by the Century Company, Union Square, New York.

—Scribner's Magazine, for March, opens with a frontispiece of Blucher unhorsed at Ligny, to illustrate its first article on Campaign of Waterloo, by John C. Ropes, the author of the Portraits of Napoleon in previous numbers. A Shelf of Old Books, by Mrs. James T. Fields, widow of the celebrated essayist and lecturer, and a charming account of Leigh-Hunt and Shelley, with portraits, fac simile autograph letters, parts and annotations of old books. Other articles are The Electric Motor and Its Applications; Mendelssohn's Letters to Moscheles, and Beggars, by R. L. Stevenson, etc. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

—The Forum, for March, contains the following articles: Our Political Prospects, by J. H. Seelye; The Recoil of Piracy, by Henry Holt; Is Our Social Life Threatened? by Bishop J. L. Spaulding; The Profitable Reading of Fiction, by Thomas Hardy; What Shall Public Schools Teach, by Rev. C. H. Parkhurst; Hindrances to Surplus Reduction, by William M. Springer; Scotland To-Day, by John Stewart Blackie; Who Is Benefited by Protection, by William R. Morrison; Woman's Mental Status, by Rev. D. P. Livermore; The Ratio of News, by H. R. Elliot; From Rome to Protestantism, by Prof. E. J. V. Huigiun. It must be a very stupid man who can go to sleep over this number of the prince of magazines. The Forum Publishing Company, 97 Fifth Avenue, New York.

—Wide Awake, for March, is a beautiful specimen of what the best talent can do to interest and profit the youths of our land. Published by D. Lothrop Company, Boston, Mass.

—Babyhood, a magazine for mothers, published by Babyhood Publishing Company, 5 Beekman Street, New York, is full of profitable reading.

—The Homiletic Magazine, for February, has just reached us. The bill of fare is very tempting. The skeletons are the skeletons of giants and pigmies, and, judging from the one read on the first petition in the Lord's Prayer, only the man who does not need it is capable of using it without defection. Published by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York.

Half-Rate Excursions Southeast.

Half-rate excursions to Birmingham, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Gadsden, Tuskaloosa, Macon, Savannah, and other principal points in the Southeast, will be run from New Orleans and Shreveport, via Queen and Crescent Route, on March 13 and 27, April 10 and 24. Tickets will be good for 30 days, with the privilege of stopping over on the outward journey. The Queen & Crescent is the quickest and most direct route between the Southeast and Southwest, and tickets should so read. J. H. Grant, Passenger Agent, 611 Elm street, Dallas, Texas, will gladly furnish all particulars.

The week of self-denial and prayer, set apart for the betterment of our missionary contributions and work, begins April 1, and closes April 8.

Hint to Spring Poets.

"I've got a poem," he said when he had secured the attention of the editor.

"My dear sir, that pigeon hole is filled with poems awaiting publication."

"But this describes the peculiar virtues of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I will pay $1 a line to have it printed," said the author.

"Ah, charming! I'm glad to see you turn your attention to verse. I wish all had your gift."

Publisher's Department.

No fraudulent advertisements will knowingly be allowed in the ADVOCATE. If one ever appears, it will be by accident.

In ordering from those whose advertisements appear in our columns please state that you have seen the same in the ADVOCATE.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

Judge: "Who are your accomplices?" Pickpocket: "Your honor would not have me divulge a professional secret?"

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

Why call a man a crank, when no one can turn him?

We would again call the attention of subscribers and agents that, in making remittances, to make them payable to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Please keep this in remembrance.

Business Notices.

ADVICE TO MOTHERS.

MRS. WINSLOW'S SOOTHING SYRUP should always be used for children teething. It soothes the child, softens the gums, allays all pain, cures wind colic, and is the best remedy for diarrhœa. 25c. a bottle.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

234 Hymns, a Complete Book in Itself.

NOW READY

and used by Mr. MOODY in his Meetings.

Six years having elapsed since Gospel Hymns No. 4 was issued, Christian workers throughout the land have felt the need of additional new songs, and to meet this demand "GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5" has been prepared. Each piece in the book has been carefully tested by the authors, and only those retained that are especially adapted for use in devotional services.

No. 5

Contains a greater number of new songs than any of the preceding volumes, together with the best of the old favorites and standard selections of unquestioned merit.

This collection contains 208 pages, of the same size and shape as other numbers of the series, but, while greatly increased in size, the prices are the same as for preceding single volumes, viz:

ARTIFICIAL EYES

Are Now so Perfectly Made That No One Can Distinguish Them from the Natural Eye.

The Artificial Eye is not only a beautifier, but it serves other excellent purposes.

It enables the eyelids to move as freely as ever.

It restores the functions of the tear passages.

It prevents the eyelashes from turning within, causing inflammation.

It prevents distortion of features, as happens always in case of a young person who has the misfortune to lose an eye—and sometimes in the case of older persons.

Mr. W. BOHNE, our Optician, has made a specialty of selecting and inserting them.

EDUCATIONAL.

Mansfield Female College.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. D. F. Liddle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 288 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

THE OLD WIFE.

By the bed the old man, waiting, sat in vigil, sad and lender,
Where his aged wife lay dying; and the twilight shadows lower Slowly from the wall and window chased the sunset's golden splendor Going down.

"Is it night?" she whispered, waking (for her spirit seemed to hover Lost between the next world's sunrise and the bed-time cares of this);
And the old man, weak and tearful, trembling as he bent above her,
Answered, "Yes."

"Are the children in?" she asked him. Could he tell her? All the treasures
Of their household lay in silence many years beneath the snow;
But her heart was with them living, back among her toils and pleasures
Long ago.

And again she called at dew-fall, in the sweet old summer weather,
"Where is little Charley, father? Frank and Robert, have they come?"
"They are safe," the old man faltered—"all the children are together, Safe at home."

Then he murmured gentle soothings, but his grief grew strong and stronger,
Till it choked and stifled him as he held and kissed her wrinkled hand.
For her soul, far out of hearing, could his fondest words no longer Understand.

Still the pale lips stammered questions, lullabies and broken verses,
Nursery prattle—all the language of a mother's loving heeds,
While the midnight round the mourner, left to sorrow's bitter mercies,
Wrapped its weeds.

There was stillness on the pillow—and the old man listened lonely—
Till they led him from the chamber with the burden on his breast.
For the wife of seventy years, his manhood's early love and only,
Lay at rest.

"Fare you well," he sobbed; "My Sarah; you will meet the babes before me;
'Tis a little while, for neither can the parting long abide,
And you'll come and call me soon, I know—and heaven will restore me
To your side."

* * * * * * * *

It was even so. The spring-time in the steps of winter treading,
Scarcely shed its orchard blossoms ere the old man closed his eyes:
And they buried him by Sarah—and they had their "diamond wedding"
In the skies.

MR. EDITOR: Some time since I read a letter from Cousin John. He seems bitter towards girls. I think he might find some other subject to write about besides the faults and follies of weak-minded girls. We country girls do not have time to roll our hair up in papers. I know how to make beds and milk, etc., and spent most of my time yesterday, with my brother in the cotton field, pulling cotton stalks until my hands were blistered. We are going to make a cotton crop, and then I will have money for missions. The rounds are so bad, that we have not seen our preacher this year. We recite our Sunday-school lessons at home to grandma. But I, myself, have a New Testament with the Psalms in it. I think "Hot Springs" must be in the Old Testament; I have never seen it. I have a cute little brother. His name is W. C. Currie, but he says his name is "Billy Wont," and we think that name suits him very well. He says his prayers every night, but he will go in all the mud he can find. I will ask the question: What did the angel say to Paul when he was shipwrecked? I never could have added up your figures as I am no further than multiplication.

Respectfully,

MARY T. CURRIE.

MR. EDITOR: As it has been some time since I wrote to your valuable paper, I thought I would write again. We had a fine camp meeting. There were about twenty-eight accessions, and I was one of them. We have no Sunday-school at present, but hope to have one as soon as spring opens. Bro. Cooper was our preacher last year, and we all liked him very much. We hope we will have one as good this year. Wilna M. Chichester, the words, "To the Unknown God," is found in Acts xvii, 23. I will ask a question: What two chapters in the New Testament has each three verses alike? Wishing the ADVOCATE much success, I remain,

Your little friend,

IDA S. BLOCKER.

BARR'S BRIDGE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I read in your last paper the letter to the little cousins about our Mexican Border Mission school, Laredo Seminary, and I want to help a little; so I send you one dollar for that good work. Schools like that are needed all through this part of Louisiana where the Catholic religion keeps the people in such darkness and wickedness. ABRAHAM FOSTER.

PLAISANCE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As you are so kind as to print the cousins' letters, I thought I would write again. I am still going to school, but it will be out in a few days. I have nine studies. I like to read the cousins' letters. I wish more of the cousins would write to the ADVOCATE. I go to Sunday-school when the weather permits it. Some of the cousins write about their preachers; but I can not say anything about preachers; because we have none. The elder sent our preacher to Puldan work, and left us without any preacher. I will ask some questions: What is the shortest verse in the Bible? Where in the Bible is the expression, "And the iron did swim"? How old was Ahaziah when he began to reign? Who had fifteen years added to his days? I will close for this time, for fear of the waste-basket.

Your friend,

RHODA C. BUSH.

THEADVILLE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I will write you a short letter, and hope you will be kind enough to publish it. Yesterday, February 22, was my birthday. My mamma made me a cake, and sister and I had a doll party. I am ten years old. We have a school here now. Miss Alice Martin is my teacher. We love her very much. She is so gentle and kind. We have two churches in this place—Methodist and Baptist. My step-father is a Methodist and he takes your valuable paper. My mamma is a Baptist, and I go to the Baptist Sabbath-school. I have four pretty hens, and I am going to sell eggs and send some money to the missionaries. I will ask the little cousins a question: What king had his eyes put out, and, being bound with brass fetters, was carried into Babylon?

Your little friend,

MARY F. DELEE.

PORT HUDSON, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As you were so kind as to publish my first letter, I will write again. I am ten years of age. My oldest brother is nine; and oldest sister is four years of age. Mamma belongs to the Methodist Church, and papa does not belong to any church. Brother and I attend Sunday school the first and third Sundays in every month. We still have the same teacher and superintendent. I do not go to day-school, but will go as soon as the school-house is finished. I hope this one letter will escape the waste-basket. I will answer one of the little cousin's questions. The paper has been misplaced and I disremember whose it was. Adam called his wife's name Eve, because she was the mother of all living. It is found in Genesis iii, 20. Now, I will ask a question: Who made iron swim? I remain,

Your friend,

MAY C. BALLARD.

AMITE CITY, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As this is composition, or letter, day, with our school, I will write to you. I love to read the little cousins' letters in the dear ADVOCATE, and hope you will number me with the little cousins. I am going to school. Miss Ida Jones is our teacher. We all love her very much. I study arithmetic, geography, spelling, reading, and write composition. I am eight years old. I tell you my age, for I do not want you to think me a big boy. I will answer Miss A. H. Middleton's question: The shortest chapter in the Bible is 117th Psalm. Now, I will ask a question: What verse in the Bible contains all the letters in the alphabet except the letter "j?". With many good wishes for the ADVOCATE, I remain,

Your little friend,

CHALMERS L. GILLIAM.

RODNEY, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy thirteen years old. I am a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. L. P. Meador is our pastor. We love him very much. He has rode this circuit three years. My father is a local preacher, and has been for a half-century. He has three regular appointments. Well, Mr. Editor, I am going to ask a question or a puzzle: How many blocks a quarter of an inch square can be placed in a hole an inch square? I hope I will see my puzzle in print. I remain, as ever,

Your little cousin,

THOMAS H. LOFLIN.

Household.

Facts Worth Remembering.

One thousand shingles laid four inches to the weather, will cover one hundred square feet of surface, and five pounds of shingle nails will fasten them.

One-fifth more siding and flooring is needed than the number of square feet of surface to be covered, because of the lap in the siding and matching of the floor.

One thousand laths will cover seventy yards of surface and eleven pounds of lath nails will nail them on.

Eight bushels of good lime, sixteen bushels of sand, and one bushel of hair, will make enough mortar to plaster one hundred square yards.

A cord of stones, three bushels of lime and a cubic yard of sand, will lay one hundred feet of wall.

Five courses of brick will lay one foot in height on a chimney. Nine bricks in a course will make a flue eight inches wide and sixteen inches long.

A box twenty-eight inches by sixteen inches square, and twenty-eight inches deep, will contain a barrel.

A box eight inches by eight inches square, and four and one-eighth inches deep, will contain one gallon.

A box four inches by four inches and four and one-eighth inches deep will contain a quart.

GOVERNING A BOY.—Get hold of the boy's heart. Yonder locomotive with the thundering train comes like a whirlwind down the track, and a regiment of armed men might seek to arrest it in vain. It would crush them and plunge unheeding on. But there is a little lever in its mechanism that at the pressure of a man's hand will slacken its speed, and in a moment or two bring it panting and still, like a whipped spaniel, at your feet. By the same little lever the vast steamship is guided hither and yon on the sea in spite of adverse winds or current.

That sensitive and soft spot by which a boy's life is controlled is his heart. With your grasp gentle and firm on that helm, you can pilot him whither you will. Never doubt that he has a heart. Bad and willful boys very often have the tenderest hearts hidden away somewhere beneath incrustations of sin, or behind barricades of pride. And it is your business to get at that heart, keep hold of it by sympathy, confiding in him, manifestly working only for his good, by little indirect kindnesses to his mother or sister, or even pet dog. See him at his home, or invite him into yours. Provide him some little pleasure, set him to do some little service of trust for you; love him; love him practically. Anyway, rule him through his heart.

Medical experts, by the use of the Microscope, have recently discovered and classified specific living germs in the blood of all persons suffering from Malaria, and say that to cure the patient these germs must be killed. Thirty years ago Dr. Shallenberger advanced this theory as the correct one, and prepared his "Antidote for Malaria" to destroy these poisonous germs. If you have Malaria in your system, a few doses of this medicine will destroy the poison immediately, and not injure an infant. Sold by Druggists.

Obituaries.

VICK.—The venerable patriarch, MR. JOHN WESLEY VICK, has, after a well-spent life of eighty-two years, just passed away. He died at a little past nine o'clock A. M., March 2. March 1 was his birthday on earth; to-day, in heaven. After some months of rapidly increasing infirmities, he was seized with a violent spell of fever, and in spite of the highest medical skill, and almost superhuman nursing by his devoted family, he finally rested from pain, from weariness and from life.

Mr. Vick was the second of four sons of the late Rev. Newel Vick, the founder of Vicksburg—all of whom have passed away. He was born in Jefferson county, on the old homestead plantation, and the family removed to this county in his early boyhood, settling on the well-known Open Woods tract, ten miles from the city. He was educated at Transylvania University, when that great Kentucky school was in the zenith of its fame. After returning home he chose a planter's life, and by great natural discernment and aptness for a farm life he acquired a very large and ample fortune; and, although the losses by the war greatly reduced the extent of his wealth, yet he prospered, as a planter, and acquired a handsome estate which he divided to his children some time back, so that he may be said, wisely, to have administered upon his own estate. He leaves four daughters and one son, not, properly, to mourn his departure, sad as is the necessity—but to rejoice in his honorable life; his tender, gentle, loving devotion to them: his spotless reputation and exalted character, and, more than all, his life of lofty Christian faith and unwavering steadfastness, not merely as a church member, but as a simple, sincere follower of the Lord Jesus: in a life, the every idm of which was usefulness. "The memory of the just smells sweet, and blossoms in the dust."

For about sixty years he had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and an officer holding various official relations to the church.

A man of wise counsel, unselfish care for the welfare of the church: characterized by great modesty, thoughtfulness, forbearance and respect for the claims and views of others.

Mr. Vick was married three times and bore to the grave each one of the wives in ripe and beautiful womanhood. Each one left, to grow to mature years, sons or daughters—all of whom have been most dutiful, devoted and useful children. One of the daughters is unmarried. Of the others, one is the wife of Dr. Samuel D. Robins, M. D.; and another the wife of O. Singleton Robins, Esq., of the Vicksburg bar; a third is the wife of William R. Perry, of Danville, Ky. Through great and trying vicissitudes of bereavement, disappointments and afflictions, alternated and mingled with much of brightness, buoyancy and cheerfulness—seeking the happiness of others, and ministering to the culture and improvement of all over whom his influence extended, and ever trusting in the divine Paternity—his race has been like "the path of the just, growing brighter and brighter," till now the perfect day has poured its sheen of everlasting glory on his redeemed and immortal spirit.

Patient, resigned, hopeful and joyous, he longed to be gone, and, as he neared the crossing-place, exclaimed, "If this be dying, what is death?" His severe sufferings were overmastered by his sublime faith; and his testimony to the glorious power of true reliance upon the Lord Jesus for salvation worth more than tongue can tell. C. K. MARSHALL.

COVINGTON—MRS. MARY COVINGTON, relict of the late Judge William Covington, was born in Wayne county, Miss., about the year 1810; died at her residence, near Quitman, Miss., March 2, 1888. Truly a mother in Israel has fallen. Her acts of kindness, her deeds of love, her motherly admonitions, her tender care for her children and grandchildren, will ever be remembered by her neighbors, and her influence for good will be felt upon her offspring for many generations. She joined the Methodist Church about the year 1836, under the preaching of that consecrated man of God, Rev. P. H. Napier, and lived as she died, trusting in the blood of Jesus for salvation, and that rest, which remaineth for those who put their trust in him, beyond the grave. May the Lord bless and comfort the bereaved ones! A FRIEND.

Egyptian Exploration.

That indefatigable explorer, Mr. Naville, of the Egypt Exploration Fund, has brought to light another marvelous discovery, the great Temple of Bubastis (the Pi-Beseth of Scripture), described in such glowing terms by Herodotus. Bubastis, or Bast, was one of the great divinities of Egypt, and is supposed to have corresponded with the Diana of the Greeks. She was the wife of Ptah, and the mother of Nefu Atum, or "the good Thum." At a late period in the Egyptian mythology she is known as "the cat-headed goddess," that animal being sacred to her. The festival of Bast was the most important in Egypt, and it is said to have been attended by 700,000 people. The ruins of the temple discovered by Mr. Naville and his co-workers are at Tel Basta, on the Bubastite branch of the Nile. Superb monolithic columns, massive architraves, building blocks sculptured with bas-relief groups, and portrait statues of colossal proportions, have already rewarded the labors expended in clearing one-third of the site of the temple—which, it is estimated, must have been 900 feet in length, with an average width of 150 feet. There have been three temples on this site; the first erected some 3,300 years before the Christian era (according to the Egyptologists); the second a thousand years later by Usertesen III.; and the last (merely an enlargement) another thousand years later by Rameses II. Among the statues are several representing Rameses II.; of two of these in black granite the size will be understood when it is mentioned that the eyes are seven inches in length. A statue in black granite of very much earlier workmanship—in accordance with a common practice among Oriental potentates—has been utilized as a memorial of the son of Rameses, who is described in an inscription as "General of Cavalry of his Father," the bas-reliefs, which are at present in Cyclopean heaps, are believed to have formed two large tableaux, one of which represented a great festival given by King Osorkon II. —Central Presbyterian.

Reciprocal Influence of Sense Organs.

Some interesting experiments on the reciprocal influence of organs of sense have been recently made by Herr Urbanschitsch, of Vienna. His general conclusion is, says Nature, that any sense excitation has for result an increase of the acuteness of other senses. Thus, sensations of hearing sharpen the visual perceptions. If colored plates are placed at such a distance that one can hardly distinguish the colors, and various sounds are then produced, the colors become generally more distinct the higher the sounds. Similarly, one can, while a sound affects the ear, read words which one could not read before. Again, the ticking of a watch is better heard when the eyes are open than when they are closed. Red and green increase auditive perceptions; but blue and yellow weaken them. Several musicians, however, were agreed that red, green, yellow and blue caused an intensification of sound about one-eighth; while violet had a weakening effect. Taste, smell and touch are under like laws. Light, and red and green colors, increase their delicacy; while darkness, blue and yellow diminish it. Under the influence of red and green, taste extends from the anterior border of the tongue to the whole surface. On the other hand, a strengthening of smell, taste, or touch exalts the other sensitive perceptions. Specially interesting is the reciprocal influence of touch and the sense of temperature. If one tickle the skin with a hair, and plunge the hand in hot water, the tickling sensation ceases. On the contrary, if the hand be placed in cold water, and a part of the body tickled, the temperature is felt more vividly. Herr Urbanschitsch finds in this reciprocal action an explanation of supposed double consecutive sensations on excitation of one sense.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion with Hypophosphites. It is as palatable as milk, and easily digested. The rapidity with which delicate people improve with its use is wonderful. Use it and try your weight. As a remedy for Consumption, Throat affections and Bronchitis, it is unequaled. Please read: "I used Scott's Emulsion in a child eight months old with good results. He gained four pounds in a very short time."—THO. PRIM, M. D., Alabama.

EFFECT OF MACHINERY.—In 1840, says the Age of Steel, when there was no wood-working machinery worth mentioning in use, one person out of every thousand was a cabinetmaker or upholsterer. In ten years following, wood-working machinery came largely into use. Now if machinery is a curse to the mechanic, it must be because it deprives him of work or reduces his wages. But neither of these conditions followed the introduction of machinery; on the contrary, in 1850, in a population of 23,191,000, there were 22,522 furniture-makers, or one to every 985 people, and annual earnings had advanced 20 per cent. In 1860, the proportion of furniture-makers to population was the same as in 1850, but during the ten years, wages had advanced so that whereas the mechanic (averaging all classes, including children) in 1850, earned $298 per year, in 1860, he was earning $326. Bringing the comparison down to the year 1882, the number of operatives had increased to one in 657 of population, and the average annual earning of each operative had increased to $434 70. Of food products, $1 will purchase as much now as it would in 1850.

That tired feeling, so subtle and yet so overpowering, is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which tones and strengthens the system and gives a good appetite. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla. "100 Doses One Dollar" is true only of this peculiar medicine.

Infidels should never talk of giving up Christianity till they can propose something superior to it. Lord Chesterfield's answer, therefore, to an infidel lady, was very just. When at Brussels, he was invited by Voltaire to sup with him and Madame C. The conversation happening to turn upon the affairs of England: "I think, my lord," said Madame C., "that the Parliament of England consists of five or six hundred of the best informed men in the kingdom?" "True, madame, they are generally supposed to be so." "What, then, can be the reason they tolerate so great an absurdity as the Christian religion?" "I suppose, madame," replied his lordship, "it is because they have not been able to substitute anything better in its stead; when they can, I do not doubt but in their wisdom they will readily adopt it."—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

of good health is found in the regular movement of the bowels and perfect action of the Liver. These organs were intended by nature to remove from the system all impurities. If you are constipated, you offer a "standing invitation" to a whole family of diseases and irregularities which will surely be "accepted," and you will have guests unwelcome and determined. All these unhappy conditions may be averted by the timely use of Dr Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets Powerful for the effectual regulation of the bowels and Liver, establishing a healthy action of the entire wonderful organism with which we are created.

At a recent gathering of Unitarians, one speaker recited an anecdote which admits of large and varied application. It was the story of a minister who, preaching on exchange, said some strong things about fast horses. He was told after the sermon that he had touched one of their best members at a tender point. "Well," said the preacher, "I can not change my sermon for him." In the evening the man was introduced to the minister, who said: "I understand that what I said this morning touched one of your weaknesses. I assure you that I was altogether unconscious of the weakness when I said it." "Oh, do not trouble yourself," said the man. "It is a very poor sermon that does not hit me somewhere."

Consumption Surely Cured.
To the Editor:
Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption, if they will send me their Express and P. O. address.
Respectfully,
T. A. SLOCUM, M. C.,

Those persons who imagine that the conditions of savage life are unfavorable to density of population, may be surprised to learn that the latest estimates give Africa a population of 16 and North America only 8.8 to the square mile. While our continent is known to have only about 80,000,000 people, the population of Africa, according to Prof. Levasseur, approximates 197,000,000.

THE THREE WISHES.—A gentleman, while sitting at the dinner-table with his family, had these words said to him by his son; a lad of eleven years: "Father, I have been thinking, if I could have one single wish of mine, what I would choose." "To give you a better chance," said the father, "supposed the allowance be increased to three wishes; what would they be? Be careful, Charley!" He made his choice thoughtfully: first, of a good character; second, of good health; and third, of a good education. His father suggested to him that fame, power, riches, and various other things are held in general esteem among men. "I have thought of all that," said he; "but, if I have a good character and good health and a good education, I shall be able to earn all the money that will be of any use to me, and everything will come along in its right place." A wise decision, indeed, for a lad of that age.—Christian Standard.

Use the surest remedy for catarrh—Dr. Sage's.

The late Henry Clay Deane was on one occasion attending court in a town up in Iowa. After supper at the hotel, it was proposed that the lawyers go around and hear an infidel who was lecturing in the town. Mr. Deane informed them that he was going down to the colored church to hear a former slave of his father preach. When laughed at for his choice, he said: "I would rather drink sweet milk out of an old bucket than to drink poison from a golden cup." Truth deserves a good dress, but it looks better in rags than error in silks. Sometimes the unlettered are right and the cultured wrong.

SALINE impurities and poisonous elements remain in the blood when the kidneys are inactive, "blood poisoning" causing dropsical and other dangerous maladies. If you have any reason to suspect any congestion in the action of your kidneys and bladder, take at once Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

It is a mistake to suppose that because ducks are fond of water they will do well if kept in damp quarters. They must have a dry place in which to sleep or they will soon show signs of disease, and in the end die. Ducks that are well kept through the winter, having a warm place at nights, will begin to lay a month earlier than those which sleep on the warm side of a barn-yard fence.

EXPOSURE to rough weather, getting wet, living in damp localities, are favorable to the contraction of diseases of the kidneys and bladder. As a preventive, and for the cure of all kidney and liver trouble, use that valuable remedy, Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

Mr Wesley was once asked this question: "Why are not more people converted?" And he gave this reply: "Because we do not pray enough." This was his deliberate answer to a question vital to the prosperity of the church, and to the salvation of the individual. Our Lord said: "Men ought always to pray, and not to faint."

A healthful impulse can be given to the secretions of the kidneys and the discharge from the bladder by stimulating those organs. Use Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

THE WORLD TO OTHER SENSES.—While considering it doubtful whether ants and bees can hear, Sir. John Lubbock believes it to be quite possible that they may hear sounds so shrill as to make no impression on the human ear. A like fact may be true of their perception of colors. To insects the world may be full of music we can not hear, colors we can not see, and sensations we can not feel.

Life will soon be done. Be not weary or disheartened. What are a few years of toil in prospect of the eternal rest?

Southern Methodist Review,

—EDITED BY—

Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.,

Is published bi-monthly, or six times a year. Price, $2 per annum. This is cheaper than any similar publication issued in America or Europe. The erudition of the Editor is so well known that no commendation of his skill and ability is necessary. The mechanical execution is not excelled by any publication of its kind. It is specially designed to meet the wants of the THINKING CLASS, both of the clergy and laymen.

No preacher who desires to be progressive can afford to be without the REVIEW.

WE SOLICIT YOUR SUBSCRIPTION.

OUR S. S. PERIODICALS,

—EDITED BY—

Rev. W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM, D. D.

Our Sunday-school periodicals should be used in all our schools.

They are authorized by the General Conference, prepared by our Editor; published by our House for the especial use and benefit of our people.

They are adapted to our wants, and should not be substituted by any other.

Preachers, Sunday-school officers, and all others interested in the furtherance of Southern Methodism, SEE TO IT that no undenominational or impure literature is used in our schools!

In matter and style it is equal to the best, and is cheaper than any other of equal grade.

All the moral and religious reasons that call for Methodist preachers, in Methodist pulpits, call for Methodist literature, in Methodist schools. Write for specimen copies.

The Sunday-School Magazine. A fifty-page monthly of acknowledged excellence, for the use of officers, teachers, and older scholars. With full expositions of the International Lesson Text; every number contains valuable hints as to the facts, principles, objects, methods and difficulties of Sunday-school work. No publication of equal merit is furnished at a less price. Think of it—600 pages yearly, postage paid, for the small sum of 50 cents.

The Senior Quarterly. A thirty-six page pamphlet devoted to lesson helps for scholars in advanced classes. Its value is enhanced by the introduction of appropriate forms for opening and closing exercises, hymns and tunes, maps, dictionary of proper names, etc.

Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum.....25c.
Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 15c.
Five or more, to one address, per quarter, each 4c.

The Intermediate Quarterly. Similar to the above, but with such necessary changes as adapt it to the wants of scholars in the main school. It is marvelously cheap.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 7½c.
Five or more, to one address, per quarter, each 2c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum.....15c.

The Illustrated Lesson Paper is a four-page weekly, designed for younger scholars who have outgrown the infant class; but who retain their fondness for pictures and simple stories. 208 pages a year.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 10c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper.....20c.

Our Little People is a beautiful lesson sheet, four pages handsomely illustrated and printed on tinted paper; for primary or infant scholars. Each number contains, besides the lesson, a page or more of "baby-land" talk.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 6c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper.....15c.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL VISITOR.

An excellent paper for the Sunday-school or the fireside, beautifully illustrated, published in three editions.

Weekly—Four papers each month.
Semi-monthly—Two papers each month.
Monthly—One paper each month.

Weekly—Ten or more to one address, each...50c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum.....75c.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Norfolk, Va., police have captured a gang of five counterfeiters. These men have been there about two weeks, and have flooded the city with silver counterfeit dollars.

John C. Vaurè has been appointed surveyor of the port of New Orleans.

Secretary Fairchild, in his report, submitted to Congress early in December, estimated that the treasury surplus would reach $140,000,000 by the end of the present fiscal year. It is now stated at the Treasury Department that owing to the heavy receipts during the past few months the estimates then submitted will prove to be too small and the surplus at the end of June, 1888, will probably reach the sum of $155,000,000.

In the Senate, on March 8, Mr. Cullom presented a memorial from the Board of Trade of Chicago, protesting against the passage of the resolution favoring the participation of this government in the Paris International Exhibition. The protest is made because of the decree of the French government against the importation of American salted hog products, which is pronounced unfriendly and unwarranted.

There are being prepared in the land office fifty-nine patents for land purchased in Louisiana at $1.25 per acre in the name of Jay Gould. The total amounts to 26,000 acres, and comprises some of the best timber lands in the State.

According to the report of the Agricultural Department the corn crop is estimated at 508,000,000 bushels, against 603,000,000 bushels last year. The stock of wheat of 1887 in the hands of the farmers is 132,000,000 bushels against 123,000,000 last year. The returns from the cotton States indicate an increase of 3 or 4 per cent. in the production of that staple.

The employees of the Denver, Utah and Pacific road quit work on March 10.

Shubuta, Miss., was ravaged by a fire, on March 11, which burned in the heart of the town. The loss amounts to $50,000.

The Randall Tariff Bill was presented to the House of Representatives on the twelfth instant. The rates on rice were reduced somewhat; but the present duties on sugar and molasses were retained.

The House Committee on Public Lands recommends the forfeiture of all lands granted to railroads which have not been completed within the time specified in the grant.

The heaviest snow-storm of the year was raging in New York, March 12.

Col. Stockdale, of Mississippi, before the River and Harbor Committee, urged an appropriation for removing the bar at the mouth of Pearl river.

FOREIGN.

Le Temps says France will join England in declining to authorize the Porte to assume the protection of the Turkish territory on the Red Sea.

The debate on the motion of Sir Walter Bartellot, conservative, for the appointment of a royal commission to ascertain and report upon military measures necessary for the protection of the empire, was resumed in the House of Commons, March 8, by Lord Randolph Churchill.

Charles Baker Pasha has been appointed commander-in-chief of the Egyptian gendarmerie.

William I., Emperor of Germany, died on March 9, surrounded by members of the imperial family and his attendants. Expressions of sympathy and regret from all nations of the world were called forth by the event. The Crown Prince has been proclaimed Emperor as Frederick III.

The imperial commissioner who was especially appointed to investigate the loss of life in the Yellow river inundations, sends an official report to the Emperor of China, stating that the total number of persons drowned is over 100,000, and the destitute is 1,800,000, apart from those driven into other districts.

In the House of Commons, March 8, a motion by Mr. Labouchere against a hereditary House of Lords was negatived. The motion was supported by Sir Wm. Vernon Harcourt, Mr. Morley, Mr. Childers, Sir George Trevelyan and the Gladstonians generally, as well as the Parnellites.

The Hong Kong Mail, copies of which were received at San Francisco by last steamer, gives a description of the earthquake in the province of Yunnan, December 15, indicative of frightful mortality. At Chon-Chan the disturbances were extremely violent. Scarcely a house has escaped damage, and over 5,000 persons are reported to have been killed by falling buildings. At Lo Chau large tracts of land were swallowed up, and more than 10,000 persons are said to have perished.

The United States warship Enterprise, mounting six guns, arrived at Tangier, Morocco, March 10. The captain demanded the immediate release of the Moor who is under American protection and who is imprisoned at Rabat. He also demanded satisfaction from the Moorish government for the man's illegal arrest.

The river Arr has overflowed its banks at Berne, Switzerland, and the lower quarters of the town are submerged.

The St. Petersburg newspapers agree in expressing a wish that the Emperor Frederick continue the friendly policy of the deceased monarch toward Russia.

The new Bulgarian coinage is to be struck off in England. The order is for $600,000 worth of small coins.

In an interview, in London, Mr. Chamberlain, referring to the fisheries, said the Republican Senate might not be willing to allow the Democratic government to get the credit of framing a successful treaty, but did not believe the Senate would take the immense responsibility of rejecting the treaty.

THE CRUCIAL TEST.

The severe analytical tests to which the various baking powders have from time to time been placed have demonstrated clearly to the public the relative merits of the different brands from a scientific point of view. The Government chemists, for instance, have found in their official tests that the Royal Baking Powder gave off the largest amount of leavening gas, and therefore was the most economical for general use. For this reason it was placed at the head of the list and recommended for Government use. In addition to this, the chemists found the Royal to be absolutely pure, and the only baking powder that did not contain either lime, alum, or bone or rock phosphate.

But the crucial test of the kitchen is, after all, the most satisfactory to the housekeeper. A baking powder that never fails to make light, sweet, wholesome, and palatable bread, biscuit, cake, etc., upon all occasions, is the one that will be placed at the head of the list by the practical housewife, and received into her kitchen for continuous use. This test the Royal Baking Powder has stood for over twenty years without a single failure, and hence its reputation as the best baking powder made has spread from house to house, until its use has become as universal as its merits are unrivaled.

ose present, and especially ose who have any desire to hristians, how I came to be hristian. It was not until t the middle of last year that I began to feel an interest in Christianity. It was then I, for the first time, felt the need of religion. Until then I had always thought religion might be for ignorant people, but would be of no use to those who have a general knowledge of things. Every word and every verse in the Bible had seemed to me to be all foolishness. But I wondered why a book full of foolishness should be honored above all books by so many learned men in all countries. This was the dawn of my belief in Jesus Christ. I began to realize the existence of one true God. I felt that we were great sinners in the sight of God, and that we needed a Savior who could deliver us from this miserable condition. And such a Savior I have found in Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

"As soon as we have found him, one thing is necessary above all others, and that is faith, entire trust in him. If we wish to be saved from sin, we must believe in Christ. We must not wait, we must not hesitate. We must not say, 'We will wait until to-morrow.' We must put our faith in our Lord to-day, now, at once. If you want to be saved, put your entire trust in Jesus Christ now, with full determination, and he will save you."

These are burning words spoken from the heart by one who, only a short time since, was in doubt, in darkness, and in the shadow of death. He is now letting his light shine, and he is bringing others to Christ. His wife is now an earnest seeker after truth, and on Monday last he brought two of his friends and his wife to the meeting. Pray for us, dear brethren and sisters in Christ, and may the Lord bless you in your efforts to send the gospel to the heathen. Pray for us away off in these dark places, while we are trying to lead these people to Christ for salvation. Send us help; send at once.

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

KOBE, JAPAN, Jan. 25, 1888.

From China.

Miss Annie Lindell:

DEAR FRIEND: Yours, of November 28, was received two weeks ago, and, being the first I had received from you since I left home, you can imagine how eager I was to read it. I am pleased with the encouraging report you gave of the progress of the work at home. I am glad that Mississippi is aroused on the subject of missions, and trust that the cause may be presented to the people in such a light that they can not fail to become interested, and that the work begun in the churches at home may go forward and ever increase from day to day.

I thank my heavenly Father that he has let me come to China, and that now I can see something of the true condition of the people, such as one can never fully understand from the pen of others. Several years have elapsed since I first became interested in China, and was filled with the uncontrollable desire to help them come from spiritual darkness into the "glorious light of the liberty of Christ." During this time I have read all that I could of the Chinese, their habits and customs, and have tried to become more fully acquainted with the spiritual condition of this peculiar people; yet I have been convinced, since my arrival here, that all the knowledge I had previously gained was of an exceedingly vague and uncertain character. China, truly, must be seen to be fully appreciated. The ignorance, superstition and moral degradation of the masses is, indeed, deplorable. Vice, in all its forms, is prevalent among them to an alarming extent. Opium smoking, with all its attendant evils, is practiced to a great extent throughout Shanghai. There is no language at my command adequate to express the horrible deeds to which this dreadful practice leads. It seems that all virtuous instinct and natural affections become entirely deadened by the use of this narcotic poison.

We have in Clopton Boarding School a little girl whose father is an opium smoker, and he was so entirely devoid of all fatherly love that he was preparing to sell his little daughter into the hands of sinful men, when the poor mother, learning of his wicked purpose, in desperation brought her to our school, and besought Miss Haygood to take her as a pupil, and under no consideration to let her be taken away. The unhappy mother was almost frantic with terror lest the wicked plan of the father should be consummated. Miss Haygood, at first, hesitated about taking her, not knowing but the father would be able to demand her as his child. She soon learned, however, that he, being an opium smoker, could have no authority in such a case; so she gladly took the little one under the protection of the school; so little Anyung, like all the girls in Clopton school, is to be supported and educated by the mission until her twentieth year, when she will then be at liberty to go forth as a Christian worker among her own people. She is a bright, attractive little creature, full of life and animation, and, from a Chinese standpoint, very beautiful. I have found her wonderfully interesting, all the more so because of the touching page in her young life's history; and I think we have reason to rejoice over her as one, at least, who has been rescued from a life of sin by "woman's work for woman."

Foot binding is another evil of which I have realized only a slight conception. I had no idea that it was practiced to such an extent among the poorer classes; yet, even the beggars one meets on the streets have their feet so reduced in size, and mal-formed by the tortuous bandages, that it is pitiable to see them attempting to walk. Many of the mission schools will not admit girls who refuse to unbind their feet, and it is to be hoped that this barbarous custom, like all other deplorable practices in China, will gradually subside before the incoming tide of Christianity.

When one sees the extent of superstition, vice, crime and ignorance prevalent here, it requires no small degree of faith to see how they can ever be enlightened; yet, blessed be our Savior's name! we need not view the state of things from a human standpoint, merely, but we know that he is able to save unto the utmost all who come unto him. Knowing this, have we not sufficient reason to go forth rejoicing, sowing precious seed? Surely he, who created heaven and earth for his own glory, is not willing that the work of his servants should be of no avail, but the promise is ours, that, "In due season ye shall reap, if ye faint not." Let us, then, as believing children, not doubting his Holy Word, lay hold of the promises, and claim China for Christ. Hath he not said, "Unto me every knee shall bow and every tongue confess?" and, also: "Ask of me, and I will give you the heathen for an inheritance, and the utmost parts of the earth for an habitation." Thank God for the promise that the heathen are to be the inheritance of the Son, and the uttermost parts of the earth shall be filled with his glory and his praise!

In Japan I visited some of the famous temples of Tokio, and there saw, for the first time in my life, heathen worshipers at their shrines. Everything was new and strange to me then, and my mind easily impressed. I felt for them a pity, such a compassion as I had never felt before. Idol worship was manifested to me as a reality, and not a mere book story, the offspring of imagination. I was brought face to face with the heathenism of which we read and speculate about in the home-land; and, oh! it is so pitiable to see those ignorant people bowing before the images of man's construction, and receiving therefrom none of the comfort and joy which the religion of the Lord Jesus imparts.

In China I have seen very little of idol worship, from the fact that I have visited few of the temples; but I hear a great deal about it. Soon after my arrival at Shanghai, I visited some of the temples in the native city; but I was so appalled by the hideous objects of worship that I have not cared to repeat the visit. I would not hesitate to go if, thereby, I could do any good; but it is only shocking, to all sense of propriety, to witness those dreadful things. The Chinese worship what they fear and dread, and not what they can love and reverence.

One thing which has surprised me exceedingly is the apparent perfect satisfaction of themselves and their surroundings. As a class, they regard everything that does not belong to China, or has had its origin here, of an inferior kind. The "Middle Kingdom" is, in their estimation, the sum total of all that is worthy of regard. This perfect confidence in themselves, and utter contempt for everything of a foreign nature, makes them much harder to reach. Those who are associated with foreigners, and learn something of the world outside, have changed, to a certain extent, their views of the world and its inhabitants, becoming somewhat extended; yet, to the average Chinaman, his own country is decidedly superior to all the world outside. They are, indeed, a peculiar people; yet, with all of their strange characteristics, I have found them wonderfully interesting, and I rejoice that God has, in his providence, brought me to them. I shall count it one of the sweetest of privileges to be allowed to teach Jesus and his blessed Word to this darkened people, even though their ears have waxed dull of hearing, and their eyes become blind by idolatry and superstition.

The religion of the Lord Jesus seems more precious, beautiful and desirable when contrasted with the degrading forms of worship existing here.

I am glad to be Christ's messenger in this heathen land, and, during my sojourn here, it will be comforting to know that so many friends in the home-land are supporting me by their love, prayers and sympathy, which have been so freely given from the moment it was first made known that I wanted to come to China, until the present. The missionary student who was supported so generously during two years at the E. M. F. College, hopes, through the grace of God, to prove worthy of the confidence of her many unknown friends, as well as those who know her better, and her daily prayer is, that the labor and means which have been bestowed on her shall have not been expended in vain. My heart is full of gratitude to the many friends who helped to make it possible for me to come to China, and him who has governed and controlled it all.

I am the only representative of the Mississippi Conference throughout the whole of China, and, though a weak and unworthy creature, I rejoice that our Conference has not been left entirely without a name and place in the China mission.

I feel that the responsibility which rests upon me is very great; yet, notwithstanding this, I am very happy in contemplation of the work.

I trust that the prayers of you all in the dear home-land will strengthen and sustain me in all my work for Jesus among this heathen people.

I shall always be glad to hear from the friends at home, and feel disappointed that I have not yet received the ADVOCATE.

Yours in love and work,

L. BETTIE HUGHES.

SHANGHAI, CHINA, Feb. 2, 1888.

Upon This Rock Will I Build My Church.

The Nashville Christian Advocate, of January 28, in a criticism upon Matthew xvi, 18, 19, makes the word "rock" in the above text refer to Peter. The same interpretation is given also in the Sunday-School Magazine, for January. The interpretation of our Jerusalem doctors is a little surprising and unsatisfactory. It is surprising in that, with so few words, and with such facility, it sets aside the opinions of many eminent authorities, and settles a question "bristling with controversy" "from the earliest ages of the church." It is unsatisfactory because not clearly sustained by a critical examination of the text, in itself, and in connection with other Scripture passages where the word "rock" occurs.

In a late number of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, Rev. J. A. Parker takes issue with the above criticism. Before seeing Bro. Parker's article, I had also made some notes by way of criticism, and in accord with his position, holding that the word "rock," as above, refers not to Peter, but to our Lord himself, as the foundation of the church. In support of this position I submit a few suggestions.

1. Many eminent authorities hold that "rock" here means our Lord himself, and not Peter. Edgar says, "This explanation also has been patronized by theologians, saints, Popes and councils." Dr. Summers, in his commentary on Matthew, while agreeing with the interpretation in the Nashville Advocate, yet says: "Many of the fathers, together with leading divines of the Roman communion before the Reformation, and many eminent Protestants, say: 'The rock, if taken doctrinally, was Peter's confession; if personally, it was none other than Christ himself.'" Dr. Clark favors this interpretation. He says, "Upon this very rock, myself, thus confessed." And says, moreover: "That Peter is not designed in our Lord's words must be evident to all who are not blinded by prejudice." Dr. Fitzgerald thinks there is no difficulty in the way of his interpretation, making the rock mean Peter, "provided it be looked at through unprejudiced and honest eyes." How the Doctors differ!

2. The interpretation given in the Nashville Advocate is not sustained by a critical examination of the Greek text. Petros, translated Peter, differs from petra, translated rock, in three particulars. (1) The two words differ in form. They are not identical. (2) They differ in meaning. True, they are of kindred signification, but there is a marked difference. Grove's Greek lexicon gives this definition: Petros, a stone, piece of stone, fragment of rock; petra, a rock, large stone, a mass of stone, ridge, cliff. Bro. Parker cites Liddell and Scott as authority for similar definition. Now, does not this difference of meaning suggest the true interpretation? Christ, the rock, the chief corner-stone, the supreme foundation; Peter, a fragment of rock, constituting, with the other apostles, the foundation in a subordinate sense. (3) The two words differ in gender, petros being masculine, petra feminine. Now, if in the above text, rock means Peter, why was not the identical word, in its dative, petro, repeated in the second place? Why is petra used—a word differing in form, meaning and gender from the word by which our Lord has just designated Peter? Of the change in gender, Dr. Fitzgerald says this is easily explained. "It is made for the purpose of showing that the church is built not upon the weaknesses of Peter's character, but upon the rock-element in him, which is thus singled out, and which furnishes so solid a foundation!" The Doctor will pardon us if we say this explanation, though ingenious, seems more fanciful than conclusive.

3. Again, the word petra occurs elsewhere in the New Testament, always referring, so far as I have examined, to Christ or to his doctrines. In Matthew vii, 24, 25, where our Lord speaks of the wise man which built his house upon a rock, the word petram, accusative inflection from petra, is twice used, and twice again, in the parallel passage in St. Luke. This same inflection, petram, occurs again in Romans ix, 33, in the phrase, "rock of offense," meaning Christ. In 1 Cor. x, 4, we read: "They all drank of that spiritual rock that followed them: and that rock was Christ." Here the Greek word for rock is petra, in both instances. If the word petra, in the passages cited, refers directly to Christ or to his doctrines, may we not conclude also that the same word in the much controverted passage refers not to Peter, but to our Lord himself, as the Rock upon which he would build his church?

T. C. WIER.

W. H. Foster.

The Board of Trustees of Felicity Street Church learn with profound sorrow of the sudden death of our dear brother, William H. Foster, president, and one of its oldest members. We desire to put on record the testimony of their high respect for his character, and their admiration for his career of Christian usefulness, of more than a half-century, in the Master's vineyard, in which he reached the highest places of trust by the exercise of those sterling qualities of Christian worth and zealous devotion, coupled with industry and ability; their recognition of his profound spiritual nature, his conscientious discharge of duty, the purity and unselfishness of his life, his kind and sympathetic heart, his many benefactions, which his modesty ever sought to conceal from notice.

As the originator and president of the Seashore Camp Ground, his name and labors will ever be revered. His presidency of the New Orleans District Sabbath-school Union will cause his memory to be ever dear to the people of this city. His labors in the Felicity Street Church, both as superintendent of the Sabbath-school and as president of the Board of Trustees, will ever find a place in the hearts of the members of her congregation.

A good man has gone to his reward. As a husband, father, and friend, he was affectionate and kind. His ruling principles was his allegiance to God, and that governed his life. His every act was in accordance therewith, ready to assist in every good work, and these have made his life and career one of the most honorable in the history of the Methodist Church of New Orleans, and a shining example to those who remain behind.

It is never safe to make an exception a rule of conduct. One of the best illustrations of this fact was given by the Rev. Dr. Lorimer, during the Minneapolis meetings, in a little dialogue, which, if not veritable, is certainly suggestive. Talking with a man who had professed to be converted, a minister said:

"Have you joined the church?"

"No; the dying thief did not join the church, and he went to heaven."

"Have you talked to your neighbors?"

"No; the dying thief did not talk to his neighbors, and he went to heaven."

"Have you given anything to missions?"

"No; the dying thief never gave anything, and he went to heaven."

"Well, my friend, it seems to me the difference is that he was a dying thief, and you are a living thief."

THE NEW PASTOR.

BY R. P. SHUGARD.

He came at Christmas-tide—an earnest man,
Devout in seeming, apt, of cheerful mien,
Pressing (but he'd rather bless) than ban—
A tenderness in every action seen.

An ardent welcome did his coming greet,
And smiles and lavish promises were poured,
Giving encouraging assurance meet,
To cheer the stranger-servant of the Lord.

The church in amplitude of beauty shone,
A marvel grand of arch festival art:
The sculptured altar like a regal throne,
The pews a joy to the aesthetic heart.

No footfall sounded from the tufted floor,
Where bright reflections from the windows fell;
The mighty organ rose its eyes before,
Whose tones blent with the hymn's exalted swell.

And fashion gathered in a proud array
Of multi-hued adornment in its guise;
The perfumed air o'er all in languor lay,
Like the remainder of some sac rifice.

He preached as none had preached to them before,
And a hushed silence waited all he said;
But Stranger his theme—its burden was the poor,
The sad-conditioned and the scanty-fed.

He urged their cause in tones of thrilling power—
As the dear duties o'er the subject taught,
And showed it a chief duty of the hour—
To help the poor with kindliness of thought.

The church was out. "Where are your poor?" he said.
"We have no poor," was said in proud reply.
Then blazed the preacher—all precaution fled—
With holy anger flashing from his eye:

"No poor! God help us, what a case is this!
An evil that no church can e'er endure;
He provideth never can abide to bless
Where saints know not the blessing of the poor.

"And, by the solemn office to me given,
I'll seek the poor myself, by God's behest,
And save the risk of your not winning heaven,
By finding means your worthiness to test!"

Rebuked, but thoughtful, then they turned away,
Weighing the meaning of the words he spoke,
And many a heart was touched that Sabbath day,
Whose latent feelings into action broke.

Then search the good man for the poor and lorn,
And gave the a comfort in their bitter grief,
When a new glory to that house was born,
With Christ-like charity installed as chief.

An Eclipsed Life.

MR. EDITOR: It was my misfortune in early life to live a bachelor for several years in the old homestead of our family. Here Methodist preachers had always been welcome guests when they chose to come, and as long as they would stay. Having been bred up in this way, I did not depart from it as I grew older.

A well-known Methodist preacher came into our neighborhood seeking a location to engage in the practice of medicine. My house became his home, and we were intimate. His history is singular; I may say, remarkable. I write of him briefly, and the ADVOCATE may publish:

Of Irish ancestors, he was born on the vessel which transported emigrants to the United States. When quite a young man, he commenced life by teaching; at the same time reading medicine. His education was concluded a year before graduation. He attended a Methodist camp meeting, with the result so frequent and often told. Brought under religious conviction, he was converted, and at once commenced praying in public, and leading in revival exercises; and then licensed to preach. The attendance was great at his appointments—supposed to be the revival influence continued; but soon it was acknowledged that the young preacher was the attraction. Properly recommended to the Virginia Conference, he was admitted a member, and became an itinerant preacher—popular and successful.

The Virginia Conference had great men among its members then—John Early (afterwards Bishop), and William A. Smith, with others their equals. They concluded wisely, no doubt, that there was promise of greatness in this young preacher; but he should be kept humble, lest he might think "more highly of himself than he ought." These guards and guides to the Conference decided to send this new itinerant as a missionary to the slaves on James river tobacco plantations. He filled the appointment faithfully, having white people as well as slaves to hear him. He attended Conference again with presents of fine clothes, a watch, horse and buggy. Appointed again to a mission on plantations, he did not complain. The third year he failed to accept his appointment, as he was invited to preach in churches in Richmond and Washington City, and around those cities. Then elected as chaplain to Congress, his name was passed at Conference with the entry, "Chaplain to Congress." This would seem to be an honor to him and to Methodism, but wise and good men shook their heads at this rapid increase of fame to this preacher. Add to this, he was elected as delegate from the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the United States to the General Conference of Wesleyan Methodist Church of Great Britain. Thus his name will appear upon the Minutes of the Virginia Conference and of the General Conferences of the Methodists in the United States and in England. He was popular in England, and more so in Ireland, when it was known that he was almost a native of that island.

But this hot-bed (it may be called) state in the ministry, and before the world came to an end! He returned to the United States uncertain what course to pursue. Too proud to return to his Conference in Virginia and risk what he supposed would be thought and feared might be charged, he decided to complete his medical studies. Having obtained the proper diplomas, he came to Vicksburg, Miss., and made his abode and office near that city at the house of this writer as herein written. He was of fine person, pleasant address and well informed; particularly was he a politician, equal to the most eminent and influential among the Democratic party. Even those opposed spoke well of him, because he was instructive in the history of parties and measures. In conversation and discussion he used arguments without anger; so his opponents spoke of him.

He met a most elegant widowed lady, to whom he was married. At her home, with great wealth, his life was exempt from all care; given to reading and entertaining visitors. A Methodist presiding elder stated that this was his preferred place of visiting when his quarterly meetings were held near to this residence. He was a theologian according to the books, and was a decided Methodist, knowing its history better than most persons who could engage in conversation with him. He was fond of such conversation.

The congressional district in which he lived sought a strong man to represent them in Congress. The selection was this retired physician and quondam preacher. He was elected and entered the National Capitol as a member of that body in which he had been chaplain years before. A speech made by him was published which would have been considered a credit to the average member of Congress; but his constituents expected greater things of him. It was the bold language, such as precipitated the war of secession.

A sedentary life induced bad health, for which his physician prescribed alcohol in some of its disguises. The remedy became a disease—real and fatal. Strong drink became a necessity, and this really great man went down as in a cloud. I saw him on his way from the Hot Springs to his home, where he soon died. He spoke kindly, calling me by my given name. I called his attention to the way of faith which he knew so well, and which could now become to him the power of God unto salvation. He was too feeble to talk, and suffered too much to think, I fear. He did not not answer to meet my wishes.

Newspapers contemporaneous with his career will give his name and what he did, in Church and State. The Minutes of the Virginia Conference and of the General Conferences of Methodist Episcopal Church of United States and England will show his relation to the church, and the journals of Congress will show his name as chaplain and as a representative from Mississippi.

When his name is known, let it not be published; rather "stat nominis in umbra."

HAZLEHURST, Mississippi.

Plaquemine, La.

There is nothing more pleasant in the life of a Methodist preacher than to turn from the well-beaten path of his own pastorate and go to labor with a whole-souled brother in a protracted meeting; at least, nothing the writer likes better. After a repeated urgent call from Bro. William Wimberly, we boarded the Texas and Pacific railroad, on Monday, February 27, to assist him in conducting a meeting at Plaquemine, a thriving town of Iberville parish. For years Methodism has been a weak factor in the religious element of this place. Bro. Hocutt finally succeeded in building a nice church there; and then the way was marked out, along which an aggressive move was to be made by our grand old church that is destined to largely possess this country before many decades of years, if her preachers are enterprising, energetic, aggressive and spiritual. It was a victory in Plaquemine for our church when an edifice was built, because a firm foundation was then secured upon which Zion's heralds could stand, and cry: "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world." The Conference acted wisely in sending, at the close of Bro. Hocutt's four years' pastorate, a live and able preacher in the person of William Wimberly. He is ever on the alert, and ready, with the harmlessness of a dove and wisdom of a serpent, to drive down a stake for the church he loves so devotedly.—The people respect his opinions, love him as a man and preacher, and move when he calls them to a purer and a higher life. When one goes to preach for him (unlike some pastors), he gives his assistant full sway; and acts as general in the meeting.

After we had preached for several days, it was decided, in order to reach the masses, to go and preach upon the court-house steps, provided the authorities would permit us and protect us in the undertaking. Gladly did the high-minded and noble sheriff give us permission and protection, and, after the first sermon, every man, woman and child endorsed it as gospel truth by holding up their hands. We had many politicians to preach to, and exhorted them to "mix religion with their politics, but not politics with religion." The congregations were large, and many came forward for prayer. Not only were such requests made, but many resolved to lead a purer and more consecrated life. There were five excellent additions to the church, besides, many indifferent members determining to be more useful in God's service. At the close of the meeting people of different denominations came forward and gave us their hands in covenant to live faithful and reach heaven at last. Besides this—after a clear presentation of our City Mission work in New Orleans, and the intention of Moreau Street Church to build a chapel to accommodate a large Sunday-school—the people responded with over $100 in cash and $69 in material towards the enterprise.

We are thankful to the pastor and people for their generous assistance; and although we left almost physically exhausted, we felt a thousand times repaid for what little we did.

Plaquemine and Donaldsonville is now one of the most interesting charges in the Conference, and if the work continues to improve in the future as it has during the past few years, it will be one of the strongholds of Methodism. God bless Bro. Wimberly and people, and make this year the most successful one of his ministry for the salvation of souls!

Sunday-School Work in the North Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: If you will allow me some space in our Conference organ, I will note a few reflections under the above heading. The growth of the Sunday-school work in the North Mississippi Conference, since its organization in 1870, has been most gratifying and encouraging. We began with 200 schools, and 9,184 officers, teachers and scholars. Now we have 385 schools and 19,295 officers, teachers and pupils—a gain of 185 schools and 10,111 members. The increase last year was 46 schools, 2,511 officers, teachers and scholars.

But while we ponder these results with pleasure and gratitude, let us look at some facts and figures that will impress us that much remains to be done for the fulfillment of our mission in this department of church work. The last statistics show that only 14 charges report as many members in Sunday-school as in the church, while 5 charges and 83 churches are without Sunday-school organizations, and probably 20,000, or nearly two-thirds of our church members, are not at all engaged in this service. Now, a consummation greatly desired is, to report, ere long, at least, a Sunday-school for every church, and as many Sunday-school scholars and workers as we have church members in our Conference. And why not? We hold that the Sunday-school is "the church at work;" not the children and a few elderly persons, but the whole membership of the church actively engaged together in the study of God's Word. Read and ponder well Deuteronomy xxxi, 12, where the Sunday-school service is certainly contemplated.

Brethren of the ministry and laity, let us survey the field, contemplate the possibilities, study our obligations and adjust ourselves, more earnestly than ever, to this important department of our church work. Let each and everyone do what he can, in his position, to enlarge the sphere and efficiency of the Sunday-school work in the North Mississippi Conference during this year. Begin now to study, pray and labor, and so continue, with all diligence, and, under the Divine guidance and blessing, great good will be accomplished. So mote it be!

Your fellow-servant,

G. W. BACHMAN.

MARCH 7, 1888.

Memorial.

The ladies of the auxiliary Woman's Missionary Society, of Felicity Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at their annual meeting, March 13, proposed to have some memento of the late president, Mrs. Kirk, and of Mrs. W. H. Foster, the corresponding and recording secretary and treasurer. It was decided to appoint a committee to prepare resolutions, which were adopted as follows:

Resolved, That this society, in the death of these two eminently favored servants of the Divine Master, has sustained an irreparable loss.

Resolved, That since God, in his infinite wisdom and mercy, has seen fit to remove them, that we entreat of his benign favor that a portion of their loving spirit may descend on us; that we may be more useful in the cause that was so dear to their hearts; and that, animated by the remembrance of their constant efforts to send laborers to the whitened fields of neglected heathendom, we may be enabled to continue the work, and that the "golden sheaves" of an abundant harvest may be the ultimate reward.

Resolved, That this society, as a body, tender heartfelt sympathy to the families of these dear departed sisters, with the assurance that our prayers are offered for these precious sons and daughters, that they, too, may follow in the clearly defined path so lately trodden by those who are now, and ever will be so dearly loved.

Resolved, That the editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE be requested to publish these resolutions, and that copies be sent to the members of the afflicted families of our beloved sisters, as tokens of our sincere regard.

MRS. A. ZABLE,
MRS. J. BLANKS,

From the Work.

COVINGTON CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: As the brethren from different portions of the work are giving, through the columns of the ADVOCATE, the good things connected with their respective charges, I thought it might be well to let the outside world know what we are doing on the Covington circuit, Sea-shore district, Mississippi Conference.

There was, last year, a net gain of fifty members to the Covington circuit. This, in comparison with some other circuits, would look small to those whose lot has been cast among people whose hearts are aglow with the love of God; but to us, who know the true condition of things here, it is wonderful, and we can exclaim, "What hath God wrought!"

I am now entering upon my second year on this work with bright prospects before me, determined, by the grace of God, to do more the coming year for the advancement of his glorious cause, in these "low grounds of sorrow," than I did the past. I have good congregations at nearly all my appointments, and very attentive to the preaching of the Word. The people are already beginning to long for the time to come for holding another camp meeting.

One new church in course of construction, several infants baptized, with one adult, and an increasing desire on the part of many to learn more of the way of salvation, is all that I have to report since Conference. Pray for us, brother.

Yours in the gospel,

G. R. ELLIS.

GRENADA, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We have been blessed with a gracious revival in Grenada. The meeting lasted nineteen days. The church was greatly revived, and many backsliders were reclaimed. There were quite a number of conversions. Up to this time fifteen have united with the church, and more to join. This makes eighteen that we have received since Conference, and all but six on profession of faith. We are very much indebted to Bros. Kilgore, Beville, Evans, Thames, Morehead and Newell for the assistance they gave us during the meeting. Bro. Kilgore did most of the preaching, and Bro. Beville led the singing.

This charge is in a healthy, growing condition. We have every reason for encouragement, and, by the help of God, we expect to press forward in the work.

J. E. THOMAS.

"I Want My Mother!"

An old, old woman lay slowly dying. Her life had been one of care and toil, of pain and sorrow. She had outlived all of the companions of her youth. Those of her middle life had long been in their graves. In her old age, with her two daughters—themselves decrepit with the burden of seventy-five and eighty years—she had been obliged to find a refuge and shelter within almshouse walls.

But she was too old to care for that. Poverty and public charity had lost all terror for her at last. She was oblivious to her surroundings. Her mind had let go its hold upon the present, and her thoughts busied themselves with the scenes and days of childhood, and in plaintive tones she exclaimed:

"I want my mother! I want my mother!"

The daughters, hearing her call, went to the bedside, asking, "What do you want, mother?"

She looked at them with eyes in which was no gleam of recognition. All memory of husband and children had long faded away.

"Who are these old women here?" she asked. "I don't want any of them. Go away! Mother! Mother! Why don't you come? I want my mother!"

The poor old daughters, themselves trembling on the verge of the grave, turned away, weeping. Their mother's love had stood the test till now, but in life's last hours she was again a little child, and as she felt the chill of death stealing over her, she longed for her mother's sheltering arms.

"Mother, I am so tired and sleepy! I want to be undressed and go to bed. Now hear me say my prayers."

The shrivelled hands clasped themselves together—as they had wont to do, oh, so many years ago!—and the trembling voice faltered out:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep:
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take:
And this I ask for Jesus' sake."

"Good-night!" she added, softly, after a moment's pause. She closed her eyes, but opened them again directly, with an eager, happy look. Her daughters saw her face grow young and radiant.

"O mother! mother! I am so glad you've come!"

She stretched out her arms. There was one brief minute, and then the weary pilgrim, whose feet had trod the rough paths of earth for nearly a hundred years, was at rest—

"Where the child shall find its mother,
And the mother find her child."

Lost Opportunities.

A gentle, gracious old lady, of seventy, lately told the following incident to her grandchildren. We give as nearly as possible her own words:

"I drove out one day when I was a young girl to the park. Some trifle had occurred to irritate me; a disappointment probably about a dress or hat. I left the carriage and, bidding the coachman drive on, sat down on a bench near the river. Some children were playing under the trees, their nurses looking on. I remember that their noise annoyed me and that I tried to control my own ill-humor. But I thought, Why should I not be ill-humored if I choose? I was alone; it could harm nobody.

"A man stood near me, leaning against a tree. He attracted my attention, because his clothes were of fine quality, though worn and ragged. There was something about his air and manner, too, which betokened gentle breeding. He turned and saw me looking at him, and, apparently following a sudden impulse, came up and asked me for work. I was not frightened, for his manner was perfectly respectful, but I was angry at being annoyed by a stranger.

"'What work could I have for you?'" I said.

"'That is true.' He bowed and turned away. I sat by the river for a while, and then went to meet the carriage, which was returning.

"The man again stopped me. 'You are young,' he said, 'you ought to have more mercy than the world. I am a very wretched man. If you would use your influence, could you not get me work?'

"His voice was so hoarse, I thought he had been drinking. I hurried on without speaking. The coachman threatened him with his whip, seeing that I was annoyed. I went home, but the man's pale face haunted me that night.

"The next morning my father read from the paper: 'The body of a man was found last night in the river above the dam. It proved to be a Virginian, named Hall, who had been struggling with poverty and ill-health in the city for months. He had been starving the day before he had applied for work to every man he met.' His last appeal was to me. A kind word from me would have saved him. It was a terrible lesson. Fifty years have passed since then, but even now I awake at night with that man's face before me.

The consequences of our careless neglect of the poor are often brought home to us in such a way. Yet we may be certain that every time we turn away from a needy brother, or leave him to evil influences which we might have changed into good ones. Every beggar, every creature, hurt or hungry in body or soul, that comes in our path, is an opportunity given to us by God, to make ourselves like the Master in his compassion and kindness. "Inasmuch," the Savior tells us, "as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me."—Youth's Companion.

Buddhism.

At a recent meeting of ministers, in Chicago, the paper on this topic was read by Dr. P[illegible], which presented the following points of contrasts between Buddhism and Christianity:

"He began his discussion of the subject by giving some account of the great religions of the world and the place occupied by Buddhism among them; a religion which numbers among its adherents about one-third of the inhabitants of the globe. He then proceeded to show some of the most noticeable analogies and contrasts between it and Christianity. Among the former he noticed:

"(1) That Buddhism had a personal founder and that it had a direct relation with an older religion before it; (2) that it inculcates an excellent morality, its ethics being the loftiest and purest of any heathen system; (3) that it is a missionary religion, although seemingly fitted for the Orient only, while Christianity is suited to the religious need of the whole world. He then showed some of the most prominent contrasts between the religion of Buddha and Christianity. Among these he noted: (1) that Buddhism is atheistic, it points to no God as the creator and supreme ruler of the world; (2) it is idolatrous; (3) it is materialistic; (4) it is powerless to elevate the human race either socially, morally or politically. In closing, the contrast of even this comparatively pure religion with Christianity would make us say, 'I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ.'"

Preaching is not for the delectation of special classes, or for the entertainment of churchmembers, or for the setting forth of hobbies, or for philosophical dissertations, or for the airing of individual opinions, but for the conversion of sinners and for the edification of Christians. The pulpit is not a platform, but a seat of gospel instruction and pleading. Its true and scriptural design is to be ever kept in view. Both in the pew and in the sacred desk this is often overlooked. People in many places call for something new; tire of the old truth; want God's preaching superseded by man's. And there are ambitious, popularity-loving and man-pleasing ministers ready to gratify the demand. Such, however, shine only for awhile, then go out in darkness. Nothing wears like the old gospel with its new adaptations to arising needs. It alone convicts, redeems and perfects. This is what the masses need, and this is what faithful ministers will give. The more it is done in its beauty, simplicity, power and fullness, the greater the beneficent results. Woe to him who gives a stone when the multitudes are perishing for the bread of life.—Presbyterian Observer.

May I Dance?

It is a fact that modern dancing, however well done, adds no strength to character.

It is a fact that mixed dancing becomes extremely fascinating.

It is a fact that it requires no intelligence and no virtue to dance well.

It is a fact that much valuable time is lost, and much hard-earned money wasted on this species of revelry.

It is a fact that young ladies permit familiarities on the dance floor which public sentiment universally condemns as dangerous to purity and virtue.

It is a fact that many females have been ruined by attending dances. A recent chief of police of New York City testified that seventy-five per cent. of abandoned girls of that city were ruined by dancing. A Roman Catholic Bishop of the same city makes the startling announcement that the work of the confessional revealed the fact that fifteen out of every twenty young men who fall and are lost can trace the beginning of their downward career to the modern dance.

It is a fact that social housedancing, as advocated by not a few inconsiderate parents, is but the first stepping-stone to the public ball-room, and the theater is the top round of the long ladder of dissipation—the simple which leads to the complex, the delicate which precedes the grass.

It is a fact that those who delight in dancing parties are generally fond of the wine-cup, the card reading and the card table.

It is a fact that no Christian can attend the dance without leaving spots from the world; for St. James commands, "Keep himself unspotted from the world."

It is a fact that no one was ever noted for piety and dancing at the same time. Many of the purest and most valued people never dance.

It is a fact that a dancing church-member is not worth anything to the church: for as the love of dancing comes in the love of God goes out.

It is a fact that the most prominent advocates of dancing have always changed their views in the presence of death and eternity.

These twelve facts can not be gainsaid, and I am ready to call the heavens to give ear, and the earth to be astonished, if in the presence of these incontrovertible facts, any of you who name the name of Christ shall ever again ask the question: "May I dance?"—J. H. Sherley, in Evangelical Messenger.

An Honest Repentance.

During the last convention Mr. Moody was speaking upon prayer, and an incident occurred illustrating his subject, which made a profound impression, and came home to everyone. He said true prayer consists of four elements: adoration, confession, restitution, thanksgiving. Charity, or brotherly love, the spirit of forgiveness, faith, ask with a beggar's importunity, a servant's docility, and a friend's confidence), perseverance, and, last, submission. When he came to the third element, restitution, a man rose in the audience and cried out:

"Mr. Moody, let me out in here. I went to Texas five years ago, having cheated my creditors of $15,000. My wife and I thought we were real smart. We settled in one of the cities, bought a nice house and furnished it tip-top, grand piano, Brussels carpets, and my wife bought no end of the lace curtains. But we hardly got settled down when Mr. Moody came along, and, like others, we followed the crowd of 'professors' and church members. He preached the sermon we have so far heard tonight. The Spirit of God convicted me and my wife both of sin, on this head of restitution, and we went home perfectly miserable. I said, 'Lou, what are we to do?' 'Do!!' says she; 'you know what to do without asking me; repay everybody to the last cent.' No sooner said than done; the house was sold and an auction called right away, and, oh, the joy I had in handing up the silverware and the china. The piano and all went, but my wife was so happy at parting with the lace curtains it was really curious. We took two little rooms, a bedroom and a kitchen, and the only table we had was the one we had used in the kitchen for chopping meat on; but the Lord filled us with himself, and we had peace and joy, because we had pardon and a clean conscience. The dear Lord has blessed me far above my desert and beyond what the devil led me to steal, and we have come to Northfield to praise the Lord and carry back with us to Texas a fresh baptism of the blessed power which set us free five years ago."

There was hardly a dry eye in the great audience, and to watch Mr. Moody was a study—he did not say a word, but looked over his glasses now on one side, now on the other, all over the house; then, after the pause had had its effect, he quietly went on with the next head of his discourse.—Exchange.

Be Good for Something.

We are indebted to the rugged and unconventional Thoreau, of New England, for many wholesome sentiments. One of the best is the following: "Be not simply good; be good for something." In this easily remembered sentence is bound up an invaluable lesson in life; into it is packed the essence of some of the ethical teachings of the Sermon on the Mount. There is too much goodness that is negative, that is good for nothing so far as others are concerned. So much that is contented with being good, without making any effort for the welfare of others. Our Lord's type of goodness was not passive, but rather active and aggressive. We know and honor him because of the truth of his saying, "I am among you as one that serveth." He did not go about showing how good he was, or how free his life was from the vices of the day, but, "he went about doing good." Every man, woman and child, as soon as they saw or heard him, felt the Divine Master was good for something. And every one who follows him in his simple yet superb activities will belong to that inner circle of followers who are good for something.

Take Thoreau's sentence and write it upon a card and place it where it will meet your eyes every morning before starting out upon the endeavors of the day. While you are young, run your habits in this mold; "Be not simply good, be good for something." Let them become fixed according to this model, and whether you are rich or poor, prominent or obscure, educated or ignorant, each day of your life on earth will be a gracious benediction.

Good George Herbert expresses the thought in another way:

"Be useful when thou livest, that they may Both want and wish thy pleasing presence still."

Another poet exhorts us as follows:

"Do something, do it now, with all thy might;
An angel's wing would droop if long at rest,
And God Himself inactive were no longer blest."
—The Presbyterian

Nearly everybody needs a good medicine at this season, to purify the blood and build up the system. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most popular and successful spring medicine and blood purifier. It cures scrofula, all humors, dyspepsia, sick headache, that tired feeling.

LABOR AND LIQUOR.—At present the workingman can hardly make both ends meet. Is it not because he insists on creating capitalists out of the saloon-keepers, and not content with that, on submitting all his rights of citizenship to the same object of worship? The saloon in politics is the most hideous abuse of the day, but where would it be if the workingmen withdrew their support from it? It keeps them poor. It keeps our politics corrupt. It supplies a constant stream of base adventurers who disgrace the American name at home and abroad. It makes the terms "public office" and "public plunder" synonymous. It stifles progress, fosters pauperism, brutalizes husbands and fathers, breaks women's hearts, puts rags on the workingman's back, disease in his body, and shame and despair in his heart. Yet when labor is most disturbed, when the demand for advanced wages is loudest, when strikes are most frequent, when hunger and misery are most rife in the homes of the poor, the saloon flourishes still. There may be no bread, but there is always bread and whiskey at the bars; and the men who consider themselves the victims of circumstances of the "thrall" of capital squander their earnings and spend their savings in these dens. Can there be a serious labor question while this state of things continues? Can workingmen talk gravely of their wrongs while it is plain to all the world that if they only saved the capital they earn they would be comfortable?—Atlantic Monthly.

A Baby's Accomplishments.

It can wear out a one-dollar pair of kid shoes in twenty-four hours.

It can keep its father busy advertising in the newspapers for a nurse.

It can occupy simultaneously both sides of the largest-sized bed manufactured.

It can cause its father to be insulted by every boarding-house keeper in the city who "never takes children," which in nine cases out of ten, is very fortunate for the children.

It can make itself look like a fiend just when mamma wants to show "what a pretty baby she has."

It can make an old bachelor in the room adjoining use language that, if uttered on the street, would get him in the penitentiary for two years.

It can go from the furthest end of the room to the foot of the stairs in the hall adjoining, quicker than its mother can just step into the closet and out again.

These are some things that a baby can do. But there are other things as well. A baby can make the commonest home the brightest spot on earth. It can lighten the burden of a loving mother's life by adding to them. It can flatten its dirty little face against the window-pane in such a way that the tired father can see it as a picture before he rounds the corner. Yes, babies are great institutions, particularly one's own baby.—New York Independent.

SELF-CONCEIT.—Conceit is a mark of real smallness of soul. It is a phase of selfishness. Conceit is essential littleness. It means small thoughts of the world and of other men; low ideals of character and attainment; weak and narrow conceptions of duty. It is a mark of self-centered life; and the life which makes self the center is as much smaller than the true life as the idea which made our earth the center of the universe was beneath the true edueeption of the solar system. "Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works," said Shakespeare. The men who have been servants of humanity—the great reformers and philanthropists—have been freest from conceit. They were great in humility; for humility, rightly understood, is essential greatness. Humility is the quality which leads men to serve others; conceit, the quality which leads them to serve themselves.

With groans and sighs, and dizzied eyes,
Hosseeks the couch and down he lies:
Nausea and dizziness in him rise
Brow-racking pains assail him.
Sick headache? But ere long comes ease,
He stomach settles into peace,
Within his head the throbbings cease—
Pierce's Pellets never fail him!

Nor will they fail anyone in such a dire predicament. To the dyspeptic, the bilious, and the constipated, they are alike "a friend in need and a friend indeed."

The desire to escape temptation, cross-bearing and persecution does not indicate a healthy spiritual condition. They neither know themselves, nor the love and care of God, who have not called to him out of the depths and heard his voice in quick response, and felt the everlasting arms sustaining their weakness. We grow strong and increase in faith in the struggles which we have with self and the world and the powers of evil that beset us. We are in a state of probation, which means that we are to be tested, not for our destruction, but for our growth and development in the spiritual life. These trials and afflictions are not to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ, but to establish our confidence till we can say, with the apostle: "I am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed to him."—Central Christian Advocate.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which developes ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Briefs.

A Christian man, like poets, orators and painters, is born, not made—born of the Spirit. Every citizen of "the kingdom of Heaven" is twice-born; and only this citizen has the home feeling which enables him to penetrate into the real values, real beauties and real pleasures of the world his foot treads.

The world is, in great part, run by advertising. It seems that nothing can make much headway without it. Even the churches must resort to it in order to keep up. The comicality of some church advertisements is really refreshing. Curious, and sometimes outlandish, themes are announced as the subjects of the preacher's next discourse. They are "taking;" they will arouse the curiosity of the people and "draw the masses." Dr. Robinson, of New York, says: "I know of my own information that one congregation of believers once spent $18,000 in less than one year on editorials and paragraphs to make the metropolitan world understand that their pastor was a second Spurgeon suddenly flashed into brilliancy in America."

A wide-awake and thorough-going presiding elder writes this good news; and it has the ring of a bugle note: "Though we are having so much bad weather, I have never seen so much enthusiasm in church work in this district as we have this year. We are going to push the ADVOCATE this year as never before." "Enthusiasm!" that's the thing to be filled with in order to accomplish anything. The "enthusiasts" are the only real people. All others are mere imitations, and very poor imitations at that! The pastor who can infuse his people with enthusiasm in church work is the pastor for these times. The presiding elder who can infuse his preachers with enthusiasm in their holy calling is the man to place in command of the Lord's battalions. Nothing can stand before enthusiasm. Jehu-like, it drives victorious over every obstacle.

Several years ago Dr. Boardman delivered an address on the influence of the Press of this country, in which, among the many good things said, was this, which we wish every editor in the land would hearken to. Speaking of the excuse made for the publication of much that is bad, that the readers demand such, he said: "Gentlemen of the Press, it is your glorious vocation to marshal the people, not to follow them; to lift them up, not to kneel to them. If you must have a scandal column, label it at the top, 'Beware of deadly poison.' The Press is the tongue, multiplied myriad-fold, speaking through a trumpet which may be heard around the world. The Press immortalizes statements, whether true or false. Spoken words are evanescent, dying away with the receding aerial vibrations. But printed words are immortal." A converted Press sending out only healthful and helpful literature would hasten the millennium very rapidly.

Now is the time for the brethren to push the canvass for the ADVOCATE. A week's hard work now will save you many a care and fear and blush farther on, and will give you peace and comfort in the sultry summer. Here we are pushing your interests, brethren and sisters—will you not help us there?

The Editor Abroad.

In my last I was turned from the purpose of my letter by the incidental thought of Sunday railroading, and filled up my space before I knew it. To finish the thought I began that letter with is the purpose of this present writing.

I was glad to have a taste of the old-fashioned travel by two-horse mail-coach in order to reach this place. I was set down at a little station on the Southern Pacific road, three hundred miles from the ADVOCATE office, at half-past five A. M. Two hours to wait and eat a twenty-five cent breakfast; but to beguile those two hours of early morning and keep sleep from spreading his "downy pinions" over my eye-lids I had the company of a newly married pair. The gentleman had been off somewhere and taken to himself a wife, and returned; and they were "waiting for the day" and conveyance as well as myself. A man who has been married twenty-nine years finds much in the ways of a newly married couple that reminds him of his own honeymoon, and he can well spend an hour or so "by way of remembrance;" but there are many little things occurring at that special time which mean so much, that it would be a profanation of love's sacred memories even to speak of them, and an actual outrage of proprieties to publish them in a newspaper. I will only say, the time between stopping off the rail-car and getting aboard the mail-hack was not devoid of interest to this writer. In starting from the station I found myself in a genuine Texas prairie, bounded by the horizon on two sides, and on the north, the direction I was going, by a belt of timber five miles away. There was not much road visible anywhere; perhaps, I should say, it was all road and all the road was mud, mixed with a good sprinkle of water. The hack was a strong one, and the team such as could only be supplied from stock raised on these prairies, the lead horse being a good, stout one, and the off horse noted for his special lack of size, yet his looks showed that "he had seen service;" and I felt pretty sure that we would be "pulled through" safely. We dragged along as best we could through this boundless openness. I could but think, I suppose by the law of contrasts, of poor old Cowper—sighing for a "boundless contiguity of shade, where rumor of oppression and deceit might never reach him more"—and said to myself that he might have had his wish gratified in this "boundless contiguity" of daylight, for it seemed as if "rumors of oppression and deceit," and every other sort of rumors, could never reach this part of the earth.

The whole distance from the station to this place, eight miles, is crossed by only one narrow belt of timber, through which runs an ugly creek, which sometimes floods so as to render travel impossible except by boat. I was fortunate to get over the day before a big rain, for several days after which Uncle Sam's mail-bags had to be transported over in a skiff.

Has the reader ever been in sight of the accomplishment of a cherished desire, and then in a minute seen the whole thing fade like a mirage of the desert? Has the object of hope been almost in reach and in a twinkling disappeared he knows not whither? That was my condition when, drawing near this place, the hack-driver casually remarked: "The hotel keeper has been in New Orleans for a month, and we don't know when he will return." That hotel keeper was the man I wanted to see—the man I started for when I left home; and now he is not here. "Is not the hotel open?" I asked. "No; there is no provision for taking care of strangers." "What is a man to do in such a case?" "Maybe you can get somebody to take you in for a few days." I thought myself pretty well taken in by this time, and began to think that, perhaps, it might be as well to return to the station on the return of the hack in the evening. The conversation, though upsetting to me, had no influence on our journey, and by this time we were halted in front of the postoffice. Standing in the yard was a man whose face seemed to be familiar, and when I reached him I found he was an old acquaintance, who lived in Morehouse parish, La., during my first pastorate of the church in Bastrop. He was Dr. N. C. Parsons. Reader, when you have reached a strange place, and have the feeling "of a stranger in a strange land," and, in turning a corner, come upon an old acquaintance, a gush of the home-feeling comes over you like a flood, and you feel like saying: "Bless the Lord, oh, my soul, and forget not all his benefits." Such was my feeling when, in this strange place, I came upon this old acquaintance. Of course, it was soon arranged about my stay here for a few weeks, and the sense of "all-goneness" which had been on me for half an hour was relieved. I am domiciliated in a comfortable farm-house, situated in a clump of grand old oaks, with pleasant outlooks in every direction, and cheerful surroundings on all sides. The busy, bustling housewife is one of the old-fashioned home-keepers, who takes special delight in administering to the comfort of her guests; and she has a flock of chickens that will make any Methodist preacher's mouth water to look upon. The birds swing in the boughs of these oaks, and make a melody to opening spring. "The lowing herd," the poet Gray spoke of, is here also. From these last items my reader can pick out my bill of fare, viz: Chickens, eggs, milk and butter—"a dish fit for a king."

TEXAS.

Shams of Religion.

There is one curious article of modern house-furnishing which was entirely unknown to our mothers and grandmothers. It is a thing which well illustrates the genius of modern invention. The good housekeeper of these days considers it an essential possession for every well-regulated household. In every such household, for the beds that are likely to be seen by visitors, there are provided, what are called, "pillow-shams." Some of them are exquisitely beautiful; in their workmanship displaying a faultless taste in patterns and fancy stitches by deft fingers, showing the "skill of cunning workmen." So perfect is its make, and so perfectly does it answer the purpose of its invention, that only a long-practiced eye can tell it from a real "pillow-slip." In reality, it is only a seeming pillow-slip. Whether it has been made for ornamentation, or for use, or for deception, makes no difference, for every housekeeper will tell you at once that it is a "sham;" and that name declares its nature and the purpose of its construction. True to the nature of a "sham," it seeks the public eye, for you will find it adorning the beds in the rooms where visitors are most likely to be invited. They are never found on the beds in the shed-rooms or garrets, where the boys sleep. Looking at it closely, you discover that it is just big enough to cover one side of the pillow. The real purpose of it is now seen, and that is, it is intended to cover the side that is exposed to public view.

We are well convinced that this sham of the modern household has its counterpart in the modern household of God, and that there are some people in the church whose religion might very appropriately be denominated "pillow-sham religion." It is beautiful to behold. It has cost quite an outlay of inventive genius. It is "figured o'er" with the traceries of the divine precepts after a fashion that would rival the "broad phylacteries" of the old Pharisee. It is always exposed to view when visitors are expected, and invariably covers that half of its possessor which is turned towards the beholder. When visitors are not expected, it rarely comes to light. If you should happen to come upon its possessor unawares, what a flurry there would be to get it on in time to prevent an awkward discovery. It is just half big enough—just big enough to cover one side at a time. How unfortunate for its possessor to be exposed to view from two or three different points at the same time! What a shifting of position, and squirming, and turning, and twisting to make the thing stretch to dimensions sufficient to protect the whole man from view! There must have been a religion of this sort in Isaiah's day, else how could he have written such a sentence as this: "For the bed is shorter than that a man can stretch himself on it; and the covering narrower than that he can wrap himself in it."

We now call attention to several kinds of this "sham" religion. St. James and St. John mention several kinds. In St. James' Epistle we have this clear, explicit, unmistakable utterance on this subject: "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain." These words are plain. They can not be misunderstood. There is a seeming religion. "If any man seem to be religious." The thing looks well. It appears to be genuine. Look at it as closely as you will, and you can discover no defect about it. The man goes out and comes in seemingly a religious man. But, like the "pillow-sham," his religion is too small to cover the entire man. That "little member, the tongue," is not covered, nor curbed, nor bridled. It "boasteth great things;" it "defileth the whole body, and setteth on fire the course of nature;" "it is an unruly evil, full of deadly poison." The unbridled tongue demonstrates his religion to be a sham; and, unlike the pillow-sham, it is not a harmless deception. There is, in fact, nothing so harmful and damaging as the unbridled tongue of the seemingly religious man or woman. The worst part of it is, that an unbridled tongue works a ruinous deception in the man's own heart. "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain." This seeming religion, therefore, works damage in two directions. The man deceives others, and that deception of others reacts upon himself, and practices a deception in his own soul. After while, he comes to believe that it is a part of genuine religion: that his tongue is not doing its duty unless it is lashing everything and everybody. The divine Word says: "This man's religion is vain." It is vanity. It is a sham.

According to St. James, another religious sham is the man, who is "a hearer of the Word and not a doer;" who, loud in professions of faith, yet will not contribute to supply the pressing necessities of "a brother or sister naked, and destitute of daily food." The apostle may well ask: "What is the profit" in possessing such a religion as this? If our religion consists only in a "dead faith," verily, it is a sham whose influence is to harden into stone all the kindlier feelings of nature. If it is not helpful to the needy, all the good words we can speak to them will not avail to recommend it. They will and must regard such a religion as a pure and simple humbug. It is useless to say to those seeking our aid, "Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled," if we do not "give them those things that are needful to the body." A gospel that does not address itself to the wants of the needy is no "good news" to them, no matter what it may say about faith. And the man who professes that sort of religion has a religion not only profitless to others, but one which will sink his own soul into the bottomless depths of despair. How strange it is that the only definition we have of religion in the Bible is given right when the sacred writer is speaking of a seeming religion; of mere "hearers and not doers of the Word!" He sets the two alongside each other that the sharp contrast may be noted. And, mark the fact, that he puts the practical part of religion first—reversing the usual order—saying, "Works and faith," instead of, "Faith and works." "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." The context shows that this visiting is not to be with merely gracious words of consolation, but gracious works of beneficence to supply pressing, daily, bodily need. No other manifestation of religion will attract the attention of the poor, and no other religion is true. All others are shams. St. John asks this question: "How dwelleth the love of God in him, who hath this world's good and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him?" The answer is: The love of God don't dwell in him at all; his religion is a sham.

Mr. L. D. Palmer and the Publishing House.

Mr. Palmer left the position which he so admirably filled, as business manager of our great Publishing House, so quietly that the church is liable not to be duly conscious of the very great services which he rendered her. It is, I presume, no disparagement of anyone else to say that to him chiefly the church is indebted for deliverance from that stupendous financial burden under which she labored when he took charge of the business of the Publishing House. The church first decided that she owed the debt contracted by her agent, and then determined that the Publishing House should pay it. A four per cent. bond scheme was adopted. The United States could borrow money at four per cent.; why should not the Methodist Church do the same? Mr. Palmer was put at the head of the business to pay a debt of over half a million, which had just been contracted in the management of the same resources, out of which he was to pay it. Almost anybody with good pretensions can issue bonds and mortgages, but not even the United States could pay its bonds at once, or even in six years. But, through Mr. Palmer's able management, the Publishing House is out of debt! Do Methodists not remember how the church stood amazed at that debt when she first become aware of it? How she staggered under it, and would fain have avoided its payment had honesty allowed! Great ought to be our rejoicing at this deliverance, and great appreciation and honor ought we to accord to Dr. McFerrin, the Book Committee, and especially to Mr. Palmer, for this most felicitous achievement. It was a dark day with the Publishing House when Mr. Palmer entered it; he left it in the sunshine of prosperity. The shadow of disgrace has been banished, the honor of the church has been vindicated and her financial credit established. Mr. Palmer was offered into a more lucrative position, such as he was urged to accept years ago, but refused in order that he might perform for the church that work which he has had the happiness at last to complete.

Will the proceeds of the Publishing House now be appropriated, as the Discipline requires, for the benefit of the traveling preachers and their widows and orphans? If so, then it will become that great charitable institution which the framers of the Constitution of the church designed it to be. It is now at last happily in a condition to enter upon the discharge of this, certainly one of its highest functions. The new agent, Dr. Barbee, has given unmistakable signs that his head and heart are set in that direction.

W. L. C.

Notes.

Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher taught theologues the true art of extemporaneous preaching. With the heart full of grace his directions complete the conditions of true oratory: "Young gentlemen," said he, "don't stand before a looking-glass and make gestures. Pump yourselves brimful of your subject till you can't hold another drop, and then knock out the bung and let her caper."

A correspondent of the Evangelist in an excellent article on "The Seed," has this about the Sunday reading of the masses:

There are great journals of weekly issue, whose main pabulum consists of the most exact details of revolting criminal acts. These become largely the Sunday reading of the masses. Cheap and pictorial, with portraits of thieves, debauchees, and toughs of both sexes, with illustrations of their tools, their dens, and their gibbets, they familiarize the minds of their readers with the minutiæ of these things only to make hordes of converts to professional vice, till journals of this class do but little else than sow broadcast constantly crime seed. There seems thus to be indicated a call for a censorship, to be placed by law on the publication of the details of trials and intrigues.

The same correspondent has a story about the father's action in a case similar:

If some aged sinner came quietly into a household, and the family found him seated with the children about him of a Sabbath morning, reading over to the little innocents with the particulars of the latest tale of darkness and dirt, would he not be summarily ejected with more haste than he brought. Yet the same familias buys with impunity "Sunday Grit," which does exactly the same work, and pitches it over to his boys when he has exhausted its contents, for it is only the same paper.

And oftentimes this same father declines to take the church paper because he can't afford it!

One act of moral courage in adverse circumstances has a power that can hardly be estimated. The single scene in "Tom Brown at Rugby," where little Arthur, kneeling at his bedside and saying his prayers, amid the laughter and sneers and flying boots of his room-mates, was the means of converting Tom of his own cowardice. He had promised his mother not to neglect that duty, yet had forgotten all about it until he saw little Arthur on his knees. Thenceforward he was a different boy, and difficulties disappeared readily before his awakened courage. At the close of this touching scene, the author makes a remark which deserves to be engraven deeply into every heart. He says, that the next morning, Tom "went down to the great school with a glimmering of another lesson in his heart—the lesson that he who has conquered his own cowardly spirit has conquered the world."

An old deacon is reported to have prayed thus for his pastor: "O Lord, give this our pastor great success; help him to wrestle for souls; prosper every effort of his ministry, that many may come as doves to the windows, for we need souls for thy praise and glory—souls for his comfort and edification—souls, O Lord, for aid from a pecuniary point of view, too." No deacon or a steward could not make a truer climax than that. They bear the pecuniary burdens, and when well-to-do people join their church "their joy is as the joy of harvest." After an earnest pastor had gone through the beautiful service of admitting half a score of persons into the fellowship of the church, a keen-eyed old steward remarked: "There is not five dollars a year in the whole crowd!" Commend us to the deacons and stewards, for their sense of church finance is so finely educated that they can measure the increase in the exchequer by one glance at the person who is to be received.

Personals.

A letter from Rev. R. Ruddle, of Homer district, Louisiana Conference, says: "We expect a good work and much growth in the district this year."

Rev. D. F. Gulce, of Mississippi Conference, writes to correct an error in the Annual Conference Minutes. His work at Bowerton is credited with ten dollars "for other objects," instead of ninety dollars, as reported to the secretary.

Rev. R. H. Parker, presiding elder of Los Angeles district, writes to Los Angeles Advocate, that Rev. F. S. Parker is preaching to fine congregations in his new and beautiful church, and develops in rather a marvelous degree that subtile power to draw.

Rev. S. A. Steel, D. D., of Louisville, Ky., has been appointed fraternal delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which convenes in May, in New York City.

Dr. H. C. Morrison, of Atlanta, is sorely afflicted in the continued sickness of his little son, who four months ago had diptheria. He has not been able to dispense with the tube inserted into his windpipe. The patient little sufferer has not spoken since he was taken sick. He plays around some, but is getting disheartened. Let us not forget this sad case at the throne of grace.

The Board of Trustees of Princeton College, though they filled Dr. McCosh's place as president of the college, continue his salary at $2,500 a year.

Bishop Wilson announces that a layman of Baltimore Conference, whose name he withholds, has contributed $500 towards expenses of Rev. J. C. C. Newton as missionary to Japan.

Rev Dr. Lee, of Atlanta, Ga., completely captured the assembly at the Florida Chautauqua. Many of the leading men of the nation were present, and pronounced his sermon, on Sunday evening, one of great power.

The Life of Dr. J. B. McFerrin, by Dr. O. P. Fitzgerald, the accomplished editor of Nashville Advocate, is now going through the press of our Publishing House.

Rev. Dr. John Hall, of New York, is said to have received, since last September, $20,000 in marriage fees. One man gave him $5,000. Dr. Hall is reported to be worth $1,000,000.

Rev. Dr. W. H. Ward, one of the editors of the New York Independent, in leaving the ferry-boat at Jersey City, met with a serious accident in falling from an elevated walk, where he was jammed by the wheels of a heavy truck against a beam of wood. Four of his ribs were broken and his brain affected by concussion.

Rev. Dr. R. S. Maclay, superintendent of the missions in Japan, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, is home on a visit, and will remain through their General Conference. He has been a missionary for forty years.

At the close of a pastorate of thirty-one years, Rev. Dr. H. M. Smith resigns his pastorate of the Third Presbyterian Church, in this city. He will confine his labors to the Southwestern Presbyterian, of which he has been so long the editor.

Richard K. Fox, of the New York Police Gazette, derives an income from that paper of $200,000 a year, and the Christian at Work is printed on one of his presses, not being able to own one. Vice gets ahead of virtue sometimes in the accumulation of dirty dollars, but the outcome will make all right.

Rev. P. A. Jeffett and Rev. R. S. Danner, of the Arkansas Conference, have been in the city. Much to our regret, we were absent when they called at the ADVOCATE office.

Rev. Bishop W. W. Duncan, on his way to the Texas District Conferences, passed through the city and called at the ADVOCATE office. We hope to be more fortunate in meeting him on his return.

Dr. Carter, editor of this paper, its readers will be glad to know, is improving in health at Sour Lake, Texas. He will remain there until fully restored.

Mrs. Mattie Lee sends us $1 25 for the Lambuth fund.

Rev. J. H. Scruggs writes to make correction in the report of Shreveport station, in the Conference Minutes. The amount for church building and repairs should be $2,942. Instead of $29 12.

Half-Rate Excursions Southeast.

Half-rate excursions to Birmingham, Chattanooga, Atlanta, Gadsden, Tuskaloosa, Macon, Savannah, and other principal points in the Southeast, will be run from New Orleans and Shreveport, via Queen and Crescent Route, on March 13 and 27, April 10 and 24. Tickets will be good for 30 days, with the privilege of stopping over on the outward journey. The Queen & Crescent is the quickest and most direct route between the Southeast and Southwest, and tickets should so read. J. D. Grant, Passenger Agent, 611 Elm street, Dallas, Texas, will gladly furnish all particulars.

City Mission Anniversary.

The second grand rally of New Orleans City Mission occurred at Carondelet Street Church, on Sunday last, at quarter-past seven P. M. The spacious building was well filled by an interested and delighted audience. After some explanatory remarks by the president, Rev. J. T. Sawyer, and the reading of the reports of the secretary and treasurer by Rev. J. J. Billingsley, city missionary, the address was made by Rev. B. Carradine. The speaker was at his best, and held the immense audience in willing and delighted thrall for an hour, with an appeal that was pertinent, pungent, sparkling with wit, gleaming with flashes of fervid, spiritual eloquence. A collection amounting to about $250 was taken; and under more enthusiasm than ever the City Mission goes upon its work for the second year.

We need in this city, immediately, four chapels—two costing not more than four thousand dollars, and two about two thousand—for localities where but few people ever go to church, and where they are so very poor they are unable to contribute scarcely anything to their construction. The City Mission is now cultivating these fields with most remarkable encouragement, and our people will be sure to help these enterprises at the right time.

Rev. J. G. Parham.

It is with profound emotion we note the death of this noble Christian gentleman, who passed to his reward from Bessemer, Ala., on Thursday, March 15. He came to this city from Mississippi when quite a young man, and remained here till recently. He taught the writer in the Paulding School, in this city, in 1852. Later, he became superintendent of the public schools of the Fourth District, and subsequently of the whole city. When he left the city he was president of the Board of Directors of the city schools. For years he was connected with the firm of Payne, Huntington & Co., and filled places of honor in the directories of several city mercantile enterprises. He has, from early manhood, been superintendent of some one or other of our Sunday-schools, and steward in our churches. His life has been a pure one, devoted to his family, benevolence and religion, and his career has been without a blemish, almost without a regret. Nearly everyone in this city knew him, and none knew him but to respect or love him.

A suitable memorial will be prepared.

Church Extension Collections.

MR. EDITOR: The Louisiana Conference adopted, at its late session, a resolution requesting the preachers to take up the church extension collections early in the year, and forward the full amount to the treasurer of the Conference Board as soon as collected. One brother has forwarded the full amount assessed to his charge, and one dollar over. Will not others follow suit and get this matter off of our hands?

Subscribers to the Parker Loan Fund may also forward their subscriptions as early as convenient.

Remit to the undersigned by express or postoffice order, or by draft on New Orleans.

J. W. MEDLOCK,
Treasurer.

Notice.

In order to secure the presence of Bishop Galloway, the time of holding the Winona District Conference is changed from April 13 and 15 to April 20 and 22, and the Sunday-school Conference to the nineteenth.

R. P. MITCHELL, P. E.

DURANT, Miss., March 15, 1888.

Notice.

To the Methodists of Jackson District, Mississippi Conference:

The committee appointed to locate and purchase a district parsonage for the Jackson district has discharged its duty by purchasing a comfortable house, of ample grounds; the house containing seven rooms, besides the kitchen and pantry. The property cost $1,275, and is located in West Jackson. The property was exceedingly cheap at the above price. Will the collectors of each work, with the assistance of the pastors, go to work to raise their assessment, and forward to Hon. R. G. Kemp, Canton, Miss.? Go to work at once. To delay is hazardous. We will need, besides the assessment we have made, at least $250 to paint the house, repair the fence and put the property in first-class repair. Then we need some heavy furniture for the parsonage. How shall we secure the necessary funds?

The following-named ladies, on their respective charges, are appointed to raise the necessary "sinews of war": Mrs. Dr. Yandell, Mrs. Geo. Harvey, Mrs. Peter James, Mrs. J. S. Parker, Mrs. Capt. Postell, Mrs. C. A. Powell, Mrs. C. G. Andrews, Mrs. J. T. H. Laird, Mrs. David McRea, Mrs. S. L. Cotton, Mrs. N. M. Clark, Mrs. Albert Bennett, Mrs. W. H. Huntley, Mrs. Hattie Birdsong. Executive Committee: Mrs. C. G. Andrews, Jackson, Miss., treasurer; Mrs. James Black, Bolton, Miss.; Mrs. E. M. Chichester, Edwards, Miss.

Will these kind ladies throw the necessary enthusiasm into their work? Please consider the importance of your work, and enter upon it at once. Send your money to Mrs. C. G. Andrews, Jackson, Miss. When sufficient funds are collected, the Executive Committee will meet in Jackson, and have the repairs made.

INMAN W. COOPER,
Chairman.

Educational.

During the twenty years that Dr. McCosh was president of Princeton College between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000 have been subscribed to the college, the number of students has been increased from 251 to upward of 600, the number of professors from seventeen to forty-one, while the buildings and the books and apparatus of the college have been more than doubled, the standard of scholarship has been materially raised, and a dozen new fellowships have been founded.

The presidency of Wellesley College has been offered to Miss Margaret Evans, of Carelton College, at Northfield, Minn., with a salary of $5,000.

Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt has given $20,000 for the fitting up of a manual-training department to Vanderbilt University, at Nashville, Tenn.

Two college presidents have recently given in the Advance their opinions concerning the "Christian Influences in the Colleges of To-Day." President Bartlet, of Dartmouth, says: "On the whole, the steadily increasing religious influences of the college are a matter of rejoicing, and we feel that a young man can be nowhere more safely placed, among a great company of other young men, than in the college." President Seelye, of Amherst, gives his testimony as follows: "I am sure that religious life in this college is steadier, stronger and more persuasive than it was forty years ago when I was a student here. A little more than half our number are church members when they enter, and this proportion steadily increases until generally from eighty to ninty per cent. have made a profession of faith before leaving."

A special dispatch from Fort Smith, Ark., says: "Plans are being made by the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the erection of an university at this point, which will be the largest sectarian school in the South. It will probably be endowed by a rich Methodist of this city with a tract of land which will eventually make it as rich as the government donation has made the Fort Smith public school fund, now amounting to nearly $1,000,000."

Bless De Lard!

Is what the grateful heart of old Cynthia Ramsey, of Newnan, Ga., spoke when after a severe attack of asthma had been relieved by one dose of Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein, the great medicine for coughs, colds and consumption.

Missions.

"Asheville," in Woman's Missionary Advocate, suggests that the Woman's Auxiliary Missionary Societies might greatly increase the interest and effectiveness of their work by associating with the business exercises a course of reading on the subject of missions, and indicates Dr. Pierson's "Crisis of Missions" as a good book to start with. We endorse the idea, and urge our sisters to try the plan.

The United States Consul at Bangkok, in Siam, says: "Before I went to the far East I was strongly prejudiced against the missionary enterprise and against foreign missionaries, but after a careful examination of their work I became convinced of its immense value. Largely through their influence slavery is being abolished, wholesome and equitable laws have been proclaimed, criminals have been punished by civilized methods, reforms have been inaugurated in all departments, and Christian converts have been permitted to enjoy the same liberty of conscience that they do in our own land."

How vast is the region of darkness and the death shade! Out of about 1,500,000,000 of people, only one in 50 belongs to an evangelical church; only one in fifteen is ever connected with a Protestant community; while, at least, one in every two has yet never seen one ray of gospel light pierce the darkness which may be felt, or even heard the name of Jesus. The multitude of those who are yet in the darkest depths of paganism and heathenism, on whose horizon not even the first tints of the day-dawn yet appears, is so great that from it might be formed over 200 cities as populous as London, over 400 as large as New York, or nearly 1,000 as large as Philadelphia.—Arthur T. Pierson, D. D.

The Methodist Episcopal Church has 10,000 members and 23,000 Sunday-school scholars in India.

The ragged Sunday-schools in London have 40,000 scholars and 4,000 teachers. Its president was the late and honored Lord Shaftesbury. His son succeeds him in the work. The income of the society, consisting wholly of voluntary contributions, amounts to $80,000 per annum.

The people of Louisiana themselves do not realize all its advantages, because they have not been able to compare it with other States; hence, the great need of presenting before the world the many attractions, the grand opportunities that Louisiana offers to all who wish a comfortable home. Strangers, who have their capital, their labor or their skill to invest, will do well to address the Southwestern La. Land Company, Crowley, La.

The Presbyterian Foreign Mission Board, representing a membership of 661,809, reported from all sources last year $781,177 59. This is an average of nearly a dollar per member more than we are giving. Have we no gospel for the heathen, or have we no money to send that gospel? Is the fault not rather with our conscience, which tolerates our luxury and accumulation, while the cry for the bread of life is unheeded? Oh, brother, look for the plague-spot upon your hoarded dollars. Look for it. It is surely there.

Within the last five months Harvard College has received gifts amounting to $3,000,000.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

231 Hymns, a Complete Book in Itself.

NOW READY

and used by Mr. MOODY in his Meetings

Six years having elapsed since Gospel Hymns No. 4 was issued, Christian workers throughout the land have felt the need of additional new songs, and to meet this demand GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5 has been prepared. Each piece in the book has been carefully tested by the authors, and only those retained that are especially adapted for use in devotional services.

No. 5

Contains a greater number of new songs than any of the preceding volumes, together with the best of the old favorites and standard selections of unquestioned merit.

This collection contains 208 pages, of the same size and shape as other numbers of the series, but, while greatly increased in size, the prices are the same as for preceding single volumes, viz:

Price per 100, by Express, Charges not Prepaid:

Music Edition, Board Covers	$80 00
Word Edition, Paper Covers	5 00
" " (Minion Type) Board Covers	10 00

If ordered by mail, add five cents per copy to Music and two cents to Word Editions.

Former editions of GOSPEL HYMNS are still published. No. 5 is not expected to supersede, but to supplement them.

No. 5 will not be bound with the consolidated book.

EDUCATIONAL.

Mansfield Female College.

1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. D. F. Huddle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 288 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

Our Young People.

A LITTLE MOUSE'S PLEA.

I am only a poor little mouse, ma'am,
I live in the wall of your house, ma'am,
With a fragment of cheese
And a very few peas,
I was having a little carouse, ma'am,

No mischief at all I intend, ma'am,
I hope you will act as my friend, ma'am,
If my life you should take,
Many hearts you would break,
And the mischief would be without end, ma'am.

My wife lives in there in the crack, ma'am,
She's waiting for me to come back, ma'am.
She hoped I might find
A bit of a rind
For the children their dinners do lack, ma'am.

'Tis hard living there in the wall, ma'am,
For plaster and mortar will pall, ma'am,
On the minds of the young,
And when specially hung
By upon their poor father they fall, ma'am.

I never was given to strife, ma'am,
Don't look at that terrible knife, ma'am,
The noise overhead
That disturbs you in bed,
It's the rats, I will venture my life, ma'am.

In your eyes I see mercy, I'm sure, ma'am;
Oh, there's no need to open the door, ma'am,
I'll slip through the crack
And I'll never come back
No, I'll never come back any more, ma'am.

The Habits of Birds.

Birds do not cough and sneeze, but they dream and snore, making the most distressing sounds, as if strangling. They hiccough—a very droll affair it is, too—and they faint away. A goldfinch, being frightened one night, in his struggles was caught between the wires and gave a cry like the squeak of a mouse in distress. On my hastening to his relief he slipped out into the room and flew wildly about till he hit something and fell to the floor. He was picked up, and his fright culminated in a dead faint. The little head dropped, the body was limp, apparently perfectly lifeless, and he was put in his cage, ready to be buried in the morning. He was placed carefully on the breast, however, and in a few moments he hopped upon his perch, shook out his ruffled feathers and composed himself to sleep.

One feat sometimes ascribed to man is in the case of birds a literal fact—they can sleep with one eye open. This curious habit I have watched closely, and I find it common in nearly all the varieties I have been able to observe. One eye will close sleepily, shut tight, and appear to enjoy a good nap, while the other is wide awake as ever. It is not always the one towards the light that sleeps, nor is it invariably the one from the light. The presence or absence of people makes no difference. I have even had a bird stand on my arm or knee, draw up one leg, and seem to sleep soundly with one eye, while the other was wide open. In several years' close attention I have been unable to find any cause, either in the position or the surroundings for this strange habit.

No "set old woman" is more wedded to her accustomed "ways" than are birds in general to theirs. Their hours for eating, napping and singing are as regular as ours. So, likewise, are their habits in regard to alighting-places, even to the very twig they select. After a week's acquaintance with the habits of a bird I can always tell when something disturbing has occurred by the place in which he is found. One bird will make the desk his favorite haunt, and freely visit tables, the rounds of chairs and the floor, while another confines himself to the backs of chairs, the tops of cages and picture frames. One hermit thrush frequented the bureau and looking-glass frame, and the top of a cardboard map which had warped around till the upper edge was almost circular. On this edge he would perch for hours, and twitter and call, but no other bird ever approached it. Still another would always select the door-casing and window cornices.

Every bird has his chosen place for the night, usually the highest place on the darkest side of the cage. They soon become accustomed to the situation of the dishes in their cages, and plainly resent any change. On my placing a drinking cup in a new part of the cardinal's residence he came down at once, scolding violently, pretended to drink, then looked over to the corner where the water used to be and renewed his protestations. Then he returned to the upper perch, flirting his tail and expressing his mind with great vigor. A few minutes passed, and he repented the performance, keeping it up with great excitement until, to pacify him, I replaced the cup. He at once retired to his usual seat, smoothed his roughened plumage, and in a few moments began to sing. A dress of a new color on their mistress makes great commotion among these close observers, and the moving about of furniture puts the tamest one in a panic.—Atlantic.

The Boy with a Cigarette.

Dr. T. M. Coan writes as follows in Harper's Young People, about the pestilential practice of cigarette smoking by our American youth: "The boy who buys cigarettes is sure to injure himself. Now I will take the most favorable case of all, and the rarest. Suppose a boy has a lot of good cigarettes, and smokes a few of them every day. Is there any injury in that? I can tell you, for I have had such boys for patients. Such smoking, even in so-called moderation—as if there were any such thing as moderation in stimulants for the young—will do three things for him: (1) it will run his pulse up to one hundred or more a minute; (2) it will reduce his weight below the healthy standard; and (3) it will reduce his strength and general vitality, as will appear in his pale complexion and his diminished appetite. If this is true of boys smoking under the least injurious conditions, how much truer is it in the more frequent case where bad and adulterated tobacco and excessive smoking combine in their attack upon the delicate tissues of the growing lad? The physiologist will tell you that the effect of stimulants in general is to check the changes in tissue. In a growing animal of any kind this means to check the growth. The dog-fancier is said to give whisky to the puppy when he wishes to stunt its growth. I do not know whether he has taught puppies to smoke, but it would be a good way to keep them from growing. It is no use, of course, to point out the trials and troubles of learning to smoke. No youngster but is cheerfully willing to brave them, for nothing gives him so much a sense of 'manliness,' as he imagines it, as the mastery of this accomplishment. In conclusion, cigarette smoking is one of the worst of habits, physically, that a boy can form. It injures the heart and the digestion, and it tends to check the growth. It gives a lad false and silly notions, and it does not bring him into good company. I am not one of those who think that severe measures are often necessary in the management of children that receive a careful and affectionate training. But if, in some cases, nothing else will do, it is well to consider that a switch in time saves nine."

High-Chair Brilliancy.

"Hush!" whispered a little girl to her class-mates, who were laughing during prayer, "we should be polite to God."

A minister asked a little boy who had been converted: "Does not the devil tell you that you are not a Christian?" "Yes, sometimes." "Well, what do you say to him?" "I tell him that whether I am a Christian or not, it is none of his business."

"I wish I could mind God as my little dog minds me," said a little boy, looking thoughtfully on his shaggy friend; "he always looks so pleased to mind, and I don't."

John was building a chicken-coop, while little Budge stood by looking on. John bruised his thumb, and exclaimed, "Oh, gracious!" "What makes you say that?" asked Budge. "What should I say?" retorted John, for his thumb ached. "Well," said Budge, after reflecting a little, "you might say the 'maudments."

Household.

Variety in Food.

Some sensible remarks are made in the American Agriculturist on the desirability of a variety of food. There is far too much monotony in the meals of most households. Often a sickly, wanting appetite can be stimulated by some exceedingly simple change in the commonest articles of daily food. Slices of dry bread are uninviting: but the same bread, lightly browned, with a delicately poached egg resting on the crisp toast, becomes altogether another item in the bill of fare. Cold beef or mutton have become standard dishes for washday or other slim dinners; but an accompaniment of pickles for the one and jelly for the other makes all the difference in the world between tasteful and bald utilitarian housekeeping. Oatmeal porridge is a most excellent breakfast dish, yet it is well to occasionally substitute in its place berries or other fruit, or even a change to pearl hominy, or cracked wheat, or cornmeal mush. There are forty different ways in which to prepare potatoes, and possibly fifty, yet how few are the tables, especially in the country, where one sees this vegetable except in the stereotyped boiled whole, mashed, or fried. A great variety of delightful dishes can be made with apples at all seasons of the year, whether one has fresh or canned fruit. Breakfast, dinner, or tea need not lack a healthful relish if one has a dozen or so of apples within reach. We do not enumerate the host of what are known as "made dishes," which can be so quickly and easily concocted out of remnants. It is worth the trouble to set on the family table, not courses of elaborate dishes, but a wholesome, agreeable, and yet economical diversity of food.

COAL ASHES FOR CUT WORMS.—A York State farmer relies on coal ashes as a preventive for cut worms. His practice is to throw a handful of the ashes on a hill of corn or any other plant assailed by the worms, and he says the treatment has proved effective. There may be something in the method as long as the ashes remain dry, for in that position it must be difficult for the worms to crawl over them. Of course there is nothing in the ashes to effect the destruction of the pests, but the application can be made easily, and if successful none of us will care to investigate closely as to the precise method of prevention.

THE SHYING HORSE.—Drivers are often to blame for the bad habits of the horse. When a horse turns aside from something in passing, it is because he considers it dangerous; and if he is whipped, it not only does no good, but makes matters worse. Gentleness, a moderately tight rein, a soothing word, and the good sense of the driver will do much to work a cure. It is well known that if the animal can be brought to touch the object, (whatever it may be) with his nose, there will be no further trouble. But everything depends on the gentleness and good sense of the driver.

So adorn the doctrine that those may be won by the life who will not be won by the word.—F. R. Havergal.

A Cruel Old Monster.

A cruel old monster was "Giant Despair," as pictured by Bunyan in "Pilgrim's Progress." His plan was to drive people to desperation by making them low-spirited and wretched; in other words, by giving them mental and spiritual dyspepsia. Having got them into this state of misery, he made an easy capture of them.

When an invalid is badly run down by dyspepsia or lung trouble or by any chronic disorder, the danger is of becoming so weak as to despair of recovery. This is more especially the case when sufferers have tried one thing and another in hope of cure, but without success. A lady who for five years had been almost hopeless, concluded as a last resort to try Compound Oxygen. Her trouble had been chronic irritation of the bowels. She had been almost entirely unable to walk; eating had been torture. To these distresses had been added a severe attack of rheumatism. After using Compound Oxygen for three months she wrote to express her gratitude for being brought out of her misery. She says, "I frequently met with remarks of this kind, 'If you get well, no one need despair;' so you see it speaks for itself in my altered condition."

This good work should be known by everybody who wants to deal a blow at "Giant Despair." Write for pamphlet treatise to Drs. Starkey and Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa. Sent free.

HARVEY—MRS. MARTHA A. HARVEY died in Canton, Miss., February 29, 1888, just at the close of day. She had been in feeble health for several months, but not confined to her bed. On the evening of her death she walked over to the house of a near neighbor, but, returning, felt exhausted and lay down to rest. Presently she informed the family that she was dying. She felt neither pain nor fear, but was conscious that the end of all things earthly was at hand. In half an hour from the time of her return home she was with her God.

This estimable Christian lady was born in Alabama, November 7, 1816, and was, therefore, at the time of her death in her seventy-third year. Her maiden name was Bales. She was married to Dr. W. B. Harvey, in Alabama, December 16, 1841. They came to Mississippi soon after their marriage, and settled in Holmes county, where Dr. Harvey practiced his profession until 1851, when they came to Canton. For many years Dr. Harvey was a leading physician of this place, and a prominent and useful member of the Methodist Church here. He died in 1878. Mrs. Harvey joined the Methodist Church with her husband in Holmes county soon after they came to this State. My acquaintance with her began with my pastorate in Canton, over two years ago. She was a godly woman. She attended all the services of the church as long as she was able. It was a pleasure to visit her as her pastor. I generally found her reading her Bible; and she delighted in religious conversation. Her visits to the parsonage, and her kind ministrations in time of sickness, endeared her to the pastor's family, and we feel as if we had lost a mother. She was not always bright and joyous in her religious experience, but she was always faithful to duty and uniform in her religious life. As she grew feeble, and neared the shores of eternity, she became more heavenly-minded and brighter in her hope. And when she was dying she said, in answer to questions, that all was well. For some time past she had been looking forward with fond anticipations of heavenly rest, and now, when the summons came, though sudden and unexpected, she responded joyfully, and died in great peace.

W. H. LEWIS.

PETTUS—Died, in Ningpo, China, on January 18, 1888, MRS. ANNIE M. PETTUS, wife of T. F. Pettus, United States Consul to China. Mrs. Pettus was born in Portsmouth, Va., January 24, 1840, and was married at Sommerville, Ala., December 17, 1861. The hearts of a host of friends and admirers of this lovely woman are rent by the above announcement. It is doubly sad, as she had for months been separated from her idolizing husband, and had recently joined him in his home, the consulate, at Ningpo, China. He had, with delicate thoughtfulness, made many improvements to the home, and beautified the apartments for her, that she might have a pleasant surprise on her arrival. The home was prepared for hospitalities. They were both distinguished for their liberal hospitality. She made a great many warm friends in this new home, and her attractive manners drew around her the rich and the poor. She was a sincere Christian, and on arriving in Ningpo she entered heartily into the Christian work.

I will quote the remarks of Rev. Mr. McGee, a Presbyterian missionary, who sailed with Mrs. Pettus and her daughters: "An accident, which occurred during the voyage across the Pacific will illustrate the spirit of Mrs. Pettus' life. A terrible typhoon arose, and for many hours the ship was at its mercy. Mrs. Pettus and her daughters were in peculiar peril, for the waves carried away the cabin aft theirs, and stove in one of their cabins; while, in escaping to the saloon for safety, they were obliged to wade in water above the waist. After reaching the saloon, Mrs. Pettus remarked: 'Well, perhaps, our time has come; if so, the Lord's will be done; but he can keep us just as well on the sea as on the land.' And she directed her children to trust in him. They sailed in the "City of Sidney."

Mrs. Pettus was a woman of extraordinary energy, which, combined with her accomplishments, rendered her a useful member of society. As a musician she had but few equals. She was ready to aid in every laudable enterprise. A portion of the foreign population of Ningpo arranged to give a concert. Mrs. Pettus and Miss Bessie were to assist in the concert. The evening of January 13, the entertainment was to take place. Mrs. Pettus had since half-past six o'clock dinner played over her parts, and was about entering her chair, or rather was on the pavement, when she suddenly exclaimed, "My head! water!" and immediately fell in a state of unconsciousness. She remained in this condition twenty-four hours. She, however, rallied, and her kind physician, Dr. Daly, gave Mr. Pettus assurances of a decided improvement. This was during the day of the eighteenth. But, alas! that night, at half-past nine, the dark-winged angel claimed her, and the home so recently vocal with song was suddenly made desolate. Such desolation is felt by the bereaved, but can not be described. When the beautiful eyes, which were luminous with love, are closed; the lips, whose language was that of affection, are mute, never to speak again; the cold ear of death is sealed—no sound can reach its chambers, and the dear heart, ever responsive to our wishes, is stilled!

Mrs. Pettus was educated in Virginia. While neglecting no home duty, she kept her accomplishments. Her fine musical taste was appreciated by connoisseurs.

She was a tender and devoted wife, fond mother and sincere friend. We were inmates of her family for three years, and never was there between us a misunderstanding. We lived as sisters. Oh, shall we ne'er behold thy sweet face! We had just been speaking (before we knew of her death) of her being across the Pacific, and, at that hour she had crossed the crystal sea—safely anchored on the shining shore. She is in the paradise of God. To tell of her charities and of her labors of love would fill a volume. She was a Methodist, but was no bigot. She worshiped with all freely. "God's finger touched her and she slept." To the stricken ones I would say a word of comfort. "Earth has no sorrow that heaven can not cure." May God bless the kind friends who nursed our loved one in her Oriental home!

MIXER—CHARLES MIXER, steward and trustee of the Big Cane Church, Evergreen circuit, Louisiana Conference, was born at Bayou Chicot, August 23, 1821; died January 4, 1888, aged sixty-seven years, four months and twelve days. He was a true man to his country's call; was a soldier in the Mexican War, and for several years in the war between the States. Yet in all the trials of his life he was faithful to the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ. He first joined the Presbyterian Church while at college in Missouri. After his return and marriage to Miss Mary Robinett, in December, 1853, he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was the son of Ezekiel and Sarah Mixer, who were among the early settlers of Louisiana, and were parishioners of Richmond Nollie, or, at least, heard this pastor of pioneer Methodism preach. Charles Mixer was a man of few words, but mighty in deeds of good. We sigh that this grand old veteran of his country and the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ has fallen; but we rejoice that he receives his laurels of victory. We have no uncertainty as to how he died, for we know how he lived. His physician, S. P. Ward, when taking his leave, after speaking of the future, was answered with, "I am ready and waiting." He said to me at our last parting: "My time is short, I know; but I'll meet you in heaven." I answered: "Yes, I will be much disappointed not to meet you there." "Oh! you'll see me there, for that's where I am going!" He was the father of twelve children, seven of whom survive with the widowed mother, to mourn their loss; but to treasure the heritage of the father's and husband's good name. God bless and save them all! shall be the prayer of their ex-pastor,

S. H. WHATLEY.

MOORE—Died, in Meridian, Miss., December 26, 1888, JOSEPH LAMAR MOORE, son of Mr. and Mrs. M. C. Moore, aged three months and fourteen days. What pen can portray the anguish of a mother's heart as she consigns to the tomb a child, so sweet, so beautiful, so full of promise? Yet for even such a wounded spirit there is a salve: "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." He who uttered these precious words has taken the little one in me to his service, where it will be forever safe from all the ills and woes of this earthly life. Our loved ones may not return to us, but we may go to them. Precious thought! Ought not heaven to seem nearer when ones nearest and dearest have entered its portals?

Medicinal Qualities of Fruits.

Of all the fruits with which we are blessed, the peach is the most delicious and digestible. There is nothing more palatable, wholesome and medicinal than good ripe peaches. It is a mistaken idea that no fruit should be eaten at breakfast. It would be far better if our people would eat less bacon and grease at breakfast and more fruit. In the morning there is an acrid state of the secretions, and nothing is so well calculated to correct this as cooling sub-acid fruits, such as peaches, apples, etc. The apple is one of the best of fruits. Baked or stewed apples will generally agree with the most delicate stomach, and are an excellent medicine in many cases. Green or half-ripe apples stewed and sweetened are pleasant to the taste, cooling, nourishing, laxative, far superior in many cases to the abominable doses of salts and oil usually given in fever and other diseases. Raw apples stewed are better for constipation than some pills. Oranges are very acceptable to most stomachs, having all the advantages of the acid alluded to; but the orange juice alone should be taken, rejecting the pulp. The same may be said of lemons, pomegranates, and all that class. Lemonade is the best drink in fevers, and, when thickened with sugar, it is better than syrup of squills and other nauseants in many cases of cough. Tomatoes act on the liver and bowels, and are much more pleasant and safe than blue mass. The juice should be used alone, rejecting the skins. The small-seeded fruits, such as blackberries, figs, currants, may be classed among the best foods and medicines. The sugar in them is nutritious, the acid is cool and purifying, and the seeds are laxative. We would be much the gainers if we would look more to our orchards and gardens for our medicines and less to drug stores. To cure fevers or act on the kidneys, no febrifuge or diuretic is superior to watermelon, which may, with very few exceptions, be taken in sickness and in health in almost unlimited quantities, with positive benefit. But in using them, juice should be taken, excluding the pulp; and then the melon should be fresh and ripe.—Journal of Health.

THE ORGANIC CYCLE.—The idea of the indestructibility and ceaseless change of matter leads to curious reflections. Sir Henry Thompson has remarked that when an animal body decomposes, whether the process occupies four hours, four months, four years, or even four thousand years—any one of these periods being quite possible—those elements which assume the gaseous form mingle at once with the atmosphere, and are taken up from it without delay by the ever-open mouths of vegetable life. By a thousand pores in every leaf the carbonic acid which renders the atmosphere unfit for animal life is absorbed, the carbon being separated and assimilated to form the vegetable fibre, which, as wood, makes and furnishes our houses and ships, is burned for our warmth, or is stored up under pressure for coal. "All this carbon has played its part, and many parts, in its time, as animal existences from monad up to man. Our mahogany of to-day has been many negroes in its turn, and before the African existed was integral portions of many a generation of extinct species. And when the table, which has borne so well some twenty thousand dinners, shall be broken up from pure debility and consigned to the fire, thence it will issue into the atmosphere once more as carbonic acid, again to be devoured by the nearest troop of hungry vegetables—green peas or cabbages in a London market-garden, say—to be daintily served on the table which now stands in that other table's place, and where they will speedily go to the making of 'lords of creation.' And so on, again and again, as long as the world lasts."

Consumption Surely Cured.

To the Editor:

Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption, if they will send me their Express and P. O. address.

MEXICAN METHODISM.—When the war between the two great North American republics was ended, just forty years ago, an officer in the American Army on his way home stopped in the city where I now reside. He was a man of the highest order of natural ability, of first-class attainments, a public speaker of extended experience, and an orator of national fame. In church affiliation he was in sympathy with the Presbyterians. By request he made a speech, giving an account that saddened every heart of the devastation wrought in Mexico by the struggle, and drew a picture of the spiritual necessities of the people that affected profoundly the entire audience.

One old man near the door, who had been wrought up to a high pitch of excitement, called out from his seat: "What is the best thing to be done for them?"

"Organize and send among them a Conference of Methodist preachers," was the prompt reply of the speaker. What he then suggested has now been achieved, and by the blessed results which have followed his wisdom has been vindicated. Nearly three whole Conferences, comprising nearly a hundred Methodist preachers, of whom about seventy-five are Mexican Methodist preachers, are actively at work in this republic laboring for the salvation of the people.—Dr. Morton.

A Modest, Sensitive Woman

often shrinks from consulting a physician about functional derangement, and prefers to suffer in silence. This may be a mistaken feeling, but it is one which is largely prevalent. To all such women we would say that one of the most skillful physicians of the day, who has had a vast experience in curing diseases peculiar to women, has prepared a remedy which is of inestimable aid to them. We refer to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This is the only remedy for woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case or money refunded. See guarantee printed on bottle wrapper.

Moody is outspoken. Without slang or vulgarity or coarseness, he deals fearlessly with sin. Hear him: "I have received a letter from a gentleman telling me that he thinks it his Christian duty to tell me that I have not put the way of life before the people right, because I have not preached baptism. He says that I ought to give them an answer straight. That letter is written on paper with a 'wholesale whisky house' for a letter-head. Well, if that gentleman is here to-night, I want to give him a message straight: If you don't get out of that infernal whisky business, you'll be lost forever, baptism or no baptism. I hope that is straight enough." He deals tremendous blows against popular evils, and runs his plow-share down deep into the formalism of the age.—S. A. Steel.

Don't hawk, hawk, blow, spit, and disgust everybody with your offensive breath, but use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and end it.

"The Bible may be in the hand or house, and not in the heart. Pysiologists say that food is never really in the body until it is in the blood, and to put it there requires the process of digestion. The living bread of Christ must pass through the head and heart into the life-blood of character before the tissues of the soul can receive spiritual life and growth. When the celebrated Grimshaw first found Christ, he told a friend that 'if God had drawn up his Bible to heaven and sent him down another, it could not have been newer to him.' Yet the only difference was that between the Word in the hand and the Word in the heart; but how vast that difference!"—Christian Index.

How to Gain Flesh and Strength.

Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion with Hypophosphites. It is as palatable as milk, and easily digested. The rapidity with which delicate people improve with its use is wonderful. Use it and try your weight. As a remedy for Consumption, Throat affections and Bronchitis, it is unequaled. Please read: "I used Scott's Emulsion in a child eight months old with good results. He gained four pounds in a very short time."—THO. PRIM, M. D., Alabama.

OUR S. S. PERIODICALS,

— EDITED BY —

Rev. W. G. E. CUNNINGHAM, D. D.

Our Sunday-school periodicals should be used in all our schools.

They are authorized by the General Conference, prepared by our Editor; published by our House for the especial use and benefit of our people.

They are adapted to our wants, and should not be substituted by any other.

Preachers, Sunday-school officers, and all others interested in the furtherance of Southern Methodism, SEE TO IT that no undenominational or impure literature is used in our schools!

In matter and style it is equal to the best, and is cheaper than any other of equal grade.

All the moral and religious reasons that call for Methodist preachers, in Methodist pulpits, call for Methodist literature, in Methodist schools. Write for specimen copies.

The Sunday-School Magazine. A fifty-page monthly of acknowledged excellence, for the use of officers, teachers, and older scholars. With full expositions of the International Lesson Text; every number contains valuable hints as to the facts, principles, objects, methods and capabilities of Sunday-school work. No publication of equal merit is furnished at a less price. Think of it—600 pages yearly, postage paid, for the small sum of 50 cents.

The Senior Quarterly. A thirty-six page pamphlet devoted to lesson helps for scholars in advanced classes. Its value is enhanced by the introduction of appropriate forms for opening and closing exercises, hymns and tunes, maps, dictionary of proper names, etc.

Single subscriptions, in separate wrapper, per annum.....25c.
Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 15c
Five or more, to one address, per quarter, each 4c.

The Intermediate Quarterly. Similar to the above, but with such necessary changes as adapt it to the wants of scholars in the main school. It is marvelously cheap.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 7½c.
Five or more, to one address, per quarter, each 2c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum.....15c.

The Illustrated Lesson Paper is a four-page weekly, designed for younger scholars who have outgrown the infant class, but who retain their fondness for pictures and simple stories. 208 pages a year.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 10c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper.....20c.

Our Little People is a beautiful lesson sheet, four pages handsomely illustrated and printed on tinted paper; for primary or infant scholars. Each number contains, besides the lesson, a page or more of "baby-land" talk.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Representative Hitt's bill to promote commercial union with Canada, provides that whenever Canada declares a desire to established commercial union, the President shall appoint three commissioners to meet a similar commission from Canada and prepare a plan for the assimilation of the import duties and in the revenue taxes for the two countries, and an equitable division of receipts in a commercial union.

Henry Bergh, founder and president of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, died in New York City, March 12

The engineers and firemen on the vast system of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe railroad, went out on a strike, March 15. By this action thirty-two hundred miles of road are tied up. The boycott on the Burlington road, is said to be the motive of the move.

A memorial meeting in honor of the dead Emperor of Germany was held in this city on Thursday night, March 15.

The Immigration Convention of this State met in Shreveport, March 15.

The Indiana Prohibition Convention met in Indianapolis, March 15, with several hundred delegates present. The platform demands straight-out prohibition, and is in favor of female suffrage. Nominations were made for governor and other State officers.

On March 14, an angry mob of farmers tarred and feathered two Mormon elders near Brier Ridge Schoolhouse, Ohio, where the elders have been for some time trying to hold proselyting meetings.

On Friday morning, March 16, the first section of the Cuban fast mail train, from New York to Florida, was wrecked on a trestle near Blackshear, Ga. Nineteen persons were killed and about forty wounded. The engineer of the train is believed to have been asleep or under the influence of liquor.

The strike on the Santa Fe road ended March 18. The Burlington road was boycotted and the men have been ordered back to work.

The main building of the Green Dyeing and Finishing Works, of Pawtucket, R. I., were destroyed by fire March 18, with stock and machinery. Loss $100,000.

Rev. F. C. Holliday, one of the oldest and most widely known Methodist ministers in Indiana, died on the eighteenth instant, aged seventy-four years.

In the United States Supreme Court, on March 19, the validity of the Bell patent was affirmed. The statutes of Iowa against the transportation of liquor were declared invalid.

The strike on the Burlington road continues. It has received the indorsement of the Brotherhood in other sections of the country, and pledges of financial and other aid have been sent.

FOREIGN.

Reports received from Santa Barbara, Mexico, state that the houses of Protestants are being confiscated on every favorable occasion by fanatics and lay the blame at the door of Rev. Father Framas.

The Journal Officiel publishes a decree, depriving General Boulanger of his command for breach of discipline in visiting Paris three times without permission.

The Emin Bey relief committee has received news that Tipoo Tib passed a number of men to Stanley's camp on the Aruwimi, to take the reserve stores and munitions to Wadelai.

At a banquet given at Manchester, March 14, to the Irish political prisoners, Messrs. O'Brien, Sullivan, Blunt, Cox, Hooper, and Flynn were present and made speeches denouncing Chief Secretary Balfour.

Signor Crispi, the prime minister, in a debate in the Chamber of Deputies, March 17, on foreign affairs, defended the alliances Italy had made. He declared that he had always maintained that Italy ought to act in unison with Germany and Austria on European questions, and with England, on all maritime questions.

Mr. O'Brien, in his speech at Birmingham, on the seventeenth instant, said that Mr. Bright objected not to home rule, but to home rulers.

The latest reports from the scene of the Yellow river floods, in China, place the number of lives lost at 100,000, and the total number of sufferers from the inundation will reach nearly 2,000,000.

Mr. Bell, the United States Minister to Holland, who is in London, has received a dispatch notifying him of the acceptance of his resignation, which will take effect on May 1. Pressure of private business caused his return home. The Dutch newspapers express regret at the minister's departure.

The whole northern and eastern portion of Germany has been visited by a very severe snow-storm. There is so much ice that communication with Sweden has been suspended for ten days, and with Denmark for six days.

A conflict took place at Limerick, Ireland, on March 17, between the people and police. One man was badly injured.

At Dunly, county Longford, on March 15, a fight occurred between two factions numbering in all about 200 persons, most of whom were drunk. The police, trying to disperse the two factions, fired several rounds of buckshot, injuring many persons and retired to their barracks.

It is reported that the French government has decided to enshier Gen. Boulanger.

The week of self-denial and prayer, set apart for the betterment of our missionary contributions and work, begins April 1, and closes April 8.

WANTED.—Agents for the marvelous work, "Fifty Years in the Church of Rome." Address I. Q. REYNOLDS, 203 Lafayette street, New Orleans.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

The mayor of Chicago recently stopped the posting of indecent playbills and other pictures. Will none of the mayors of Mississippi and Louisiana come to the relief of the women, who in order to escape the licentious tendencies of the stage, refrain themself and restrain their children from such performances? Must the public streets and highways be used as a school for scandal and promoter of lust? Have we not laws against these indecent pictures which our officials ought to enforce?

IF WE HAD BUT A DAY.

BY MARY L. DICKENSON.

Should all the hours with the sweetest things
If we had but a day;
Should drink alone at the purest springs
In our upward way;
Should love with a lifetime's love in an hour
If the hours were few;
Should rest, not for dream, but for fresh power
To be and to do.

Should guide our wayward or wearied wills
By the clearest light;
Should keep our eyes on the heavenly hills
If they lay in sight;
Could trample the pride and the discontent
Beneath our feet;
Should take whatever a good God sent
With a trust complete.

Should waste no moments in weak regret
If the day were but one;
But we remember and what we forget
Went out with the sun.

Should be from our clamorous selves set free
To work or to pray,
To be what the Father would have us be,
If we had but a day.

The Spirit of Missions in Wesley Hall.

The readers of the ADVOCATE have had their attention called to the large number of students who enrolled themselves during the last year as volunteers for foreign mission work. The lists of Mr. Fareman, of Princeton Seminary, and of Mr. Wilder, of Union Seminary, N. Y., reported more than twenty-two hundred (550 of whom are women) from the colleges and seminaries of the United States and Canada. The hundreds reported from England bring the number to about three thousand.

Whence, let us ask, is this amazing outcropping of missionary zeal? Objectively, it may not really be as great as it seems. Very many of these volunteers, it may very truly be said, will never reach the foreign field; the Church Boards could not send them, and many will not take active steps to enter. But the figures give a fair representation of the spirit existing among students, both male and female, on this subject. It is certainly greater than ever before, and more widespread.

Several causes might be assigned for the great upheaval. The spirit of the whole church is growing in that direction. God is marshaling his forces for the mighty conquest. The world is drawing very close together, and men begin to realize the "brotherhood of man." But it is not on these causes, which certainly can not be questioned, that I wish to dwell at present. I would be more specific. How did it come about that last May twenty-six of our students expressed themselves as "desirous, God permitting, to engage in the work of foreign missions?" Can it be said that the personal consecration of this body of young men is greater than that of their predecessors? For, certainly, there were never so many who were ready to give their all to this work. I think not. The noble devotion of the great corps of workers who are now scattered over our land is rather an example for our emulation, an incentive to our zeal. If the body of students in Wesley Hall can be taken as an example, from which a conclusion may be drawn, the reason is, I think, to be looked for in another direction—in the more vital, practical, and better-informed view which is now taken on the subject.

For the promotion of a more intelligent and active interest in this department, especially of our church work, the best means that could be devised have been called into requisition. A great temperance worker in Maine, when asked how prohibition was carried in his State, replied: "We sowed it down knee-deep in prohibition literature." We have adopted in another department a like method, as being the only one that will be finally successful in procuring men and means for an immense missionary enterprise. Every man must be intelligently informed on any subject before he will be interested in it.

The students, with the kindly and most efficient aid and encouragement of our professors, set the problem before themselves for practical solution. Our missionary society has been set on a new footing, and has become one of the most prominent institutions among us. The full programme for a whole session's meetings, with the students appointed who shall serve, is printed at the beginning of the session, so that ample time is given each participant to make preparation and procure all the information he may wish, by writing, if need be, to the missionaries themselves, in the respective fields. At each meeting a mission field is discussed, or some subject vitally connected with this department of work. The exercises are always interesting, and the subjects discussed become peculiarly personal in their bearing.

Besides our own efforts, we are peculiarly favored in this metropolis of Southern Methodism (or Athens of the South, as many have called Nashville, on account of its large number of schools) with opportunities of procuring addresses from distinguished residents or visitors of our own and our sister churches. These addresses are chiefly on missionary topics, and often our hearts are fired with zeal for work in the many fields that call so loudly for laborers.

As a basis for all our operations, thanks to the happy conception of one of our professors, we have a reading-room of religious matter, of which anyone might be proud. Mr. and Mrs. Crawford, kinsmen of Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, in passing through the University recently, were especially pleased with the appointments of this room; said it did not have a superior, North or South, for its purpose. It is well supplied with all the leading missionary publications, and has, besides, nearly all of our own church papers, besides the chief papers and periodicals of other denominations. In addition to this, the offer is kindly made by our dean to put into the library any book that may be needed for the investigation of subjects connected with missions. Thus we have a storehouse of information which furnishes abundant answer to all our inquiries, and the ultimate intention is that it shall not only serve us, but anyone who may wish to avail himself of it. Letters addressed to Bishop McTyeire, or any member of the theological faculty, making inquiry upon any topic in connection with missions, will be submitted to safe hands, and be promptly replied to with the information requested, or directions for obtaining it.

Anything like an active use of such privileges can not but bring forth fruit. Although no stated expression has, as yet, been called for this year, as to who will engage in mission work, I dare say there is scarcely a man among us who would not willingly respond if called upon by the church to give his life's work to the foreign field. As the ball rolls, moreover, its size and momentum increase. The reacting force of the work done is very powerful. The living links between us and the distant fields become stronger and more numerous each year. The intervals are growing shorter between the departures of our class-mates and friends, and the number increases among us who will "be off" "this year," or "next year." Letters come in more and more frequently from the absent workers, full of the every-day, practical details that would come if they were only in a neighboring State. "I heard from Bro. ——— to-day, from Japan. He's getting on finely, etc. Love to all the boys," are words that put Japan only a little further away than next door. The subject is no longer relegated to the stars and flowers of high-pitched oratory (Heaven pity the cause worth a following that is thus situated), but is brought down to the prosaic and practical plane of any duty or day's work. The call has ceased to come like the indistinct echo of the cry of some far-off "perishing world." The proposition is squarely and quietly made by the mouth of an entirely "human" man, or appears on a very palpable piece of paper in a familiar hand, telling us that there is a town close by, where the devil is holding high carnival, which is dreadfully in need of some one to "start" a prayer meeting or a school, or "get up" a congregation for a church. After dining for a while on a generous diet of good, wholesome information, such a call as this comes in a light so thoroughly feasible and practicable, and thus actually "to me, personally," that a man feels almost like pinching himself to see if it is really the same person who, a short while back, seemed to have his head in a fog whenever there was any talk about being a "missionary." Thank God, the sun rises and shines for men to "get up and go to work" almost as regularly now in China or Brazil as it does in Tennessee, and a person can see about as well by it there as here. May the day be hastened when we shall no longer see men dimly there "as trees walking," but as the thoroughly tangible animal that talks and laughs, works, gets hungry and eats, and sleeps just as we do!

The home work, however, is by no means neglected. We do not look for every man to be a missionary any more than we expect every man to join the Louisiana Conference, though we want them all to be interested, deeply interested in missions, just as we would want them to be interested in Louisiana if the church there were left without means of self-support, and with only a half-dozen men to uphold it.—This is merely a supposed case, Mr. Editor, without intimation even of its possibility. My Louisiana brethren here shall have no cause to lodge complaint against me.

At each meeting of the missionary society two of the home Conferences are presented by men from within their own bounds, and it has become a well-established and admitted fact that each man has the greatest State and the finest Conference; so that now, on this special point, they have merely to make the statement and leave out the proof. By these Conference studies, and with the Conference papers and Minutes supplied in our reading-room, all parts of our territory are very fairly canvassed, and we begin to feel like eagles in their nest on a rock, with every point of the heavens inviting a long flight. We only bewail our milky pinions.

This letter may not have reported the more solemn view of foreign mission work, but it is to be hoped that it is not less deep nor less thoroughly permeated with true devotion. The closer a man comes to the work that God has appointed him to do, the grander it will appear. The more intelligent and more ready his response to the call of duty, the more intense will be his prayer for guidance and strength. The outline of a dark shore is presented to us, but the eye of an unfaltering faith sees the fields all golden and green, laden with many precious sheaves and spreading luxuriant pastures at our feet. There is a noble craft preparing for the voyage, planned and fitted up in heaven, though launched by human hands. The decks of "The Spirit of Missions" are ever swelling for a fuller crew. God speed the day when she shall finally cast anchor in her "foreign" port, then no longer "foreign," but "home."

LANGHORNE LEITCH.

VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY, March 13, 1888.

"The Agony in the Garden and Death on the Cross."

The idea that God can suffer and did suffer in the person of Christ in the garden and on the cross is "horrible" to my good Bro. Cameron. I am somewhat surprised at this. I thought, perhaps, his first article was written hastily, without having considered the subject carefully; hence I called attention to it. Some of the young men are interested in this subject, and they may as well read up on it. I am surprised that so well instructed a scribe as Bro. Cameron should take the horrors over a suggestion found in nearly all the standard writers of our Wesleyan Arminianism. Our Second Article says: "Two whole and perfect natures were joined together in one person, never to be divided, whereof is one Christ, very God and very man, who truly suffered, was crucified, dead, and buried, to reconcile his Father to us, and to be a sacrifice, not only for original guilt, but also for actual sins of men." Why should Bro. Cameron be shocked at this? It is not a new thing, not a whim or notion of mine. It is the doctrine and teaching of the Methodist Church that both the human and divine nature of Christ were present and participating in all that involved the humiliation, agony and death of our Lord. As I said before, "the agony in the garden and the suffering on the cross lay deeper than the human nature of our Lord." Christ came to reconcile God to man as well as man to God, as this article plainly teaches; and so teach all our books. The work of mediation involved the nature and character of God as well as the nature and character of man. It took more than a man, and nothing short of God, to redeem. Hence, I do not want God—the divine nature—taken out of, or separated from, Christ from the moment of his conception by the Holy Ghost, through the agony in the garden, death on the cross, nor while his body lay dead in Joseph's new tomb—no, nor through the eternal years of God. God and man are united in Christ forever, "never to be divided." I only modestly entered my protest against what seemed to be a separation of the human and divine natures in the supreme moments of Christ's earthly life.

Perhaps Bro. Cameron and others might not be so shocked if they were to find the substance of what I have said in our books of theology. Dr. Summers, in "Systematic Theology," says: "Christ was very God, and also very man, and so he truly suffered." Then, translating the Latin: "There was real divinity, real humanity, and real suffering." Again, he says: "The higher and holier the nature of the sufferer, the more exquisite is the suffering."

Dr. Pope, in his "Compendium of Christian Theology," says: "Nor must we shrink from applying the term 'humiliation' to our Lord's person: not to his divinity, but to his person, as divine-human." Again: "Any theory of our Lord's humiliation which assumes the possibility of his relinquishment or suppression of any divine attribute is self-condemned." "His work began as a suffering Redeemer, with the submission to conception and birth. Hence the person and work can not be separated. And the humiliation which the Redeemer underwent must be regarded as the humiliation of the God-man." Speaking of Christ in the tomb, Pope says: "His divinity never left his body."

The agony in the garden and the suffering on the cross are too high for me, because they involve "God in Christ reconciling the world unto himself." I do not understand it. It is unique and singular. No illustration from human experience helps me with this profound mystery of human redemption. I have so long been reading in our books passages, like those quoted above, that the idea of the God-man—God and man in one person—suffering has come to be very sweet and solemn to me. It greatly enhances the dignity, value, virtue and God-like glory of the redeeming work of my Lord. The quotations from all our books could be multiplied until they would fill number after number of this paper. Let us study closely the mediatorial ministry of Christ. To be right on this will give light on nearly every other subject in theology, and to be wrong on this will be darkness, if not death, everywhere else.

Yours, GILDEROY.

The Week of Self-Denial and Prayer.

To the Preachers and Laymen of the Mississippi Conference—

MY DEAR BRETHREN: You will not think me unduly officious if I offer a few words of exhortation on the approach of our "week of self-denial and prayer."

In the first place, our college of Bishops and Board of Missions are composed of men in whose piety, devotion to the church and godly judgment we have implicit confidence. Their fidelity in the past impresses us that our confidence, in promoting them to the high places of trust and responsibility which they occupy, was not misplaced. Now, wherever and whenever a systematic plan and the engagement of the whole church is necessary to the success of an enterprise, authority to devise such plan, with the methods needful to carry it out, must be lodged somewhere, and a ready and cheerful co-operation of the entire church given to it. Had this been done last year, there would have been no need of a second call to meet our present indebtedness. But, in place thereof, there would have been a large surplus now in the treasury with which to meet the new and increasing demands upon us, and this second appointment might be for the further development of "the grace of liberality" in the church, and in providing more liberally for the great mission field, now white unto the harvest! In those congregations where it was observed last year we have demonstration of the wisdom of the measure, not only for raising funds to meet an emergency, but as a most successful means of diffusing missionary information and permeating the church with the spirit of the mission work generally, besides proving a means of grace in developing the spirituality, devotion and personal piety of the membership.

The gratifying results in our Conference last year should inspire confidence and insure a more general observance this year. Let me urge you, my brethren in the ministry, to heed this call. The Board of Missions is looking to you. The Bishops are looking to you. Our devoted and self-sacrificing missionaries are looking anxiously to you. The whole church is looking to you. Your own pastoral charges are looking to you and expecting you to take the lead in this matter. If you fail to do it, you will fail to meet expectation, and an expectation, we believe, inspired and born of the Spirit. I would advise those on circuits to devote the whole month of April to it. You can not give your time, talents and hearts to a better work. Give every church an opportunity. Send at once, if you have not already done so, to Dr. Barbee or Dr. John for a supply of leaflets. Scatter them broadcast; send your prayers with them, and bid them go as seeds of life upon the wings of the wind, and fall as plantings of the Lord in the waiting soil. If you can not get these in time for the week of prayer, they are good to follow up your sermons, exhortations and prayers. Send for them by all means, and circulate them as early as you can. They will be furnished you gladly—just for the sending.

Some of you are preparing sermons for Easter. I have no objection, if your purpose is to honor God by holding up in a clear light the glorious doctrine of a "risen Christ." But proclaim the "risen Christ" as the Savior of the world, for the want of the knowledge of whom thousands—yea, millions are perishing in heathen darkness, and take advantage of your subject and the occasion to lay before your people the claims of missions.

Let me, in closing, urge upon you, the laity of the church, to co-operate, earnestly and gladly, with your pastors in this work. True, you may have a great many calls upon your liberality, but none too many for your good. Every collection taken, if legitimate, may become a means of grace, and will to everyone who gives properly. Do not discourage your pastor by murmuring a cold shoulder to his honest, faithful efforts. But hold up his hands and support him by your money and influence. Your church needs the benefits of the practice of self-denial and prayer. Try it, and you will find a blessing in it. I pray that God may bless you, as pastors and laymen, and crown your labors with such success, in the churches and the mission work, as we have not yet witnessed.

R. S. WOODWARD,
Pres. Conf. B'd Miss.

Something to Think About.

In all normal populations the sexes are about equal. But in Christian countries more than two-thirds of the membership of the various branches of the church are women; but of the sixty thousand convicts in the penitentiaries in the United States fifty-five thousand of them are men. The congregations who attend the various churches are by a large majority composed of females; but the congregations who attend the saloons, the billiard tables and gambling hells are by an overwhelming majority males. The people who pray and remember their Creator are for the most part ladies; but the vast majority of those who profanely swear and take God's name in vain are males. Has church attendance and non-attendance anything to do with these widely different results? These facts are vastly significant and eminently worthy of serious consideration.

A. B. WALKER.

An infidel, with a sneer, once remarked that most of the men who went to church were old men—in fact, "gray heads." "Yes," replied a friend of mine, "that is quite true; and, on the other hand, you seldom find many gray-heads in a gathering of infidels, for the reason that the devil kills off his followers young." "The wicked shall not live out half their days." Faith in Christ makes not only for immortality, but for length of days upon the earth, while sin cuts short the years of the sinner's life here, and consigns him to the second death in you other world.

—Nearly every man is surrounded by three circles of friends—those of the outer circle, wishing him well; those in the next circle willing to help him; while close up to his heart are a few who would die for him. God pity him who has no friends!

THE REAPERS.

When the first reapers, with fragrant sheaves,
Come out of the corn, as the sun goes down,
And the sky is rich as the falling leaves
In crim son and purple and golden brown;
I look up the yellow and marvelous eves
And watch as the hoon of the sunset weaves
Its veil of gold over country and town.

And I think how the summers have come and gone
Since we saw the shuttle across the loom
That wove the colors of dusk and dawn
When first the cross of the sleeping rose flew.
On the wings of the south wind over the lawn,
And the evening shadows were longer drawn,
And the sun was low, and the stars were few;

When love was sweet in the lives we led
As the leaves that lives in the latter spring
To grow in the flowers, the books we read,
The rompand rush of the grapevine swing,
Or, words and work to be filled and led
Oatbrooks of honey and wastel bread,
And sung in the songs that we used to sing.

And out of the shadows they come to me,
As flowers of the spring come year by year,
The lovers we had when love was free,
The stars were few and the skies were clear,
And we knew it was emptiness just to be,
Through the slopes of the cloud-land fair to see
While the weary reapers are drawing near.

Though the red and white roses have lost their leaves,
Their light wiles of summers of long ago,
They come, through the mellow old marvelous eves,
With the harvest of love that we used to sow
As rich as the garlands the sunset weaves
When the tired reapers, with fragrant sheaves,
Come out of the corn and the sun is low.

Our Texas Correspondence.

Mr. Editor: I have been in such a brain-wracking whirligig since I last wrote that I fear I've lost all powers of concentration. I have attended teas, lunches, dinngs, etc., until, shall I say, I have immolated myself.

My hospitable entertainment here is over—

"The lights all fled,
The garlands dead;"

but I shall not soon forget the generous welcome and hearty greetings of these lovely people; and it was indeed a regretful good-bye that I waved back to the queenly little city from my window in the car as I was borne rapidly away.

There were many interesting things along the route, but I will considerately refrain from particulars, for this region of country has been so often described that further essay in that direction would be superfluous; but, as I looked out over the almost boundless prairies, I think it gave me some idea of the immensity of Texas' area, and I can not refrain from clipping an extract from Maj. Elliott's "Hand-Book of Texas," which will be new to many. He says:

"The number of organized counties is 195, and unorganized, 48. The more clearly to illustrate its size it is observed that it is a little more than equal in area to Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Ohio and Indiana combined. This would give to each man, woman and child in the United States to-day three acres of land."

The capitol syndicate have a ranch in the Panhandle embracing 3,000,000 acres (the land which paid for the capitol building). The whole ranch is under fence; the length of the fence is over 500 miles, probably the longest fence in the world. 125,000 cattle roam over this vast pasture, and are kept fat on the splendid grass. The water supply is from 150 wells with an average depth of 70 feet. To show you how fast this imperial land is being settled, I will say that the land commissioner told me that the land sales amounted to 75,000 acres per month. This same land commissioner had in his office a stalk of Palma Christie ten feet tall, which grew in the Staked Plains. He said also that the finest sweet potato he had ever seen grew in the same locality; so the plums of Texas do literally blossom as the rose. If those early emigrants who came toiling over the barren, sandy wastes from old Santa Fe could revisit those scenes, what a transformation they would see! for right where they set up the stakes and buffalo heads to mark their trail through this pathless desert can be found just such specimens of vegetation as I've spoken of.

But to resume, for I have made quite a digression, when I reached Marshall, Texas, I felt that I was indeed among "the elements of my surroundings," as somebody said up at the Shreveport Conference; but, look which way I would, only changes met my eye. Time was when old Harrison county was peopled with rich and chivalrous planters, whose broad domains swept away in endless acres—each planter a prince, each plantation a little principality; but

"Waste are those pleasant farms, and the farmers forever departed!
Scattered like the dust and leaves when the mighty blasts of October
Seize them, and whirl them aloft, and sprinkle them far o'er the ocean."

But as I look far over the changed landscape, there bursts upon my vision, through "the forest primeval," a glimpse of my childhood's home! The old house spreads out her white wings over the fields and woodlands in a protecting way, like a tender mother to her children; the big front gate, which in the olden time had such a hospitable swing, is bolted now against the imprint of one vandal foot. There must the old place stand till all the sturdy men and gentlewomen who have walked into life through those wide portals are brought back enfolded—their throbbing hearts, aching brains and toiling hands to rest forever in the little graveyard hard by. I look far around to find one cheerful thing, but

"I hear a voice low, in the sunset woods—
Listen. It says, Decay, decay, decay:
I hear it in the murmur of the floods,
And the wind sighs it as it flies away."

And now, Mr. Editor, after thanking you for all editorial courtesies, I will say, Good-bye—"it may be for years, and it may be forever;" and the only favor I ask of you is, don't be too jubilant over my absence.

Yours truly,

SHREVEPORT.

Columbus District, Mississippi Conference.

To the Preachers in Columbus District, North Mississippi Conference:

Dear Brethren: You are already arranging your plans for the week of prayer and self-denial, April 18. Let us unite to make it of the utmost value, both in contributions to the missionary treasury and in the spiritual results of true self-denial. It is important that the people meet you promptly and heartily in the places you hold the religious exercises. Urge them to meet you. Can you not spend the preceding week in preparing their minds for the appointed week? Let nothing check or discourage you. It is the Master's cause. Remember, the people need information. Give them facts concerning our mission work. Dr. John will send each one of you a package of missionary literature suitable for your purpose. Distribute this well among the people. Go to their houses, talk and pray with them. Lead them to understand that self-denial is a fundamental element in spiritual life and Christian enterprise. You will, no doubt, find the people very busy with their daily affairs. Tell them that self-denial is not giving the Lord the excess of surplus after all natural demands are satisfied, but is taking a part—all, if need be—of the very substance of living—time and material—and giving it to the service of the Divine Master. Most of you are on circuits, and may find it impracticable to hold service at each preaching-place during that week. In that case, give the whole week to one or two, where two are near, and the next week to one or two others, and so on, giving the month of April to this work. Enlist the children. Get each one to do something, and to observe special secret prayer and reading of the Scriptures. I do pray the blessing of the Holy Spirit upon you in this great work. The Lord has given us a great opportunity. Let us use it faithfully, not only for the financial benefit to our mission work, but also for the greater benefit of the lesson in self-denial, of which we have yet to learn so much. Who of us really denies himself? Your brother,

W. T. J. SULLIVAN, P. E.

"Where Are the Nine?"

Mr. Editor: A few weeks ago I sent a cyclostyle letter to about thirty different papers, in which I suggested, in a tentative way, a scheme for a "Southern Temperance Publishing House," in which it was proposed that ten men should subscribe $500 each, and become directors in the enterprise, and that $5,000 more—making the entire capital stock $10,000—should be distributed among the several Woman's Christian Temperance Unions of the States contributing, which Unions should name a like number of directors, making twenty in all, to whom the entire conduct of the enterprise should be intrusted, the object being the dissemination of temperance publications, and the founding and conduct of a strong, vigorous, fearless temperance organ for the discussion of live issues in the Southern States.

To this letter, as published in the Sugar Bowl, March 3, Capt. John N. Pharr, one of the largest and most intelligent sugar planters in the State, immediately responded in the next issue of the paper:

"I have just read W. H. Goodale's letter on a Southern Temperance Publishing House; think it a good thing, and Mr. Goodale can count me one of his ten men to take $500 of stock in his Publishing House, and, just as soon as the other nine subscribers are secured, I am ready to pay my subscription."

Thanks to the captain. May his good example prove infectious! Please ask the friends of temperance for us, "Where are the nine?"

Yours, very truly,

The Administration of the Lord's Supper.

There are two classes of persons to whom the Lord's Supper ought not to be administered: those who are not members of the church, and members of the church who are suspended. To administer it to those who are not members of the church is to confer upon them one of the highest privileges of the church, and, besides, to render meaningless the following words which our ministers are required to use during the reception of members into the church: "Bid you welcome to all its privileges." (Discipline, page 245.) To administer it to members of the church who are suspended is to inflict no punishment upon them at all; and, besides, to make suspension mean nothing. The invitation to receive the Lord's Supper (Discipline, page 218) is strictly to members of the church who are not suspended.

GROSSE TETE AND FALSE RIVER CIRCUIT.

Mr. Editor: We have just held our first quarterly meeting for this circuit at Rosedale, and, although the weather was extremely inauspicious, there were a number of persons in attendance on Sabbath. The presiding elder, Dr. Evans, was at his post in piety, preaching power and executive ability, building up and strengthening us. We reported to the Quarterly Conference, for the quarter ending with this meeting, the holding of prayer and experience meetings, an excellent love-feast, besides the regular stated preaching, the baptizing of one infant, the receiving of eleven members into church fellowship, two by profession of faith and nine by certificate. We revived, too, the old-time office of exhorter, by electing unanimously to that office our young brother, Isaac T. Reames, recommended as a suitable person to receive exhorter's license by the society at Kelson. The Annual Conference is now receiving returns for her persistent siege and zealous efforts in holding this, one of the garden-spots of Louisiana. She has sent the present incumbent to this circuit the maximum of the legal term, simply to hold the fort until the country could be redeemed from its annual inundations, by good dykes and levees. Now that this work has been accomplished, and the levee protection better than it has ever been, the tide of emigration is setting in in this direction, and sensible men are coming to a country, the soil of which, from its fertility, will richly remunerate them for lost labor and sweat spent in its cultivation. The State has been acting for the temporal wants of the people, and now the church must act for their higher being. We must meet them with an ecclesiastical home, cordially. They can never find us in out-houses, barns, and private houses. We must have a befitting house, whose spire and out-sounding bell will tell them where the Methodists are. You can not always find men with the pious zeal of Mr. Fletcher, who said he would find them if they were above ground. With this view we have in contemplation the building of a church edifice at Arbroth, and we humbly beg the preachers to help us, and make this circuit a good appointment, desirable for any preacher. I do not say of the Louisiana Conference only, but of all the Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the Bishops can draw a man from any part of the connection. It will have to be a new man next year. As I see things now, I would be glad to be returned; but, according to rule, that can not be. "Cammunchi" has entered upon his fifth year, and the rider upon his fourth year; so, that if we live in the nature of things, we shall have to be sent to a new field next year, and I hope the presiding Bishop will have a merciful consideration for my horse, which has carried me safely several years. He is good, though dumb, and, if I forget to speak for him, he will have no one to represent him. But only one preacher can be sent to succeed me. All in the connection can not; but, fortunately, all can respond to the building of the church—the "Earnest Call." Many have already done so, and greatly encouraged my heart; some, too, at a distance. The church is needed, and must be built, and I believe it will be. Please let us hear from you, dear brethren and sisters, and we will agree to write you a letter of thanks, besides publishing it in the Christian Advocate, at New Orleans. A means is now offered you of cultivating and causing to grow in you that grand grace of liberality. The call at a distance is one dollar each; but we do not propose to confine the contributors to that sum, but to their own liberality. They can give as much more as they wish, and also use their influence in provoking others to give when an opportunity may present itself. We are satisfied if all will respond promptly, and send us a dollar. We fixed it at that sum that it may be within the reach of all. The brother who may succeed me will be the happier in his appointment for having contributed. It will be a sort of introduction to the people. All will feel more pleasant; whereas, if he does not contribute, he will feel it all the year. It matters not how he may be engaged, the thought will come up and remind him that he failed to respond to the "Earnest Call," or to influence a friend to do so. Our desire is to erect a church at Arbroth, from money sent as a free-will offering to the Lord.

LEWIS A. REED, P. C.

AUSTRALIA, MISS.

Mr. Editor: This preacher has great reason to be thankful to our heavenly Father; his goodness and mercy have followed us all the days of our lives, and special manifestations of it appear in my assignment to the Australia and Rosedale charge. Such a reception and subsequent treatment accorded us by this generous people are not often experienced by any Methodist preacher. They "loaned" us a small, but comfortable house until a parsonage could be built. Two weeks ago we moved into the new parsonage—a comfortable house of five rooms, nicely furnished. We were "heavily pounded" on our arrival and during the Christmas holidays, and it has continued almost daily in a most substantial way to this good hour.

The people of Rosedale are growing quite enthusiastic over the project of a new church. An architect has kindly offered to furnish a plan, and we expect to complete the building before the next Annual Conference. Notwithstanding excessive bad weather and mud, we have missed but few services. The Sunday-schools have maintained their organizations, and have done much good work.

The outlook is promising in every department of church work. My good wife and I are profoundly grateful to God, and are making stronger efforts than ever to advance the interests of his kingdom.

Fraternally,

T. Y. RAMSEY, JR.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

Mr. Editor: We are glad to report the Greenville district obeying the injunction to "go forward." We have had over fifty additions to the church since Conference. We have deeded already to build eight churches this year, and the people of Australia have just finished an elegant parsonage at a cost of about $1,500. The people of Clarksdale and Lula propose to have each a house for the preacher. There is now only one preacher in the district paying house rent. We are praying earnestly for a grand revival all over the district this year. Bro. Bowen has had one at Greenville, and Bro. Shamker has one in progress at Arcola.

The question has been asked, "Why does the Greenville district not pay up its Conference assessments as it used to?" Why anyone acquainted with the facts should ask such a question we can not imagine; but that the truth may be known we give the following statistics, taking the foreign missionary assessment as a basis: In 1880, 826 members were assessed $155, and paid $171. We have no data for 1881, but in 1882, 1,104 members were assessed $186. The overflow came, and they paid only $97 70. We have no Minutes of 1883. In 1884 the district was assessed $481. We had another overflow—the third in succession; and only $90 60 was paid. In 1885 the assessment was raised to $720. The people were poor and disheartened, having lost one-fourth of the membership and, perhaps, half their property on account of the overflows; but 764 members paid $237 15 for foreign missions in 1885. For 1886 these 864 members were assessed $675—more than three times the amount assessed 1,104 members in 1882. They paid $219 25; but the people continued to move away, and the membership was reduced to 730. In 1887 we were assessed $445, and paid $521, or fifty-nine cents for every member. And, notwithstanding our assessment has been very much increased, we will pay every dollar this year, if no terrible calamity befalls us.

There is another matter that the brethren of the district think should be corrected. Bro. Malone, writing to the Nashville Advocate, of December 17, 1887, says: "Before I forget I will say that Winona district wears the palm on the missionary collections. It paid $154 above its assessment for foreign missions, and paid every other collection in full." As Bro. Malone was editing the Minutes, we p sumed that he spoke authori tively, and held our peace. B when the Minutes came out, th showed quite a different state facts. They showed that Greenville district alone o paid its assessment for fore missions; that the Winona d trict fell below its assessm for foreign missions $97 45, a paid no assessment in full exce the Bishop's Fund; and know what Bro. Shanks about that. The Minutes further that Winona district only twenty-four cents per me ber for foreign missions, Greenville district paid nine cents per member, every other assessment in Now, either the Minutes wrong, or Bro. Malone wrong. If the Minutes wrong, correction should made in justice to Winona trict. If Bro. Malone wrong, he should, ere this, apologized to the Greenville trict, for which he professes have such a tender regard.

We ask the brethren of district to send us anything may have of interest, and will try, by "occasional notes" to keep all posted as to progress of the work in the trict. Yours, etc.,

J. A. RANDOLPH.

Justice to Mrs. Job.

Job was a wonderfully afflic man, but, as a partial compen tion for it, he has had the s pathy of the human race 4,000 years. But it has not b so with Job's wife; nobody ever spoken a kind word of On the contrary, she has b held up for forty centuries horrible example. But for that we are confident the woman deserves a better p in history than she has ever enjoyed. If she was sour-t pered, she had enough to give acid tinge to her disposi She was made to drink the d from a very bitter cup, and probable that she bore trouble with about as equanimity as the average wo would do.

In the first place, she was deply reduced from luxury penury. Any unfortunate wo who has suffered this or knows just the frame of poor Mrs. Job was in.

In the next place, she bereft of her children. The no grief so burdensome as which falls upon a moth heart when the grave hides children from sight.

In addition to this accum tion of sorrows, she was with an invalid husband on hands. Job was covered boils, and experience has ta us that there is no more exas ating patient than a man wi boil on him. There are wi and good wives, too, in Christian land of ours wh lives have been made most m erable for days and weeks time by a husband and one Just think, then, what this woman had to endure wit husband with, perhaps, from to 1,000 boils on him. Is it wonder that the woman enco aged her husband to termin his existence? The only wond is that she didn't cut her throat in despair.

But these were not all troubles that Job's wife had bear. Her husband's frie came on a visit to him and possession of the house for weeks at a time. Ancient Infant Baptism.

n Paul Henri Mallett's book, rthern Antiquities, volume I.," ges 335-6; some curious facts given about the baptism of ants among several races of ple who had no knowledge of rist, or of his teaching, though er his personal advent into world. These facts are very ious, and we give them to our ders in order to show that so n as circumcision ceased, bap- came into practice, even ong heathen nations. We the quotations, as we find in The Outlook, a monthly lication:

fant Baptism in the North of Europe.

It is no less remarkable that nd of infant baptism was prac- d in the North; long before first dawning of Christianity reached these parts. Snorro rleson, in his Chronicles, aking of Norwegian noble- , who lived in the reign of rold Harfrage, relates that he ared water on the head of a -born child, and called him em, from the name of his her. Harold himself had been tized in the same manner; and noted of King Olave Tryg- on, that his mother Astride him thus baptized and named soon as he was born. The onians observed the same mony, which also prevailed ong the Germans. It is liable that all these people ht intend by such a right reserve their children from sorceries and evil charms h wicked spirits might em- against them at the instant their birth. Several nations Asia and America have attrib- such a power to ablutions of kind.—Nor were the Romans out such a custom, though did not confine it wholly to -born infants."

Baptism among the Banians.

The Banians were the ancient es of India. A form of bap- was practiced among them onnection with the naming of dren soon after their birth. lower class were simply hed and consecrated by a of prayer. Children of the her castes were washed, and forehead was anointed with intment and a pen was then aced against the forehead, act being accompanied by the owing prayer: 'That God ld write good things in front the child.' To this prayer assembled company re- nded with an equivalent en.' The high caste chil- n were further consecrated; priest saying a prayer as fol- s. 'Oh, Lord, we present ther this child, born of a tribe, anointed with oil cleansed with water.' The mony closed with the prayer the child 'might be a right- observer of the rites of the lanias.'"

Baptism among the Parsees.

The ancient Parsees, fire- shipers of India, practiced nt baptism as follows: Soon r its birth the child is taken temple, and clear water is red upon it from the bark of holme tree, which is 'held red, and which they say casts shadow. This 'pouring' is ompanied with the prayer that will 'cleanse the child from uncleanness of his father and pollution of his mother. child is named at the same e."—Central Methodist.

"Nearer, My God, to Thee."

A lady who was wounded in Chatsworth disaster was in rear car with her husband en the accident occurred. A rt time after they left Peoria arty of six young people en- ed, and in order that they ight have seats together, the y and her husband removed the far end of the car. Their rtesy saved their lives, for young man and his bride, o took the places so kindly en up, were both instantly led a few hours later. The y says that she thinks the ng people belonged to a upe of concert singers, and re now off for recreation and t. They were all very merry, l sang and laughed and told ries—anticipating the pleas- s of the journey—until late the night. Nearly everyone in car, except the joyful party, s quiet, when some one re- sted the young bride to sing weet Hour of Prayer." At t there was a tremor in the eet voice, but it grew stronger she proceeded. When

"In seasons of distress and grief
My soul has often found relief," ng out clear and firm, other ices instinctively joined in the familiar song. People awak- ened out of their sleep, sat upright, or leaned forward to catch the plaintive words that trembled upon the poor, young lips.

As the train sped on in the darkness, far down the track the gleam of the death-dealing fire appeared, but the voices that swelled forth in a glad burst of song:

"Yet in my dreams I'd be Nearer, my God, to thee,"

faltered not at the danger into which the train, laden with its precious freight of human souls, was unconsciously plunging.

Faster sped the chariot of death down the grade, and sweeter, more triumphant, welled the song:

"There let the way appear,
Steps unto heaven."

Ah! If the singers had only known it, the way was already in sight, and perhaps

"All that Thou sendest me,
In mercy given."

would have been more of a sigh than a song.

Then with only an inch of time between them and the life beyond—even when brave McClintock, steady at his post, was giving his last desperate wrench to the throttle of his engine that had never failed him before, the sweet singers sang their farewell earth-song, sang to their God, who, even in this dark hour, still kept the everlasting arms around, about and underneath them:

"Angels to beckon me,
Nearer, my God, to Thee."

As if in answer to the prayer they breathed, with the glad refrain still echoing through the air, the crash came, the lifework of each was finished,

"So by my woes to be,
Nearer, my God, to Thee."

was not ended on earth, for right into the very jaws of death rushed the screaming engines, and then, like a bolt of love, the cars crashed through each other, killing and crushing as the foot grinds the worm. It took but a moment to pile that heap of splintered timbers, and broken bones, and bleeding flesh, but death was there, just as certainly, surrounded by all that tends to make it terrible, and among the mangled corpses lay these six singers not in their dreams, but in reality, nearer their God than ever before.

Inquiry elicited the fact that these merry young people had a right to be joyful, for they were all servants of the blessed Master, and could have completed the song as they went down into the valley of death:

"Or if, on joyful wing
Cleaving the sky,
Sun, moon and stars forget,
Upward I fly,
Still all my song shall be,
Nearer, my God, to Thee,
Nearer to thee."

—Presbyterian Observer.

A Tremendous Sensation

would have been created one hundred years ago by the sight of one of our modern express trains whizzing along at the rate of sixty miles an hour. Just think how our grandfathers would have stared at such a spectacle! It takes a good deal to astonish people now-a-days, but some of the marvelous cures of consumption, wrought by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, have created widespread amazement. Consumption is at last acknowledged curable. The "Golden Medical Discovery" is the only known remedy for it. If taken at the right time—which, bear in mind, is not when the lungs are nearly gone—it will go right to the seat of the disease and accomplish its work as nothing else in the world can.

THE DAMNATION ARMY.—This organization is very complete. It has hundreds of thousands of recruiting officers and drill-rooms. Its officers stand behind the bar, well-fed, ruddy-nosed, portly, and self-possessed. The rank and file are in front of the bar in every condition of destruction and dilapidation; from the high-toned swell, the proud aristocrat, the inheritor of millions, and the rising politician, down to the little boy, the wan-faced girl, and the seedy-looking tatterdemalions, poverty-stricken, wretched, helpless, noisy, criminal, degraded, disensed and insane. It gathers its recruits young, bright, intelligent, gay, witty and brilliant; and it turns out its veterans bold, brazen, degraded, debauched, disensed, ruined and lost. It marches its solid columns down the dark gorges of intemperance and crime until they stream over the precipices of perdition and melt into the blackness of darkness forever! The damnation army brings its recruits from the homes of joy and peace and love; it sends its veterans away into sorrow, misery and destruction, from which they never return.—Christian Arm.

Civilization Saving the Heathen.

The Church Missionary Intelligencer shows how the British government and the East India Company were shamed out of their base patronage to Indian idolatry. Sir Peregrine Maitland accepted from the East India Company the office of commander-in-chief of the Madras Army, and a seat in the Council, an office worth $50,000 a year, only on the condition that he should not be required to have any official connection with the idolatry of the country. He knew how the company had catered to the heathen ceremonies of India, even making large grants for their support. A few days after his arrival in Madras he received from the company's office in London a document sanctioning the appointment and payment of dancing girls in a certain Hindoo temple, to which he was expected to affix his signature. He resolved to throw up his lucrative appointment and return to England, rather than put his hand to any such scheme. The company declined to excuse Sir Peregrine, and, although comparatively poor, he sacrificed his $50,000 and returned to England. The annual festival of the goddess Yayagathal, the protectress of a part of Madras, was approaching; and the annual ceremony of marrying the East India Company to the image of this goddess was to be performed with great pomp. The goddess was borne in procession around the "black town," and then brought to government headquarters; a high official of the company came out, with a handsome Cashmere shawl as a bridal present to the idol, and an ornament to be put around the bride's neck, the latter being used in native marriages in place of a ring, while repeating the words, "With this I thee wed," etc. The East India Company and the idol Yayagathal were thus pronounced husband and wife. Two missionaries in Madras united to caricature the scene. One wrote a minute description, the other, with graphic pencil, made a telling sketch of the nuptial scene. These were sent home. Bishop Blomfield carried them to the House of Lords, held them up to view, and declared that if the connection between the East India Company and the idol system of India was not abolished, he would send the letter and the cartoon broadcast throughout the land. This was sufficient. The absurdity and degradation were potent. Probably a petition signed by all the missionaries in India would scarcely have been so effective.—The Church.

A Noble Knighthood.

The overtaxed brain is liable to give way in the very hour of professional success. Long years of sturdy intellectual labor are thus nullified by the breaking down of the only source of capital which the minister, physician, lawyer, journalist or active merchant relies on for his future triumphs. The Rev. E. D. Curtis, of Saugatuck, Michigan, was suffering from overwork during the summer of 1885. He secured a Home Treatment of The Compound Oxygen supplied by Drs. Starkey and Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., used it, enjoyed it, and wrote on September 11th: "I have used the treatment with good effects. It comes far nearer a specific for my case than any medicines I ever took." Dozens of similar letters might be printed.

The Vitalized Compound Oxygen now supplied by Drs. Starkey & Palen acts like magic in most cases of Consumption, Neuralgia, Asthma, Nervous Exhaustion, Bronchitis, Insomnia and kindred ills. It is not a "cure all," but it has already been used in forty thousand families. To such as may take an interest in the discovery and application of this new and remarkably successful agent, a pamphlet setting forth the full details will be sent, postage paid, to any part of the world.

The rays of the sun may be so concentrated by an ice-lens as to kindle a fire without melting the lens. So God sometimes uses men to kindle the hearts of their fellows, while their own remain cold as marble.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

Briefs.

What Wesley said when dying we may say with equal fervor when our children and dearest friends leave us. "The best of all is, God is with us." They were prized in proportion as they realized in themselves and embodied the divine life: but when they all escape from our embraces, we still have God.

The grandest event in a Christian man's history ever witnessed by human eyes occurs when he surrenders his body. The soul moves towards God for the expected "crown of life." We ought to celebrate a Christian's death as the most joyous and triumphant episode in their temporal career, and exult while we tremble and rejoice amidst our tears.

The only plane upon which we can perfect the love of God is that of humanity. To cultivate charity is at once the greatest pleasure and greatest profit within our reach. It is truly wonderful that the choicest gift of God to us is left for its completion to our choice and the exercise of our human affections; and yet it is true. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us and his love is perfected in us.

Our loved ones disappear even while we look upon them. That they have gone seems like an illusion, and we reach for the clasp of a hand that is withdrawn, and listen for a voice that is still. But the illusion is God's statement of their immortality. The heart's prophecy of the spirit world is more authoritative to us than would be the trembling of Sinai or the hoarse voices of its thunder.

Death has the power of transfiguring to us our departed. The weakness and sharp edges of their character—their blemishes and deficiencies—are walled in with their coffins, and only what is bright and tender and sweet haunt our recollections when a month is gone. The best of all, our dead never leaves the hearth or heart. In the ecstacy of this sweet experience the child of God never sees the death of his loved ones.

Commercial honesty is but a shadow of the spiritual grace which concedes to every man his due. Charity, so far from robbing our neighbor, "seeketh not her own." Meum and tuum are defined with a clearness that defies the poor expression of written language, and transcends the gentility and magnanimity of all written rules. "In honor preferring one another," grace applies to our brother's honor, success and happiness as well as to his rights and commercial dues.

Sam Small says:

Henry George—he's discovered how to cure poverty. But I haven't seen any fellow cured yet. Over in Baltimore I stood on the steps of a hotel and saw 18,000 workingmen on Labor Day marching through the streets—many of them in worn-out shoes and tattered clothes; and the whole concern was marshaled by liquor dealers riding on horses which the liquor dealers owned—and which the fellows on foot had bought. In Chicago I saw another marching body of 18,000 workingmen, carrying a banner inscribed: "Our children cry for bread!" and they marched straight to a picnic-ground and drank 1,400 kegs of beer.

The Editor Abroad.

NATURE'S PHARMACY.

The wise man's observation—that there is "nothing new under the sun"—is, perhaps, truer to-day than it was twenty-five hundred years ago. One of the best-known facts of to-day is, that the ancients had, what we call, sanitariums. These were springs in sequestered valleys, consecrated to Asclepias, or Esculapius, the patron deity of the physicians and of the sick. One of these was situated at Epidaurus, the place where Asclepias was killed by a thunder-bolt from Jove, because he had found out how not only to cure the sick, but to raise the dead. Here was raised a shrine to the god of healing. A great hospital was built for the accommodation of invalids. A temple for worship, built of most beautiful marble and lavishly adorned, was reared. There was also an art gallery and a theater, with seats made of blocks of white marble, and a race-course and halls for games and musical exercises—the "whole constituting one of the most beautiful group of buildings in Greece, where invalids gathered and wealth and fashion thronged, as at a modern watering-place." The treatment of disease was very much the same as that practiced at such places to-day: "The patient must drink the sacred water, bathe in it, restrict his diet to such things, take such exercise, do anything and everything the priest-doctor might direct." Verily, the better acquainted we become with antiquity, the more wonderfully like the present does it appear! Human history seems, like the seasons, to "go round in a circle;" and we tire of the old, and say, with a sigh: "There is nothing new under the sun."

There is this, however, as a sort of offset: If there is "nothing new," most things are just as strange and wonderful as when the world itself was new. Of the wonderful and strange things which I have met up with this Sour Lake is as wonderful and strange as any. If there ever was, either in ancient times or in modern days, a natural sanitarium, it is found here. Nature seems to have a pharmacy down below here, where she compounds and mixes medicinal minerals with a skill which far excels that of the most expert pharmaceutist of our medical schools.

Sour Lake is situated in the lower corner of Hardin county, on the northern edge of a prairie which stretches, with but little interruption, down to the Gulf of Mexico, thirty miles away. It is about nine miles from the Southern Pacific railroad, and about 300 miles from New Orleans. I suppose the whole lake does not measure more than three acres in area. On the south and west is a small plateau covered with magnificent oaks, whose huge branches fling their banners of gray moss to every passing breeze. The north and east stretch away in a marshy forest, where there are innumerable shrines consecrated to crawfish and bull-frogs, and where musquitoes sway the scepter of undisputed dominion. The lake is appropriately named, for the water in it is decidedly acid to the taste, and the bubbles, constantly arising all over its surface, indicate tremendous gas-works somewhere below. There are six wells, or springs, and five pools around the edge of the lake, and three wells about a hundred yards away, near the hotel. Now, the wonder is, that no two of these contain the same water, and the water in the lake is different from the rest! Some of these wells are in a few feet of each other; others are quite distant. Besides these wells of mineral waters, there are "tar-holes," where the genuine tar oozes out of the earth; and some of these "holes" are found in the lake itself. Besides this, near the lake a tube has been sunk, and a very superior quality of oil has been found. So "tar and grease" are pretty close together here. Besides this, the natural gas, which arises all about this lake, is found to be such as will burn with a beautiful flame. Having seen it burn, I think an enterprising man at the head of affairs here would soon have this whole place lighted with gas. These waters have been analyzed by experienced chemists and classed into five general groups: sulphur, alum, iron, magnesia and carbonated waters. The water of the lake contains alum, iron, lime, magnesia, potassium and sulphur. The medicinal properties of the waters are tonic, cathartic, alterative, diuretic, etc. Prof. Mallet, of the University of Virginia, has said this:

"The assemblage, at Sour Lake, of acid, saline and sulphurous waters, earth charged with acid and saline ingredients, deposited sulphur, mineral tar and natural combustible gas, is well worthy of the attention, both from the scientific standpoint, in view of the special geological conditions here encountered, and in connection with the medicinal application of most of the materials in question for the relief of various ailments. The locality, considered as a sanitarium, appears to have many incidental advantages, especially a mild climate, pleasant and of good repute on the score of general healthfulness for residence, both in summer and winter."

One of the chief remedial agents here is the acid earth or mud taken from the bottom of these bath-pools. It is applied by smearing it over the whole surface of the body, permitting it to dry, and then washing it off in the acid or sulphur waters. As a man is made out of dirt, the cures effected by this process may be said to be done on the strictly homeopathic principle—similia similibus curantur. The number of diseases which this mud and these waters are said to cure would make the most persistent patent-medicine advertiser hang his head in sorrow and disappointment. A partial list would astonish the readers of the ADVOCATE, though they are somewhat familiar with such advertisements. The special diseases, for the cure of which this place has gained notoriety, are eczema and rheumatic troubles. And, yet, I have seen several cases of rheumatism limping around here as if there was not a cure within a thousand miles! I understand that contradiction. It is perfectly philosophical, and no one understands the principle which underlies it better than the regular physician. It is a principle that obtains in nearly every department of life. In one place it is stated in this way: "A prophet hath no honor in his own country." In another place it reads this way: "Go away from home to hear the news about home." It is simply resolved into this: "Things at a distance are better than things at home." The doctors understand it well; and so, when their skill is baffled and their remedies fail, the invariable prescription is, "Take a trip;" and it generally proves to be the best remedy. I have seen it illustrated since I have been here. Two of the rheumatic sufferers of this place, instead of smearing themselves with this mud and plunging daily in these sulphur waters for healing, went twenty miles to consult a faith-doctor, and returned, each having a cotton string tied around the afflicted limb! One of these was good enough to tell the doctor of my case, and the kind old man sent me a cotton string with three curious-looking knots in it, which, with a feeling of awful solemnity, I tied around my waist. I am to wear it until it wears out, and then I am to burn it, and then the disease will be gone. I have already found myself busy trying to work out the problem: How long will a cotton string last around a man's body? Having already suffered twelve months, it is an interesting question to me, at least. The reader well knows that most men and women grow superstitious about remedies and cures after disease has preyed upon them for months. I knew of a grave judge who carried an Irish potato in his pocket for the very disease with which I am afflicted. I knew a doctor of divinity, who afterwards became a Bishop, who carried a buck-eye in his pocket as a remedy for disease. Many other cases of like kind justify my wearing the faith-doctor's cotton string.

It may be of interest to some of the readers of the ADVOCATE to know that these waters and this mud are said to be a sure cure for "inebriety and all diseases resulting from alcoholic stimulants." They say here that a universal poultice of this acid mud will suck the last drop of whisky out of the oldest toper in the land. Having such an efficacious remedy for whisky-sinks so convenient, may help to explain why Texas went against prohibition at the last election.

Who discovered these wonderful waters? The Indians, of course. Are we not indebted to them for the whole land and all it contains? And have we not shown the magnitude of our gratitude by appropriating everything they had and driving them westward as the avant couriers of the "Star of Empire"? And when we get them on the Pacific slope, wont we drive the last one of them into the welcome embrace of that peaceful ocean, and sit down on the golden sands and listen gratefully to their death-song as it mingles its weird and plaintive melody with the musical murmurs of that great sea? Of course, we will.

SOUR LAKE, TEXAS.

Romish Thrift.

Whatever may be the confidence of the papal church in the future life, she has unbounded faith in the life that now is; and no miser, raking amid filth for lucre, or politician, selling his constituency and justice for promotion, ever exhibited a more intense devotion to the main chance. What Edwin Booth said of the theater may, with cumulative force, be applied to the Roman Church: It is essentially a "shop for gain." If it has an idea beyond this, it is so far beyond as to be out of sight, even to the eye of faith. Without arraigning the mercenary character of its spiritual offices or characterizing its simoniacal priesthood in the technical language of the same gentleman as "hucksters of immoral gimcracks," the revelations in current politics occur with sufficient frequency to establish its thoroughly sordid policy and character.

It is beginning to be manifest that the charities so extensively and obtrusively inaugurated by them are only dexterous investments that pay several hundreds per cent. profit. They do not hesitate to claim support for them from the whole public by direct subscription, and from the bakers, butchers and merchants in material, and a third time from the government. Mr. McGlynn, who has obtained some notoriety in his associations with Henry George, the socialist, declared recently that when Tweed was fleecing New York, the city courts were sentencing child-waifs to certain Catholic houses of refuge, and that the city paid for their support; and often for supposititious services. What these supposititious services were has recently been made manifest by a trial in Chicago. Cook county is now sueing for the recovery of money paid to a so-called Chicago Industrial School for like services—an industrial school without a house, and which leased out the support and instruction of the waifs committed to its care.

In the State of New York, Protestants, besides having to contribute to charitable institutions, a majority of whose inmates were Catholics, have been artfully inveigled by State legislation into support of schools owned by the Roman Catholic Church. The average annual amount contributed to the foundling asylum of the Sisters of Charity was $235,971, and for twelve years, $2,831,653. The aggregate amounts contributed by the City and State of New York in twelve years to Catholic schools was $13,475,673. When it is recollected that these schools are maintained at a nominal cost by unmarried men and women who have taken the vow of poverty, and that nominal cost more than met by occasional entertainments, subscriptions and constant fees, we can readily understand the ease with which the whole blocks of brick buildings and gorgeous cathedrals are reared.

Another precious piece of speculation going on with the United States Treasury at this time is the Indian school contract. It is openly declared that the government official whose business it is to let out these contracts is a papist, which will account for the fact that while the Catholic population of the country is only one-tenth of the whole population, the amount allowed to Catholic schools on the reservation is 55½ per cent. of the whole amount expended.

In one of the States a bill is now pending before the Legislature which allows the trustees of a certain Catholic institution to take all women and children who may be committed as vagrants or convicted of misdemeanor, and provides for their support at public expense. For many years the same scheme has been worked sedulously in this State. How much of public funds have gone into Catholic edifices, how much of public funds have carried out Catholic enterprises, how much have facilitated Catholic proselytism among children and the ignorant poor it would be difficult to say just now. Nevertheless it will be said.

They, no doubt, regard this as a neat little piece of speculation. They certainly ought to have credit for pooling all the necessities of an immortal being and giving them in the wondrous facilities of their organization a market value. The only differences between the hierarchy and bucket-shop can be found in the nearness of their "futures" and the value of their wares—certainly not in the quality of their consciences or the fierceness of their greed.

The mystery of the magnificent growth of Romish architecture has at last been solved; and not by the unearthly and saintly benevolences of its devotees either. The discovery of this mysterious wealth reveals other things. It accounts for the numerical growth of the Catholic population, when the ample treasury of city and State has been laid under contribution to teach Catholicism to its unfortunate youth, and to exaggerate with unsuspicious minds the benevolent sympathies of a really avaricious hierarchy. It accounts for the power of the desperate and unprincipled politicians who have succeeded so long in holding office and advancing the most nefarious legislation, that in return for the patronage of papal charities and schools they have received the patronage of the papal vote.

There is no question but that the whole machinery of American Romanism has been contrived in the same way; and its schools and asylums, and hospitals and reformatories and cemeteries, its doctrine of penance and its priestly fee system, are organized and worked for the money that is in sight. It seizes upon the child as soon as it is born, and demands a fee for its baptism; then follows another for its education. If orphaned there comes a happy occasion for instituting a three-fold subscription; if vicious, it is but another plea for collecting money; if sick or dying, of course, more money is needed; another charge is made for its interment, and for the lifetime of parents or friends, its confinement in purgatory is an excuse for getting more money.

It is full time we were awake to the rapacity of the Romish Church, and to the spoliation of Protestantism that has been going on for nearly a century. If we submit to it any longer, we deserve to be priest-ridden, and to be made, like blind Samson shorn of his locks, to grind the corn of the Philistines. However, Samson's locks are growing.

Notes.

The need of our cities is increased church accommodation for the poor. The splendor of the grand edifices is a just expression of the piety of the prosperous and serves a noble educative purpose; but the splendid and luxurious style of the worshiper repels the poor who can never hope to share it, and who are constantly reminded of their helplessness. They feel that the church is not the place for material contrasts, and only a fervid religion will induce them to submit to it.

This sentence from Washington Irving is said to be one of the most beautiful in the English language: "As the vine, which has long twined its graceful foliage about the oak, and been lifted by it into the sunshine, will, when the hardy plant is rifted by the thunder-bolt, cling around it with its caressing tendrils, and bind up its shattered boughs; so it is beautifully ordained by Providence, that woman, who is the mere dependent and ornament of man in his happier hours, should be his stay and solace when smitten with sudden calamity; winding herself into the rugged recesses of his nature, tenderly supporting his drooping head, and binding up his broken heart."

Our church in St. Louis has recently completed two handsome brick houses of worship. The first was on Olive Avenue, costing $70,000. Of this amount $50,000 was contributed by three persons and two-thirds of this amount by one man. The entire subscription list did not include more than thirty persons. The other edifice was Lafayette Park, costing $12,500, which represents a subscription list of four hundred contributors whose gifts range from twenty-five cents to fifteen thousand dollars. Of the two places we greatly prefer the latter, as it elicits from a larger constituency sympathy, zeal and faith. Money thus contributed provides for the enterprise the qualities which guarantee a large spiritual success.

The Congregationalists in this country are annoyed by the progressive tendencies at Andover, and the orthodox Baptists, led by Mr. Spurgeon, in England, are going through a like experience with an advanced theology that interpolates between the grave and the final judgment a second probation. Is it simply a coincidence that so large a proportion of the "second probationists" once subscribed to the Westminster confession of faith. The Andover School are coquetting with Universalism, and Universalists are explaining the decadence of their churches by the greater liberality and fraternity of the Congregationalists.

The certain result of the success of the temperance reform ought to enlist the energies and talents and supreme efforts of every man, woman and child in the land. What does that success mean? It means, among other great blessings, alms-houses torn down, jails unoccupied, and State prisons standing as "the monuments of the crimes of an age gone by." Among the greatest of its great blessings is this: The parent will then be able to say, "My noble boy will not be a drunkard." "The temperance reform lifts the veil of years and discloses to parents of this generation their children and children's children freed from all the woes and curses of drunkenness, the smile of gratitude upon their countenances and the language of benediction upon their lips." The best heritage we can leave our children is a country freed from the saloon. Therefore, let all parents work and pray to accomplish this end.

Personals.

Rev. Phillips Brooks, the great Episcopal preacher of Boston, is nearly six feet six inches high.

Rev. S. H. Werlein, the pastor of Lafayette Park Church, arrived safely in St. Louis last week, made a pleasant talk at the preachers' meeting, and referred to New Orleans Methodism as being small, but alive.

In a reminiscental letter to the Richmond Advocate from Bishop McTyeire, is the following pathetic paragragh:

"The solemn procession is thinning at the front. I see it. The pace is quickening. I feel it. 'My company before is gone.' More and more I thank God for casting my lot with Methodist preachers, and making their work my work, and their hope my hope."

Our dear old brother, Capt. R. L. Robertson, was in the office last week, looking as well as usual of late. He passed the ninetieth milestone on the road of life on the seventeenth inst. May the good Lord spare him to us a long time yet!

Dr. John Hannon, of Centenary, came to Oakland on Monday and remained until Saturday. He is a man of faith, original ideas and methods, and did excellent work. Our people were much pleased, and profited by his work.—Pacific Methodist.

Mr. Vanderbilt recently engaged a Parisian cook at a salary of $10,000 a year. Oxford University, England, is seeking a professor for the chair of political economy. The remuneration is $2,040 a year.

Dr. C. G. Andrews, in a letter to the Arkansas Methodist, rejoices over the stand taken by the Mississippi Masons against admitting saloon keepers into the Masonic bodies.

Chauncey M. Depew has been troubled with great pain in his head of late. A lady in Chicago asked him, when he was in that city recently, if he ever did anything for it, and, being answered in the negative, she said: "You had ought to take some anecdotes."

Henry Bergh, who more than twenty-five years ago devoted his life to the protection of dumb brutes, died recently. God spared him long enough to realize his reward in the passage by thirty-nine States and Territories of laws to prevent cruelty to animals. He had no other reward but this, and the pleasure of seeing a public sentiment and conscience organized through his labors.

A letter from Farmin, Miss., is without signature and can not be published. Send on the name.

It is stated that Rev. Sam Jones will become a citizen of Kansas City, Mo.; removing from Cartersville, Ga., about May 1.

Rev. Anson West, at the instance of many friends, has concluded to write the History of Methodism in Alabama, and requests the brethren to furnish him with such material as they have.

Rev. George F. West, of Alabama Conference, has been forced to give up his work on account of throat trouble.

Governor Lowry's Veto.

On February 14, at request of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mississippi, Hon. T. M. Kemp introduced into the Senate a bill providing for scientific instruction in the public schools on the effects of alcohol and narcotics upon the human system. Hon. S. M. Ross, the framer of the bill, wrote on the same day: "Our Scientific Instruction Bill came up for consideration about ten minutes ago. After a debate of about five minutes, it was passed. Only two members expressed any opposition, and none voted against it." On March 2 the bill came up in regular order in the House, valiantly championed by Hon. A. F. McGee, chairman of the Temperance Committee. After a heated contest, it was passed by a two-thirds' majority of the House. One week from that day, the day after adjournment of the Legislature, news of the governor's veto of the measure was made public. As the message, so far as is known, was unaccompanied by any reason, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mississippi has sent a respectful letter to Governor Lowry, asking the wherefores of his disapproval. The answer is awaited with expectancy.

To the State House.

Our representatives under the heat of discussion, on going out catch cold, contract a cough, hoarseness and pain in the chest and throat follow. Taylor's Cherokee Remedy of Sweet Gum and Mullein cures coughs, colds and consumption.

An Address at the Carrollton Avenue Church.

This church is finely located both in view of the present and the future needs of New Orleans Methodism. It is one of the most tasteful structures in the city. It supplied a long-felt want in Carrollton. The ground on which it stands was secured by the Rev. B. Carradine, while pastor of St. Charles Avenue Church; and the house was planned and built by the Rev. C. Keener, while presiding elder of the Opelousas district. After giving liberally, the congregation finds itself still in debt for the house, which it is making a laudable effort to liquidate. And it respectfully asks the friends of our church to aid it again, as heretofore.

On next Sabbath afternoon the Rev. B. Carradine, at the request of the trustees, will deliver, at four o'clock, an address, on "Methodist Preachers," and the ladies of the church will also aid to make the occasion worthy of its noble purpose by singing, as they can sing, both hymns and sacred songs. We heartily endorse this programme, and we are satisfied that whoever will attend will go away fully repaid for any money or time expended.

The pastors of our several churches will please aid by giving out this notice of this address, and help, as by and by they may wish to be helped.

Take the green car on Baronne street; get out at Carrollton avenue.

Columbus District Conference.

Mr. Editor: I take this method of asking the preachers of the Columbus district to please send the names and number of delegates who are going to attend our District Conference, to be held in Ackerman, Miss., May 10-13, inclusive. We want them all to come. Brethren, please pray for a gracious revival of religion. The editor and the preachers' wives have a special invitation.

Yours fraternally,

W. T. BARNETT.

Notice.

The New Orleans District Conference will meet on Thursday, April 5, 1888, at ten o'clock, at Louisiana Avenue Church. Delegates from abroad will please report at 112 Camp street.

Items of Interest.

The Methodist Episcopal Chinese Church in San Francisco raised $30 for the City Church Extension Society. They were asked for only $25. No more liberal collection was taken in the city.

A bill prohibiting the sale of cigars or cigarettes to children under sixteen years of age, and making a violation of the law a misdemeanor, has been introduced into the Legislature of New York.

A railroad is projected from St. Paul, Minn., to Pekin, China, and Irkutsk, in Russia. At this end connection is to be made with the Aberdeen, Bismarck and Northwestern railroad and the Canada Pacific, which will put you at Victoria, B. C.; thence a road 1,400 miles long will be built to Behrings Strait, a body of water only 35 miles wide, dotted with islands and only 120 to 150 feet deep. On the opposite side the road is to strike East Cape and proceed to Pekin. The time to reach Russia will not take over ten days at first, and when in good running order not over a week. Whew! Nevertheless, twenty-five years ago it was thought as impracticable to cross this continent.

In the last thirty-eight years there has been an increase of nine bishops, 1,488 priests, 750 religious houses and 707 churches of the Romish faith in England and Wales. In 1853 in the United Kingdom the Roman Catholics were one-third, but now they are only one-seventh of the population.

Books and Periodicals.

FIFTY YEARS IN THE CHURCH OF ROME. By Father Chiniquy, the apostle of temperance in Canada, author of "The Priest, the Woman and the Confessional," "Papal Idolatry," "Rome and Education."

This is the ninth edition, and, doubtless, but the beginning of a sale to become popular in all Catholic communities of our country. The occasional turpitude of priests is not a matter for unmeasured reproach, excepting as it is the product of a defective system; but that which is habitual and grows inevitably from the organization, and that organic putrescence in forms of graded repulsiveness which belong to Roman Catholicism, ought to be exposed and condemned. The author of this book has seen the inside of Romanism, with the eyes of a devout thinker, and he reveals his observations without fear. Rome has grown to be so insolent that her mask must be torn off, and this book undertakes the work.

—The Eclectic Magazine of Foreign Literature, for March, keeps up its old-time tone of broad and dignified criticism. Among its articles are: American Statesmen, by Goldwin Smith; Norman Lockyer's Meteorite Theory, by S. Lang; Dethroning Tennyson, by Algernon Charles Swinburne; The Value of the Individual, by Vernon Lee; The Story of the Assassination of Alexander II., by J. E. Muldock; Evolution—The Workless, the Worthless, and the Thriftless; Science and the Bishops; Lost Instincts and Rare Faculties; Shelley, etc. Published by E. R. Pelton, 25 Broad street, New York.

—The Pulpit Treasury, for March, has a portrait of Alfred H. Moment. The usual interest attaches to the three leading sermons, while an unusual one fastens upon us the sermon of Walter Abbott, on the Pleasure of Success, a caption which hardly reveals the divine theory of successful life in the "unfinished sufferings" of Christ. Published by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York.

The people of Louisiana themselves do not realize all its advantages, because they have not been able to compare it with other States; hence, the great need of presenting before the world the many attractions, the grand opportunities that Louisiana offers to all who wish a comfortable home. WE SOLICIT YOUR SUBSCRIPTION.

OUR S. S. PERIODICALS,

—EDITED BY—

Rev. W. G. E. CUNNINGHAM, D. D.

Our Sunday-school periodicals should be used in all our schools.

They are authorized by the General Conference; prepared by our Editor; published by our House for the especial use and benefit of our people.

They are adapted to our wants, and should not be substituted by any other.

Preachers, Sunday-school officers, and all others interested in the furtherance of Southern Methodism, SEE TO IT that no undenominational or impure literature is used in our schools!

In matter and style it is equal to the best, and is cheaper than any other of equal grade.

All the moral and religious reasons that call for Methodist preachers, in Methodist pulpits, call for Methodist literature, in Methodist schools. Write for specimen copies.

The Sunday-School Magazine. A fifty-page monthly of acknowledged excellence, for the use of officers, teachers, and older scholars. With full expositions of the International Lesson Text; every number contains valuable hints as to the facts, principles, objects, methods and capabilities of Sunday-school work. No publication of equal merit is furnished at a less price. Think of it—336 pages yearly, postage paid, for the small sum of 50 cents.

The Senior Quarterly. A thirty-six page pamphlet devoted to lesson helps for scholars in advanced classes. Its value is enhanced by the introduction of appropriate forms for opening and closing exercises, hymns and tunes, maps, dictionary of proper names, etc.

Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum.....25c.
Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 15c.
Five or more, to one address, per quarter, each 4c.

The Intermediate Quarterly. Similar to the above, but with such necessary changes as adapt it to the wants of scholars in the main school. It is marvelously cheap.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 7½c.
Five or more, to one address, per quarter, each 2c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum.....15c.

The Illustrated Lesson Paper is a four-page weekly, designed for younger scholars who have outgrown the infant class, but who retain their fondness for pictures and simple stories. 208 pages a year.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 10c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper.....20c.

Our Little People is a beautiful lesson sheet, four pages handsomely illustrated and printed on tinted paper; for primary or infant scholars. Each number contains, besides the lesson, a page or more of "baby-land" talk.

From Japan.

Mr. Editor: I feel truly thankful to say the Lord is with us, and the good is still going on in the hearts of many around us.

Only a few days since I learned that some of our native Christians and probationers were meeting up in the mountain by daylight, or before, to unite with each other in earnest prayer for an outpouring of the Spirit of God, and that they might soon have a church in which to worship. They had been meeting there already thirty days before I knew anything of it. I was astonished to hear it. Surely such a people deserve a church. I asked one brother if he did not find it very cold. "Yes," he said, "it was very cold at first, but we soon got used to it." Sometimes they had to sing their hymns by lantern light. I am sure it must have been cold, for we have had ice almost every day since January 1. They (the native Christians of our church) feel deeply the need of a church. Other denominations all have their churches, but we have none. I feel sure the Lord will answer the prayers which have been offered, and before the close of this year we will have a church.

I received a letter from Bro. Usaki, one of our young men studying for the ministry. He has license to exhort. He says:

My Dear Doctor: I am very well since I left you, and happy to say that I met my parents at Zawota village, one "ri" (two and a half miles) or more from Kobe. My father is teaching school. When I talked about Christianity, they were deeply interested in it, and want to become Christians. After my speech, they asked me? "What shall we do to be Christians? And where shall we go to hear Christianity?" Then I felt happiness in my heart, and I taught them: "You need repentance first, and if you like to hear about Christ, I shall introduce you to our Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Kobe, which is not so far from your place." All of them, then, were very willing to go to the church once a week.

Doctor, you please talk about true religion, and encourage them when you see them. I am very thankful, with tears. God has answered my poor daily prayers, and led my old and ignorant parents to be converted.

Yours truly,

K. USAKI.

Mr. Editor, I am thankful for such a letter. It stirs my soul to the very depths, and I feel sure the Lord is with us. Pray for us, and ask all layers of Jesus to pray for us, and help us all they can in this blessed work.

Your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him; and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

Fond Wife: "The Smiths must be awfully poor, they never give anything to charities." He: "Well, but we don't either." Fond wife: "Oh, but it isn't because we haven't got plenty."

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

Mamma: "What can I do to induce you to go to bed?" Youngster: "You can let me sit up a little longer."

EDUCATIONAL.

Mansfield Female College.

1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. H. F. Biddle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 288 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

Our Young People.

A PLAIN LITTLE GIRL.

Once I knew a little girl,
Very plain,
You might try her hair to curl,
All in vain:
On her cheek no tint of rose
Paled and blushed, or sought repose;
She was plain.

But the thoughts that through her brain
Came and went,
As a recompense for pain
Angels sent:
So full many a beauteous thing,
In the young soul blossoming,
Gave content.

Every thought was full of grace,
Pure and true;
And in time the homely face
Loveller grew,
With a heavenly radiance bright,
From the soul's reflected light
Shining through.

Shall I tell you, little child,
Plain or poor:
If your thoughts are undefiled,
You are sure
Of the loveliness of worth;
And this beauty not of earth,
Will endure.

—St. Nicholas.

MR. EDITOR: I read Miss Annie Linfield's letter asking for money for Laredo Seminary. Enclosed you will find two dollars for her. My grandmother (sixty-eight years old) sends one dollar. My sisters send twenty-five cents apiece, and I send the same amount making the other dollar. My sisters want you to know their names: Mary L. Loruhamah, and Helen C. Currie. I read Aunt Loretta's letter also. I will be one to promise to be a better boy this year. And I think the promise, "To be a husband to the widow and a father to her orphan children," suits us best now. Our papa is dead. To think that the Lord will watch over and care for us poor little children comforts me more than any other promise. The answer to Aunt Loretta's puzzle is "M-I-L-D." Sister and I love Aunt Loretta, and are always so glad when she writes. Your friend,

GARDNER D. CURRIE.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to the little cousins, I will write to you from Franklinton. Our preacher, Rev. A. C. Flowers, arrived here on January 4, the day my papa was buried. My papa was Sunday-school superintendent. Mr. Robert Babington is acting as superintendent now. We have preaching here twice a month, and Sunday-school every Sunday. We also have day school, and prayer meeting every Wednesday night. I admire the little cousins' letters, and especially the one in last week's number, headed, "A Word to the Boys by a Boy." As I am only ten years old, and this is my first, I will close. Hoping this will not find its way into the waste-basket, I remain,

Your little friend,

SALLIE L. WADSWORTH.

FRANKLINTON, Louisiana.

Child-Life in India.

I wonder if you would like to hear about some very bright Sunday-school children living in India, near Calcutta.

Perhaps you would rather see them; if so, just change your pretty winter hats for Indian solar ones, and come with me to my dear old Indian verandah. Here are "Jack and Jill," two stout oxen who have been trained to trot, adorned with bells, and fastened to a rattan carriage; and they won't mind if we have a large load. Off we go over the brick-red roads running like bright ribbons through the green fields. Over there to the right is the grand residence of a native prince, who has several wives, fine elephants, camels, Arabian horses, birds of Paradise, and a caged Bengal tiger at his gate. There sits the poor old leper under the same tree he has been under for months. Let us each toss him a penny. See the sore stumps where his fingers used to be! and his toes are all gone, too. Long ago his last friend turned him out of doors; and, rain or shine, there he sits begging for a morsel. And all through this rich, beautiful country hundreds of just such lepers are dying without a home.

Here we enter the Bazar, a trading street, filled with low mud shops. See these long-bearded, long-tailed baboons, leaping from roof to roof, then up, up into the highest branches of the grand old trees, then down into the gardens to steal bananas and cucumbers!

They are singing the first hymn, and we are at the very door of the first Sunday-school we shall visit to-day. Fifty little hands are waving graceful salaams to you, and a hundred bright eyes, that never tire looking at white children, are welcoming you. Sit down, tailor fashion, on the nice mats the kind teacher is bringing you. A few years ago she was rescued from a terrible famine, and now she is a most earnest teacher.

The girl next to her hasn't a friend, and she has worn that one little piece of cloth until it is threadbare. She is always hungry, and always sad. A miserable mud hut, crowded frequently with drunken men and women, and sore, half-starved dogs, has been their only shelter; and they had never heard of the one great God and the way to heaven before this Sunday-school teacher went to them. But from their babyhood their tiny hands had often been clasped in prayer to a huge idol, around which serpents coiled.

You will remember that there are four great castes in India, and that the Brahmin or highest caste consider the others very inferior beings. When little Bramin girls first came to our day-schools, they used to wrap their little dainty dresses very closely about them, and then sit on mats alone; but when the class began to spell for prizes, they forgot all about their caste, and now they sit side by side.

They will soon leave school to be married. The oldest one here is only nine years old. Many in this country are being married every day who are younger than that; and then childhood, with all its sweet joys, is gone forever. Henceforth they are prisoners in their own zenanas—the most secluded rooms in a high-caste or Brahmin house are called zenanas; and here these little wives spend their lives, leaving them only in covered palankeens. They seldom get a peep of the green fields even, or anything beyond their own homes. If a husband dies, the little widow knows there is such a life of suffering before her that she begs to be burned alive with the dead body of her husband. Oh the horrors of child marriage! Of all the terrible sufferings that women and children have ever known, this is the worst.

Yes, that beautiful little girl, only seven years old, with a face almost as white as yours, will be taken away day after to-morrow by a strange man twenty-five years old, to live at his own home with his parents. Yesterday, while teaching in a zenana, one of the brightest girls of this school, who had just been married, crept up to me, sobbing as though her heart would break. She said, "O teacher! my husband took my little Testament and reader, and tore them all to pieces; and then he dashed my slate on a stone, and told me he wouldn't have any more such nousense in his house—men must read, and women must cook! Oh, I can never go to Sunday-school again! But there's one thing he can't stop, and that's my little prayers. I say them over and over when nobody but God can hear me; and when I'm alone, and can forgot for a little while how my heart aches for my dear mamma and teachers, I sing about that 'happy land, far, far away,' and it seems as though I couldn't wait to get there.

I tried to comfort her, and told her I would visit her often. But, although hundreds of these dear little girls have learned to look to Christ for comfort, there are millions who have never heard of him. Think of them, pray for them, send them Bibles, and help to send good men who will induce the rulers of the land to make a new marriage law that will save these children from so much misery.—O. I., in Exchange.

The Wonders of an Egg.

Mr. Matthieu Williams, in one of his lectures, says: "Every one who eats his matutinal egg, eats a sermon and a miracle. Inside of that smooth, symmetrical, beautiful shell lurks a question which has been the Troy town for all the philanthropists and scientists since Adam. Armed with the engines of war—the microscope, the scales, the offensive weapons of chemistry and reason—they have probed and weighed and experimented; and still the question is unsolved, the citadel unsacked. Professor Bokorny can tell you that albumen is composed of so many molecules of carbon and nitrogen, and hydrogen, and can persuade you of the difference between active and passive albumen, and can show by wonderfully delicate experiments what the aldehydes have to do in the separation of gold, from his complicated solutions; but he can't tell you why from one egg comes 'a little rid hin,' and from another a bantam. You leave your little silver spoon an hour in your egg-cup, and it is coated with a compound of sulphur. Why is that sulphur there?' Wonderful, that evolution should provide for the bones of the future hen! There is phosphorus also in that little microcosm; and the oxygen of the air, passing through the shell, unites with it, and the acid dissolves the shell, thus making good, strong bones for the chick and at the same time thinning the prison-walls. Chemists know a great deal now about albumen; and if they can not tell us why life differentiates itself therein and thereby, they can tell you how not to spoil your breakfast."

A LADIES' LUNCHEON PARTY.—As a general thing, small round tables are used, at which four may sit and converse socially. Soup, cold meats, chicken croquettes, salad, ice-cream, cake and coffee, generally constitute the bill of fare, although this menu may be varied indefinitely. The covering of the little tables is largely a matter of taste; but one may be sure of always being quite in the fashion when she covers her tables with handsome white linen, and uses, instead of silks, satins and plushes, for adornment, flowers and bright silver, cloudless glass—and tasteful dishes. Large napkins are almost a necessity, for at a ladies' luncheon the dresses are likely to be rich; although it is considered to be in perfectly good form to use the medium-sized napkins which come in sets with so-called luncheon cloths. For a truly successful luncheon party something still more is needed; and that is the careful thought of the hostess to set her guests so that those who are agreeable to each other may be placed together. This is an old suggestion, but one which is rendered necessary by the thoughtlessness of many party givers.

POULTRY.—Laying hens require close attention this month: the least neglect will reduce the number of eggs. During the moulting season a hen should be well fed with good sweet food in great variety, and it is important that the house should have a perfectly dry roof to keep the hens dry during the night, and they should have a shed open to the south with no floor to it, where they may find shelter in cold storms. Clean, fresh water should be constantly before the hens and so arranged as to keep the dirt out of it. Ground oyster shells, lime and ashes should also be where the hens can get them, and fresh earth should be freely supplied to hens that are yarded. The early chicks, if properly cared for, will now begin to lay, and if to be made profitable, must be well fed.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

From the Herald of Faith, St. Louis, Missouri, August 10, 1887:

Referring to Shaffenberger's Antidote for Malaria, the business manager of the Herald of Faith would say, that he gave this medicine a personal trial, and was speedily cured of an inveterate Intermittent Fever. He then recommended it to F. J. Tiefenbrunn, 1915 Papin street, and to police officer Meldenger, at the Union Depot, both of whom were cured by it of chills and fever of several years' standing. Recently his wife, after a fever of several days' duration, took a single dose and was perfectly cured. In view of these remarkable cures, and remembering how much money is spent for quinine, so little to be depended upon, and often so injurious, we can only wish that Shaffenberger's Antidote would come into general use.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

"This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 79 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Addy Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, of Fernandina, Fla., recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 10 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall, and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for seven months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. Fairbanks, Haverhill, Mass.

HAVE YOU EXAMINED ROYAL PRAISE

The New Sunday School Song Book by James R. Murray? We claim it is the best book of the kind now before the public, and feel that an examination of its contents will substantiate this claim. Among the writers represented are Dr. Geo. F. Root, J. R. Sweney, H. F. Sherwin, "Winthrop," J. H. Tenney, James McGranahan, P. P. Bliss, Geo. H. Simmons, Rev. C. H. Oliphant, P. P. Campiglio, T. P. Westendorf, and many others. The book contains 192 pages, of which 160 are devoted to the very best of genuine SUNDAY SCHOOL SONGS, many of them never having appeared before in any book; the remaining 32 pages contain a concise but very thorough course of instruction in the Elements of Music. Price, bound in boards, 30 cents, if sent by mail add 5cts. for postage.

We will send a single sample copy by mail postpaid to any Sunday School Superintendent on receipt of 20 cents. SPECIMEN PAGES FREE.

DIXON—Another of Louisiana's aged sons has fallen! MR. W. I. DIXON, of Caldwell parish, departed this life, February 26, 1888, aged seventy years, ten months and eighteen days. He was born in the parish of East Feliciana, La., April 8, 1817. He was converted when in his seventeenth year, joined the Methodist Church soon after, and remained a member of the same, till called away, after a Christian's pilgrimage of more than fifty-four years. He was united in marriage with Miss Theresa Holloway, of East Feliciana parish, La., about the year 1841. They subsequently removed to Catahula parish, La., where his wife died, leaving three small children, only one of which yet survives. Afterward, about the year 1851, he was united in marriage with Miss Rachel Merriwith, of Caldwell parish, La., with whom he lived till the summons came. He leaves a wife and seven children to mourn the loss of a kind husband and an affectionate father; whose tender care and wise counsels they can have no more. But they are not left to mourn without hope, for before he left them he said, "he had fought a good fight, had kept the faith, and was now ready to be offered up." His health began to decline about two years before the end came; but the most of the time he was able to be up. About five weeks before he died his son, Charley, removed him and his family to Arcadia, La., to his own home, where he could minister to his father's wants in his last affliction. About two weeks prior to his departure it became evident that he was rapidly growing worse. He suffered much, and peacefully and quietly departed (as we trust) to the Christian's eternal home in heaven. May his bereaved family be ready to rejoin him in that peaceful home, far out beyond the reach of sin, where death can never come!

T. F. DIXON.

THOMPSON—MRS. CAROLINE THOMPSON (nee Duckworth) was born June 30, 1828; was married to Benjamin Thompson, July 10, 1845, and departed this life near Lake Como, Miss., March 5, 1888. Soon after her marriage she joined the Methodist Church, was happily converted, and was a bright, shining light ever afterward, shedding her Christian influence over all around her. She was of a reserved and unassuming disposition, remaining a great deal at home, though at the bedside of the sick and sorrowing she was ever found ready to administer help and comfort. She was never absent from the house of God unless providentially hindered, and she will be sadly missed here as well as in the home circle. She was very industrious and had managed well since the death of her husband. Ten heart-broken children are left to mourn their loss, and, oh, how they will miss her kind care and motherly advice! But weep not, loved ones; she will still be your guardian angel to watch over your pathway, and when you, too, cross over the river of death you will all clasp hands on the golden shore of eternity; "where the surges cease to roll." A day or two before her death she remarked to one of her friends that she had always endeavored to live so as to be prepared when the summons came. Truly it can be said of her: She was ready for the midnight call, and her lamp was trimmed and burning.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

Southern Baptist Record please copy.

SMITH—JAMES M. SMITH was born in Marion county, Ala., March 28, 1832. In early life he came to Mississippi and lived a few years in Lauderdale county. In 1862 he married Elizabeth Vick, and settled in Kemper county, where he spent the remainder of his life. He joined the Methodist Church some twelve or fourteen years ago, and has lived, for some years past, an upright Christian life. He died in triumph of the Christian faith, January 30, 1888. He has left a wife and six children. They are in the hands of a kind Providence, who has promised to be a father to the fatherless and judge of the widow. Their loss is his gain.

Bro. Smith was truly a good man: true to his God, his family and his church. He was one of the best of neighbors; hence his neighbors miss him. The more I saw of him, the better I loved him. He was a good listener. He heard the Word; he received and lived it. His work is done, and he has gone to his reward. We miss him—yes, we all miss him, but we will meet him in heaven. May God bless and take care of his afflicted family!

H. P. LEWIS.

BATES—BRO. FRANCIS MARION BATES was born April 18, 1818, and died February 11, 1888. Born in Coosa county, Ala., he grew up there and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church by profession, and of his conversion he had no doubt in after life. He adorned the profession he had made by a godly walk, and brilliancy of Christian light that shone along the long pathway of his life leading many others to Christ. Bro. Bates was a great worker in the church, beautifully exemplifying the truth that God wants only laborers in his vineyard. He was a faithful class leader, and led his class nearer heaven at almost every meeting. Bro. Bates was a great singer, and delighted to lead the host of the Lord to the battle with soul-inspiring, faith-strengthening songs. Bro. Bates was married to Miss Ester (frequently called Hester) Henley, who was a faithful helpmeet and zealous co-worker through life, a loving and attentive nurse in his last illness, and who now lingers on these shores in sadness waiting for the words, "Come up higher." Bro. Bates had eight children, four of whom still live. All are members of the church, as also most of his grandchildren. May they meet him in heaven!

M. J. MILLER.

UNDERWOOD—SISTER CAROLINE UNDERWOOD was born February 27, 1811, in St. Tammany parish, near Covington, La.; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in Washington parish, April, 1841. She led a pious and exemplary life, which ended triumphantly, March 3, 1888. A faithful servant of God rests from her labors, and is with loved ones above.

Sister Underwood was a great sufferer years before her death from a cancer on her face; but, until a short time before her death, she was ever present in her seat at church to cheer her pastor and encourage others. Nor was she remiss in the material support of all the institutions of the church. May God comfort and sustain the loved ones left behind, and at last bring them all together again!

J. W. ELLISON, Pastor.

FOSTER—The following resolutions were passed by the Felicity Street Sunday-school and Missionary Society:

Whereas, It has pleased God to remove from our midst, on March 9, our venerable superintendent and co-laborer, BRO. WILLIAM H. FOSTER, by the hand of death, after a connection with the Sunday-school work of over forty years; And, whereas, We are called upon to mourn his sudden death, and the loss this school sustains in the deprivation of his wide experience, systematic plans, missionary spirit and consecrated wisdom as its appointed head; therefore, be it

Resolved, That, as we believe our loss is his eternal gain, and that his spirit has entered into the rest of God's elect children, rejoined with the spirits of his loved ones gone before, we acquiesce to our Father's will and pray for sustaining grace to be bestowed upon his bereaved children, and us, his brethren in the Lord, that we may continue in the path of life he trod till the Master calls us also home.

Resolved, That we will emulate the good examples he ever strove to inspire us with, and practice the valuable lessons he faithfully taught us as a disciple of Christ.

Resolved, That the school-room be draped in mourning for a period of thirty days, as a mark of respect to his memory and reminder of our loss.

Resolved, That in the loss of our respected and able leader, it is with no little perplexity we look around for one who will as satisfactorily fill the position of superintendent as he did.

Resolved, That a copy of these preambles and resolutions be furnished the bereaved ones, and the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE also for publication.

Dr. R. C. Flower's Great Work.

The many thousands of our readers who have been benefited by the remarkable skill of Dr. Flower will be pleased to know that the Spectator Publishing Company, of Boston, Mass., have just issued a beautiful new pamphlet containing, among other interesting matter, a record of many recent cures wrought by Dr. Flower on prominent personages. These cures are in many instances startling in their nature, having been performed after the highest authorities and most learned representatives of the old school of practice had pronounced the fiat of doom, and declared them to be beyond the limit of the curable. So marvellous are these strange stories of lives rescued from the jaws of the grave, that, were they not related by the individuals themselves, with their names and addresses given, and in many instances the parties being distinguished personages, who are noted and known far and near, one would almost imagine he was in the midst of some oriental tale, with the sweet fascination of the miraculous and the mystery of the mystic hanging o'er him.

In addition to the above, this pamphlet contains an interesting article from a recent issue of the New Haven Register on Dr. Flower's strange power of diagnosing, where, by sympathetic intuition, he is enabled to describe the exact condition of the internal organism of any person, and describe his disease, its rise, progress, and the attending symptoms far more accurately than the patient himself could give them, and this without asking the patient a question. This power accounts, to a very great extent, for the doctor's phenomenal success in treating his thousands of patients, a large per cent. of whom are treated in their homes, hundreds and thousands of miles from Boston.

There is also in this little book a strikingly fine picture of Dr. Flower, and an excellently engraved view of Dr. Flower's new Health Palace, now rapidly approaching completion, in Boston. It will be one of the features of the "Hub," a palace of beauty and comfort. All invalids should not fail to read this remarkable little work, which will be sent free, post-paid, to every reader of this paper who sends name and address to the SPECTATOR Publishing Company, Boston, Mass.

Inventions of Half a Century.

The number of inventions that have been made during the past fifty years is unprecedented in the history of the world. Inventions of benefit to the human race have been made in all ages since man was created; but, looking back for half a hundred years, how many more are crowded into the past fifty than into any other fifty since recorded history! The perfection of the locomotive, and the new world-traversing steamships, the telegraph, the telephone, the audiphone, the sewing machine, the photograph, chromo-lithographic printing press, the elevator for hotels and other many-storied buildings, the cotton gin and the spinning jenny, the reaper, the mower, the steam fire engine, the improved process for making steel, the application of chloroform and ether to destroy sensibility in painful surgery cases, and so on through a long catalogue.

Nor are we yet done in the field of invention and discovery. The application of coal gas and petroleum to heating and cooking operations is only trembling on the verge of successful experiment; the introduction of the steam from a great central reservoir to general use for heating and cooking is foreshadowed as among the coming events: the artificial production of butter has already created a consternation among dairymen: the navigation of the air by some device akin to our present balloon would also seem to be prefigured, and the propulsion of machinery by electricity is even now clearly indicated by the march of experiment.

There are some problems we have hitherto deemed impossible; but are the mysteries of even the most improbable of them more subtle to grasp than that of the ocean cable, or that of the photograph or the telephone? We talk by cable with an ocean rolling between; we speak in our voices to friends a hundred miles or more from where we articulate before the microphone. Under the blazing sun of July we produce ice by chemical means, rivaling the most solid and crystalline production of nature. Our surgeons graft the skin from one person's arm to the face of another, and it adheres and becomes an integral portion of his body. We make a mile of white printing paper and send it on a spool that a perfecting printing press unwinds and prints, and delivers to you, folded and counted, many thousands per hour. Of a verity, this is the age of invention, nor has the world reached a stopping-place yet.—Anon.

AMERICAN GLACIERS.—From the sides of Mount St. Elias in Alaska—the highest mountain in America—vast glaciers run into the ocean, exceeding in grandeur and extent any found in Switzerland. Mount Baker and Tacoma, in Washington Territory, and Mount Hood, in Oregon, radiant with eternal snow, are more beautiful than Mont Blanc or the Matterhorn; the glaciers on Mount Tacoma equal those of these mountains, while, to add to the sublimity of the scene, smoke is frequently seen rising from the craters of Mount St. Elias and Mount Adams. There is probably no other country where, on the same parallel of latitude, and at the same elevation, there are such differences in climate, soil, and vegetation as on the east and west sides of the Cascade mountains. On the east are barren hills and plains, devoid of all vegetation save the sage-brush and bunch-grass: the climate is hot in summer, cold in winter, and dry as that of the Desert of Sahara. On the west side of the range, and not fifty miles away, the country is thickly studded with the finest of forest trees, abounding vegetable life, with a continuous rainfall, the climate mild in winter and temperate in summer. On the foot-hills in the western valleys the deep green of the Douglas fir, extending for hundreds of miles, contrasts with the pure white of the snow.

"Had Been Worried Eighteen Years."

It should have read "married," but the proof-reader observed that it amounted to about the same thing, and so did not draw his blue pencil through the error. Unfortunately there was considerable truth in his observation. Thousands of husbands are constantly worried almost to despair by the ill health that afflicts their wives, and often robs life of comfort and happiness. There is but one safe and sure way to change all this for the better. The ladies should use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

Two FACTS.—A careful study of the world as it is will satisfy anyone of these two facts: First, the best people are, as a rule, the least known. Those who are quietly building up the Christian civilization of the ages are like the coral insects in the Pacific. The reef rises year after year, but the builders do not grave their names upon it. They build not for themselves, but for humanity and for God. Second: The best part of human life does not get into history. History is a record of wars and catastrophes, of vices and crimes, rather than of the real progress of the race. And since this is so, why should any of us care about being famous in our day and generation? Is it not enough for us to do our daily duty in the fear of God and trust in him for the record and the reward? If we are his, our names are written in heaven. If we give even a cup of water in his name, he will report it to the universe in the great day. If we are faithful unto death, no matter how lowly our sphere, he will give us a crown of life, and we shall reign with him forever and ever.—Interior.

A fair trial of Hood's Sarsaparilla for scrofula, salt rheum, or any affection caused by impure blood, or low state of the system, will be sufficient to convince any one of the superior and peculiar curative powers of this medicine. Buy it of your druggist. 100 Doses One Dollar.

"MELICAN HEATHEN."—This story is going the rounds of the Eastern papers: A Chinaman applied for the position of cook in a family in a Western city. The lady of the house and most of her family are members of a fashionable church, and the Chinaman was questioned closely. "Do you drink whisky?" "No," said he; "I Clistian man." "Do you play cards?" "No; I Clistian man." He was employed, and gave great satisfaction. He did his work well; was upright, correct and respectful. After some weeks, the lady gave a progressive euchre party, and had wines at the table. John was called upon to serve the party, and did so with grace and acceptability. But the next morning he waited on the lady and said he wanted to quit. "Why, what is the matter?" she inquired. John answered: "I Clistian man; I tole you so before; no heathen. No workee for Melican heathen."

"Give Him $2, and Let Him Guess."

We once heard a man complain of feeling badly, and wondered what ailed him. A humorous friend said, "Give a doctor $2, and let him guess." It was a cutting satire on some doctors, who don't always guess right. You need not guess what ails you when your food don't digest, when your bowels and stomach are inactive, and when your head aches every day, and you are languid and easily fatigued. You are bilious, and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets will bring you out all right. Small, sugar-coated, easy to take. Of druggists.

Two Scotch fish-wives in London were talking about the Queen's jubilee. "Eh, wumman," said one to the other, "can ye tell me what a jubilee is, for I hear a' the folks spakin' about it?" "Ou, ay," replied the other, "I can tell ye that. Ye see, when a man and a wumman has been marrit tive-and-twenty years, that's a silver waddin'; and when they've been marrit for fifty years that's a gouden waddin'; but when the man's deed that's a jubilee!"

How to Gain Flesh and Strength.
Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion with Hypophosphites. It is as palatable as milk, and easily digested. The rapidity with which deliciate people improve with its use is wonderful. Use it and try your weight. As a remedy for Consumption, Throat affections and Bronchitis, it is unequaled. Please read: "I used Scott's Emulsion in a child eight months old with good results. He gained four pounds in a very short time."—THO. PRIM, M. D., Alabama.

A wealthy Methodist in Chicago in giving to the Missionary Society property valued at $125,000, justifies the purpose of the gift in these words: "Every man in America has had as good a chance to hear and obey the gospel as I have had. Therefore I propose to help those in the older world who have had lesser or no opportunities."

DON'T suppose, if you have that pain through the right side and shoulder blade, that yellow tinge of the skin and whites of the eyes, and furred appearance of the tongue, that these indications are of little account, or will depart of themselves; much better take Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Pillets and remedy the trouble. 25c. per vial.

Every ultimate fact is only the first of a new series; every general law only a particular fact of some more general law presently to disclose itself.—Emerson.

Sick headache, wind on the stomach, biliousness, nausea, are promptly and agreeably banished by Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Pillets. 25c. a vial.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

State Treasurer Tate, of Kentucky, has absconded, leaving a shortage in his accounts of about $250,000. He is said to have been seen in Canada.

The New England States are flooded by the rising rivers. Railway tracks are washed out, factories flooded and dams and bridges swept away.

In Concord, N. H., as a result of the liquor persecutions, every saloon was closed on the night of March 22, the proprietors refusing absolutely to make any sales.

Chief Justice Waite, of the United State Supreme Court, died on March 23.

The Democratic City and Parish Nominating Convention met in this city, on March 24, and nominated candidates for city and parish offices.

A convention of the farmers and stockmen of the Northwestern States and territories of the Mississippi Valley has been called to meet in Topeka, Kan., May 1, to organize a farmers' trust. The object of the organization is "to control shipments, thus regulating the supply of commodities offering in the public markets, and insuring fair prices."

The first business meeting of the International Council of Women was held March 24, in Washington, D. C.

The steamship "Alsatia," which arrived at the New York quarantine from Gibraltar, on the twenty-fifth instant, had thirteen cases of small-pox in the steerage.

Mississippi Mills, at Wesson, are having an additional mill built, which has become necessary to supply the increasing demand for their goods. When finished, it will employ 1,300 hands.

A party of forty families of Seventh-Day Adventists from Battle Creek, Mich., have bought 1,400 acres above Wesson, Miss. They will open up the land for truck farmers and build a church in Beauregard.

The boycott on the Burlington was raised at Denver, Col., on March 24.

It is estimated that the gross earnings of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, on account of the strike, will fall off over $1,200,000 for the month.

The united labor party of Cincinnati has indorsed the platform of the united labor party which is of the Henry George order.

The town of Nimneseah, Kan., was wrecked by a tornado on March 21. It destroyed everything in its path.

Owing to severe rain storms throughout Alabama, Louisiana and Mississippi, on March 26, the Warrior, Coosa and other rivers are greatly swollen.

FOREIGN.

Emperor William's birthday was celebrated in German cities on March 22.

Emperor Frederick continues so well that his physicians appear more hopeful than ever.

The Moscow Gazette, in an article discussing the rules of eminent international combinations, continues to urge the necessity of England joining Russia and France.

A theater burned down in Oporto, Portugal, on March 21, and the remains of over 100 victims have been recovered from the ruins.

The army commission of the French Senate has prepared a new recruiting bill. The bill subjects all citizens alike to service for twenty-five years. Students and others, who are exempted, have to pay taxes for such exemption. All sons of parents born in France, whether naturalized or not, are liable to service.

The Austrian Government has received a note from Russia denying that Russian troops are being concentrated in the Crimea.

The Irish Times says: The government meditates introducing a bill in the House of Commons erasing arrears of rent, the measure to be ante-dated two years.

Gold has been discovered in the Nipissing district, township of Cartier, within a mile of the Canadian Pacific track. The ore assays $800 per ton.

Gen. Count Von Lehndorff, the special German envoy, had an audience, on March 24, with the Emperor of Austria. He formally announced the accession of Emperor Frederick and expressed that monarch's thanks for the marks of sympathy shown him by the Austrian Emperor and his people.

Mr. William O'Brien addressed the Ponsonby tenants at Youghal on March 25, and afterward attempted to hold the meeting which had been proclaimed by the government. He mounted a car with the intention of addressing the people, but was seized by policemen and dragged to the ground.

A famine prevails in the Schatt district, Hungary, owing to the floods. At Preslaurg 2,000 people are being relieved partly by the government and partly by Count George Apponye.

The situation between the allies and Russia remains unchanged. The only altercation arises from the visit of the king of Roumania to Vienna, which has resulted in a definite treaty under which Austria pledges herself to resist any violation of Roumanian territory. Officers of the Roumanian army who are strongly pro-Russian are about to be removed and will be replaced by German or Austrian officers.

M. Wilson has been acquitted by the French Court of Appeals.

A Masonic service was held in Berlin, March 26, for the late Emperor William, who was a member of the order. It was attended by 2,000 distinguished Free Masons from all parts of the empire.

The French government has declined to accept Daly's proposals for a commercial treaty.

A French iron-clad fired at and struck an Italian steamer near Villa France. The commander of the iron-clad pleads as an excuse that the crew were practicing at the guns and a shot struck the steamer by accident.

H. PUQUIGNOT, P. E.

Sick headache is the bane of many lives; to cure and prevent this annoying complaint use Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Pillets. They are agreeable to take and gentle in their action.

Senator Blair, in his closing speech on the bill known as the "Blair Bill," made some statements, which, coming as they do from the United States Senate, are worthy to be pondered by us all. He said that much of the opposition to the bill comes from the Jesuits. He said their purpose is to control this continent by destroying our public school system. He further said, that "upon the staff of every great paper of this country is a Jesuit, and the business of that man is to see that a blow is struck, whenever there is an opportunity to strike at our common school system." It is ever true, "while men sleep the enemy comes and sows the tares."

VOICES OF THE NIGHT.

BY MRS. GEN. THOMAS MYERS.

In the silence of the midnight,
When the cares of day are o'er,
Many dreams I hear the voices
Of the loved ones gone before;
And they words of comfort whisper—
Say they watch on every hand,
And my soul is cheer'd by hearing
Voices from the spirit land.

Forms I've loved, though long they've left me,
Now seem gathering from afar,
And the balmy breath of Eden
Floats upon the midnight air;
Music from celestial bowers
Fill the chamber with strange grace,
And in dreams I hold communion
With my loved ones face to face.

While I tell of joys departed,
They recount triumphant love,
How the glorious Man of Sorrows
Fitted their homes above,
And they tell of living waters
Where life's streams forever roll,
And the towers of golden beauty
That shall satisfy thy soul.

As I listened faith grew stronger,
Midnight then became as day,
Messengers that brought such sweetness
Drove the shadows all away.
They have left me, but the glory
Filled my soul with untold rest,
And in faith I'll wait the promise
Of a mansion for the blest.

The Lilies of the Field.

As the spiritual is in all its forms and manifestations superior to the natural, it must far excel the latter in beauty. If God has so clad this old world in garments of waving grasses, enameled it with flowers, and adorned it with shining ranks of forest trees, then what must be the beauty of that higher realm of which these are but symbols! Some superficial critics, apparently incapable of distinguishing real sentiment from maudlin gush, would condemn our love of the beautiful, whether found in nature, art, or literature. And, moreover, if one ventures to express his admiration and appreciation of these, they are ready to sneer at the poor unfortunate for being weak or lacking in the essential quality of ideal manhood or womanhood. Such is not the spirit of the Master's teaching. Common things with us, things of our every-day life—flowers, seeds, fishes, sparrows, wheat fields, pennies—were used by him to illustrate truths that are startling in their weight and significance. And these were not used, as many are wont to imagine, in order to conceal truth, but to reveal it in clearer outlines and more majestic beauty.

Parable, symbol, type, are but indices which point out the great lessons of life and duty, and impress them so vividly upon the mind that the hidden meaning is fully apprehended. Since this is the divine mode of teaching, let us see what we may learn from a lily.

When the Savior bids his disciples "consider the lilies of the field," the leading thought in his mind was, no doubt, a rebuke to extravagance and pride. He here inculcates the lesson of modesty, and teaches that naturalness is an essential element in the general deportment of his followers. Pride is the most insidious foe to our spiritual life and progress. It meets one at the very threshold of life's temple, and stubbornly disputes with him every inch as he draws nearer God and heaven. Proteus-like, it assumes as many forms as the states of the soul it essays to deceive. With easy facility it transforms itself from a demon of darkness to an angel of light. Shameless and bold, it shines in the pew amid the glitter of precious baubles, and shimmer of gorgeous apparel; but does not halt there, for it rings in the song, presses into the chancel, and its voice is heard in prayer and sermon, mingling, like discord with melody, in the praise and worship of God. With secret cunning it creeps upon the soul ere it is aware; then springs, as a waiting lion, upon its prey to throttle its very life. No subterfuge is too false, no lie too mean, no hypocrisy too hateful, for its uses in achieving its end—the ruin and wreck of the soul. None are exempt from its insidious wiles; few are free from its hateful presence. Most men and women cherish it fondly, scarcely recognizing the viper pressed to their bosom, and, even when stung, fancy the deadly virus to be the tide of health and life coursing through their veins.

Its germ is found in the innocent heart of childhood; its budding, flourishing, growing in youth's bright season; its harvest of tares in the selfish, useless lives of thousands of full-grown men and women. I warn you against pride, against its subtlety, against its deceits, against its unfulfilled promises; for, in all its history, has it ever kept its word and given you the desire of your soul? Have not its brilliant promises eluded your grasp, proving them hollow mockeries, delusive dreams? "Honest pride" it delights to call itself, but will bear close watching under this pseudonym, for it lifts its victim to the loftiest summit of his expectations, shows him all the glory of the kingdoms of this world, then ruthlessly dashes him into the yawning chasm below. "Pride goeth before destruction, and a haughty spirit before a fall." It deceives, but to destroy; stoops not to deeds of mercy, 'tis too straitened; scorns acts of charity, 'tis too narrow and selfish. With cold stare and haughty mien the proud sweep by heeding not the pitiful cry of the unfortunate poor, nor heeding their importunities, for vanity, emptiness, a great void, is in that soulless temple of flesh and blood, and no cry of pity, no wail of anguish can be borne through its vacuum or reach its recesses. Cold as an iceberg, unfeeling as a stone, heartless as a marble Venus, the proud men or vain women pursue their way through life, observing only those things which will satisfy their own cravings or fill the insatiate void of their own empty hearts, caring nothing at all for the world of suffering humanity about them. Self-poised, self-centred, they fondly fancy they are, of all men, the most righteous, and all others were created for them. What a rebuke to such a life is the life of him who was meek and lowly! How the very genius of Christ's teaching antagonizes such!

Oh, Christian, learn the lessons of humility, modesty, purity, that the lily, reaching up its bell-like blossom toward heaven, would teach you! For of all the woes that have cursed the world, and clouded the atmosphere above, shutting out God's light and love, this human scorn of human brotherhood is the darkest.

Again, I learn from the lily a lesson of patient waiting. I am told to consider how it grows. It grows patiently, silently, without any hustle, anxiety, or turmoil; never seems to be in a hurry. Right there in that lowly spot where God has planted it, it sends down roots into the mold, absorbs juices, conveys them through intricate channels, incorporates them into its substance, and, by a subtle alchemy known only to its Creator, transforms them into bud, leaf, and bloom. It reaches out its broad fronds, catching dew, rain, or sunshine, as each minister of growth may come. It seems to realize there is a whole year of full seasons, during which it has ample time to complete its earthly career: the verdant spring, in which it may rejoice; the golden summer, in which to gather large experience and sturdier fibre; the hazy autumn, to ripen the harvest of a well-spent life, and the snowy winter, under whose mantle of snow it may die and be peacefully buried. What lessons of meekness, lessons of patience, lessons of growth in grace the lily teaches God's children!

Now, that the lily's sermon is over, let us hear its benediction. It is this: "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth and length and depth and height. And to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fullness of God."

Missouri Letter.

Miss Frances E. Willard often begins her address by giving the exclamation of the old colored woman: "Well, the first woman turned the world upside down, and now it looks like some of 'em was gwine to turn it right side up again!" Our brethren of the Methodist Episcopal Church evidently think this is the mission of the women, and, to promote their efforts in this direction, think it necessary to have some of them in their General Conference. Hence the Nebraska Conference has elected Mrs. Angie F. Newman, and the Rock River Conference has elected Miss Frances E. Willard lay delegates, while several Conferences have elected other women reserve lay delegates. It will evidently be necessary for the General Conference to have a Committee on Credentials, as not only have these women been elected, concerning whose right to seats a strong controversy is springing up in their church, but Bishop Fowler has been elected a reserve lay delegate from Dakota; John M. Phillips, one of the Book Agents of the New York Publishing House, lay delegate from Mexico; and Gov. Pattison, of New Jersey, from North India. A Bishop of the church, sitting as lay delegate, would be an anomalous proceeding; but our Northern Methodist friends do some queer things. The New York Christian Advocate, in a recent editorial, takes the position that neither Bishops nor women are eligible as lay delegates to the General Conference. It certainly sounds very absurd to call either a Bishop or a woman a layman.

A story is told of an amateur painter who, after he had finished a landscape sketch one day, found that he had the rocks in the foreground all wrong. A less ingenious man would have painted the rocks out, and sketched them in again. Not so this painter. He knew that he could depend more upon his skill with a lever than upon his skill with the pencil; and so he quickly went and moved the rocks he had copied so as to make them correspond with his painting. Perhaps it will be so with the Methodist Episcopal Church. Finding that they have a Bishop and some women on their hands who have no legal right to seats in the General Conference, they may make a special law for them, as they did in Bishop Taylor's case, and admit them.

Speaking of Bishops reminds me of one of our Missouri counties, which, within the last two years, has furnished the episcopacy with three men. Bishop Hendrix is a native of Howard county, and recently Bishops Talbot and Leonard, from the same county, have been ordained in the Protestant Episcopal Church. There have been some remarkable coincidences in the lives of these last-named gentlemen. They were boys together, starting to school the same day, and sitting at the same desk. They were confirmed together, together were ordained deacon and priest, each celebrated matrimony for the other, and they are now Bishops over neighboring dioceses.

You recently had an item in the ADVOCATE concerning the late Henry Clay Dean. Mr. Dean is a very lively corpse, and would indignantly resent any intimation that it was time for him to be buried. He lives at "Rebel's Cove," Putnam county, Iowa, and is one of the Old Guard of unreconstructed and unterrified rebels. He is a man of great talent; one of the finest orators in the West, and full of vast and varied information. Yet he is one of the most eccentric men living, and so slovenly in his personal habits as to have won the sobriquet of "dirty-shirt Dean."

I have noticed an item going the rounds of the papers concerning what is known in Jerusalem as "The American Colony." When in Jerusalem, just a year ago, I visited this colony, and found it composed of simple, earnest Christian people. There are about twenty of them, the men and women being about equal, most of whom are from Chicago. They went out to the Holy Land several years ago, feeling that they were sent by the Lord, and that he would open the way for them. They have a large, eligible house, which they rent from a Moslem, situated on a high point of ground just against the northern wall of the city, near the Damascus gate. They form a community with a common purse, and are living a quiet, unostentatious Christian life. They are held in universal esteem, and are respected alike by Moslem, Jew, Bedouin and Christian. Their charity to the poor and sympathy for every class are very beautiful, and their life is an object lesson, which is reaching a class that the missions can not touch. We were present at a very delightful Sabbath afternoon service at their house, in which everyone who felt so inclined took part. Besides the Americans and English who were there, several Turks were in attendance.

Missouri Methodism is vigorous and aggressive, and, with 78,000 Southern Methodists and 42,000 Northern Methodists in the State, we lead all the denominations. Our schools are doing well—better than ever before in their history—and the St. Louis Christian Advocate leads all the church papers in circulation except the "great official," and it is not far behind that. With two resident Bishops, two church papers, and our numerous schools and colleges, our growth should be continuous and healthy.

We are anxiously awaiting the advent of that new hymn book. Up this way, especially in the country, Gospel Hymns have largely usurped the standard books, and we hope to see a reformation when the new book makes its appearance. I have grown heartily tired of these "nummy-pummy" ditties with their loose theology and sickly sentimentalism, and want a return to the old landmarks. The grand old hymns of our fathers had sense and theology as well as rhythm, and I trust that, with the publication of our new book, many of these will again come into popular favor.

Conscience and Comity.

The following is an extract from the address delivered by Dr. S. P. Henson, at the love-feast in Chicago, held by the Baptists and Presbyterians:

Conscience is greatly to be respected even when it is perverted; only let us be sure that it is conscience that grips us, and not a contemptible gall-stone. "Help! Help! For the Lord's sake, help!" cried a pitiful voice on the battlefield. "What's the matter?" asked Pat, who was passing by. "My poor arm is shot off," said the wounded man. "For the love of mercy, take me to the hospital, quick, for I shall die if I lie here any longer." "I'll take ye there," said the warm-hearted Irishman, and, swinging him over his shoulder—for the wounded man was a stripling, and his rescuer was a stalwart—Pat trudged along in the direction of the hospital. The battle was not quite over yet, and a stray cannon ball went rushing past and, all unknown to Pat, took off the head of the poor fellow he was carrying. "What is that you have got?" asked the surgeon as he entered the gate. "It's a poor fellow that's been wounded," replied Pat, as he was about to lay his burden down. "I should say he was," ejaculated the astonished doctor, "for his head is blown off." "Faith, sure and he told me it was his arm," cried the still more astonished Irishman. Let us be sure as to what's the matter with us, and not call it a case of conscience when it's nothing but spleen. (Applause.)

Thank God for conscience when it is courageous and clear, and thank God for comity when conscience approves. May we not rejoicingly believe that both these are to be found in the happy union of hearts to-night? Some lessons of unspeakable value we have learned in these latter days, and among them, we think, are such as these: That the best of all ways to propagate the truth is to speak it in love, and that we can not mend glass windows by pelting them with stones; that it takes two to make a quarrel, and that if either drops the battledore the shuttlecock is sure to fall. That one may cast out devils without following with us, and that if he is doing a good work for the Lord, it is not our province to forbid his working. That the things in which we agree are more and greater than the things in which we differ. That there are people in Chicago that need extermination a good deal more than Presbyterians. (Applause.)

You Presbyterians have come to believe that a blessed baby can go safe home to heaven without the sprinkling of water from ministerial finger-tips, and we Baptists, that a full-grown Presbyterian may finally reach the better land without having gone by the water route. We have mutually come to understand that not all of Israel crossed the Jordan. The tribe of Reuben and the tribe of Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh, persistently remained on the other side: but, in the muster-rolls of Israel's armies, just the same, they were counted in. And yet it is a trial to us to leave even "Jordan roll between," and so we Baptists stand on the river bank, and, in the fullness of fraternal love, we cordially cry out to our Presbyterian brethren, "Come over and dwell with us, and we will do you good."

But if that may not be for a little time—we do not doubt it will be some time—we rejoice to share this transient feast, to share this foretaste of the millennium. Yea, is it not a foretaste of that brighter glory and larger blessedness of which we shall have experience when "they shall come from the east and from the west, from the north, and from the south," to the marriage supper of the Lamb? And John Knox, and Roger Williams, and Thomas Chalmers, and Andrew Fuller, and David Brainerd, and Adoniram Judson, and Jonathan Edwards, and Francis Wayland shall hold high converse. And may we not hope that all who are rejoicingly present to-night in this goodly company may be members of that General Assembly sitting together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus and forever partaking of the feast of love?—Chicago Standard.

The Church at Fault.

If the Methodist ministry has lost power in the pulpit, the church is largely to blame for it. There was a time when our people judged a preacher by his fruits the present visible results of his ministry. When they spoke of a great sermon they did not refer to its intellectual power, but to the revival that followed it; they did not quote in aesthetic admiration some striking metaphor, but they told who was struck down; they did not compare brilliant passages, each according to his taste, but they commented on the consolations they had felt, or upon the hopes which had been inspired. Every preacher felt that his position in the Conference depended upon his power, upon his usefulness—that he was measured, not by his literature, but by his sheaves; not by his oratory, but by the prosperity of his charge. But now the church wants a preacher who can attract the young people and fill the house; who is abreast with modern ideas, and will connive at all the innovations of those whose only idea of church improvement is in stripping Methodism of her individuality; who will deliver short, pretty orations, and not worry the people about their souls and such things as heaven and hell and a world on fire. I have noticed in all the Conferences that, under this class of men (and they are in great demand), the church regularly wilts and dwindles, prayer meetings die out, family altars are broken down, and the good old mellow, melting love-feasts that wrapped a man's soul in an air as balmy as paradise, and made him feel as rich as the gold of the New Jerusalem, are all numbered with the things that were. Take heed to yourselves, brethren; the church herself may corrupt you by erecting false standards of merit and tempting you to collude with her mistakes. It is your business (as ministers) to mould the church, not to be moulded by her.—Bishop Geo. F. Pierce, D. D.

ADMINISTRATIVE GENIUS.—It has been said that the Emperor William's greatest achievement was his discovery of Bismarck and Von Moltke. It was after the new Chamber, in September, 1862, rejected the military budget by an overwhelming majority, that the King gave the Presidency of the Cabinet, with the portfolio of foreign affairs, to Otto von Bismarck-Schonhausen. From that date the political history of Prussia is almost identical with the biography of this formerly ultra-reactionary nobleman. William's will and intentions disappear in the intense light of Bismarck's personality. All history has no parallel to this long, unwavering, unhesitating, and grateful submission of a mighty monarch, sound in body and mind, and surrounded by a host of eminent men, to the exclusive guidance of a single genius. Nor does history offer another example of a ministerial career so invariably and surpassingly crowned with success through a quarter of a century. Looking at the course of events from a standpoint at which results appear to have justified much that was originally questionable or condemnable, it is the glory of William I., as it was the good fortune of Germany, that throughout a series of extraordinary contests, political and military, he was, in fidelity to duty as he perceived it, satisfied with giving sanction to Bismarck's advice in council and Moltke's directions in the field.

I SING FOR SIGHT

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

"I'll drop my burden at His feet,
And bear a song away."

Over the garden I stood in
That led from my Lord's door,
I went with a benefit of the Master,
As oft I had gone before.
My heart was heavily laden,
And with tears my eyes were dim;
But I knew I should keep the burden
Could I get a glimpse of Him.

It was more than I could carry,
If I kept it all alone;
And none of my house might share it
Only One on the throne.
Drear was the way between me and pleasure,
Between my work and rest;
But our Lord could understand it,
And his touch could set me free.

Over the trodden pathway,
To the fields all shorn and bare,
I went with a step that faltered,
And a face that told of care.
I had lost the light of the morning,
With its shimmery of sun and dew;
But a gracious look of the Master
Would the strength of morn renew.

While yet my courage wavered,
And the sky before me blurred,
I heard a voice behind me
Saying a tender word.
And I turned to see the brightness
Of heaven on earth restored,
And sudden lost the pressure
Of the weary, crushing load.

Nothing that hour was altered,
I had still the weight of care;
But I bore it with a new gladness
Which could only answered prayer.
Not a step on the road was better,
Not clear the way before,
The desert, only as the spirit
To become to his will more.

"Friends" all the [illegible]
His love can make so light,
Why should his wonderful patience
Our half-at-ease negligence
The little sharp vexations,
And the [illegible]
Shall we not take them to the Helper
Who has never failed us yet?

Tell him, along the heartache,
And tell him the longings, too,
Tell him the baffled purposes,
Which we scarce know what to do.
Then, leaving all our weakness
With the One divinely strong,
Forget that we bore the burden,
And carry away the song.

Take Heed How You Read.

BY REV. B. M. DRAKE.

There is in the printing press great power for good. Not only is it one of the bulwarks of our civilization and freedom, but it has been, and may still be, largely useful in the propagation and cultivation of Christianity. Its power for good is, however, limited and often counteracted by bad management and by the ignorance of the people and their indifference to their own culture. Many books and papers, whose tendency is to vitiate and degrade, are issued by our free press; and these seem to find their way into the homes of our people much more readily than those which are improving and ennobling. Even where reasonable prices place good books within the reach of the people, many refuse to buy who need them most. But there is another limitation, which is, in part, consequent upon the wonderful reduction which has taken place during the last few years in the price of books. Cheap books and cheap papers place so much reading matter within reach that most people who read at all read too much and too fast to digest what they read. They read to accomplish such or such an amount of reading, or merely for the pleasure it affords them, or for some reason even less worthy; and, consequently, their reading does not improve and strengthen the mind as it ought. This is the case not only with light literature, but it holds good with regard to a more solid class of reading—even the Bible forms no exception to this habit of careless reading: hence the fact that, though most families have the Bible and profess to read it, there is so small an effect visible in the lives of many of our people. This kind of reading does no good, but, more than that, it does harm. Undigested reading, like undigested food, is injurious. The mind, which ought to be broadened and strengthened by its food, is, instead, weakened and gradually becomes diseased. Eventually a sort of mental dyspepsia results, so that the mind does not retain even the most wholesome reading taken in the smallest quantities. To avoid this our people need to be taught how to read.

The object of reading is not altogether to gain information, much less is it to please the fancy or to keep up with the times, etc. Its chief object is to strengthen the mind, and to improve it generally. Not he is greatest who has read most, but he who has gained most knowledge that he can put to a practical use. He gains most from reading who, by it, disciplines his mind to think strongly and correctly. This throws light on how to read. Do not attend so much to how much you read as to how you read. Think as you read, and do not read more than you can digest. Try to remember all you read. A book that is not worth remembering is not worth reading.

He who would preserve his physical health is careful to take the right amount of wholesome food and to masticate it well. It is then easily digested, and is assimilated, supplying strength to the body. You must take similar precaution if you would preserve your mental health. Read only the best books, and do not try to read too many of them. Read them carefully, and not too fast. By a sort of mental mastication make them your own. Then they will be easily digested and assimilated till they become a part of your very life. So shall your mind grow strong and your life noble.

Take heed how you read.

MCCALEB, Miss., March 26, 1888.

Cheap Religion.

We often hear of cheap goods, cheap living, cheap entertainments, cheap literature. To this list we may be allowed to add—cheap religion. We attach to anything "cheap" several ideas: It did not cost much: it is worth more than it cost, or it is of little value.

We do not depreciate "true religion" when we speak of "cheap religion" any more than we depreciate strong, real "broadcloth" when we mention "shoddy." Cheap religion is something attempted to be passed off in the place of true religion. Cheap articles are usually poor in material, worse in fabric, worst in wear. What was a seeming good "print," when the starch is wasted out of it, is flimsy, and worthless for clothing, or even for making a good sieve. Cheap religion has several important peculiarities. Persons who profess it are ignorant of when and how they got it, and equally ignorant of the fact and method of its loss. It cost but little deep mental agony or true evangelical repentance; therefore, it is but little prized. It has nothing in it of value except so far as mere "profession of religion" can give some respectability in society. It has great faith in God in a certain direction, and when truth can accommodate itself to the selfish wishes of an unsaved heart. God operates on human souls through his truth and Spirit. Human salvation is a gracious miracle. It is very humble, so much so as to hesitate to do anything lest God's glory might be interfered with. "Stand still and see the salvation of God," is most excellent advice to indolent self. The heathen will be saved "in God's good time," why should I attempt to interfere with God's plans and purposes? He will select the proper means and instruments.

Cheap piety is remarkably liberal in regard to others. Self-negation is very prominent when the call is made for gifts and labors for God's church. There is the broadest spirit of willingness that others should furnish means and men, and receive all the honor and pleasure of "well-doing." Scripture is again obeyed: "In honor preferring one another."

Cheap religion is apparently remarkably spiritual in its views. Human means and agencies should not be allowed to interfere with the spiritual work and result of the grace of God. Men must be born of the Spirit.

Cheap religion is noted for its prudence and economy. Everything is God's gift, and we are stewards, responsible for its safe keeping. If I give to the missionary cause, the money might be lost or misspent. As a matter of personal responsibility, I ought to keep my means around me, and not hazard them in the hands of others—I am responsible.

It is not best that the ministry should be too well paid. They might imitate Jeshuron. Humility is a crowning grace. Trust in God's providence should be kept in lively exercise. Anyhow, the apostolic method was "without scrip or purse." "The love of money is the root of all evil." It is wrong to lead the preacher into temptation. How much more he resembles his Master if he has "no place where to lay his head"! Whether I pay anything or not, preaching will still go on.

Cheap religion is not willing to subscribe for a church paper, or buy a church periodical, or a religious book. Everyone has a right to his religious opinions. It is not proper to bias these opinions by influencing the minds of children. It is, therefore, best to let my children grow up before they get any fixed religious opinions. If I should keep religious newspapers or books in the house, I might do harm. Besides, I can get a secular weekly paper for less than my church paper costs, and get one of Talmage's sermons every week, as well as the price of hogs and corn, tobacco, wheat and cattle. Anyhow, I can borrow my neighbor's "county paper," and get all the news we need. By saving two dollars a year—the cost of a church paper—I can buy a pair of shoes to plow in, or a supply of smoking tobacco.

Cheap religion helps to swell the names of its votaries on the church roll, and gratifies church pride and self-importance. Too many people give simply "to be seen of men." To protect my reputation I'll not give anything just now, but wait awhile for the right time to come.

A CHEAP CHRISTIAN.

P. S.—Extravagance is the rule everywhere, in the church and out of it. When I was a boy, twenty-five cents was all Methodists were expected to pay each quarter. A preacher did not get as much for preaching as a good negro would hire for. Now, I understand, the preachers get three hundred dollars, and some five hundred. What extravagance! Bro. Paul "worked with his own hands, and supported himself." That is the kind of preacher we like down our way. A. C. C.

Women Stewards.

In your issue of March 8, Bro. "Gilderoy," in answer to J. E. B., says there is nothing in the Discipline forbidding the election of women to the office of steward, etc. Now, we admit everything nice that he has said about the women, and especially their qualifications for doing the work of a steward. But qualification is not the question at issue. But, under our church polity, can women be elected to the office of steward legally? We answer, No. The law says, "Let the stewards be men of solid piety," etc. Now, I contend that no kind of reasoning can change the masculine gender into the feminine where it is used so specifically as it is used in this requirement. It is not who can fill the office altogether, but what kind of persons—men, not women, of solid piety. The civil law says all male persons of certain age can vote. The law is specific as to gender, and none but male persons can vote under that law.

If there was no specific law on the subject, by analogy we would reason. In the composition of a General Conference (¶ 34, Ans. 2, page 35): "And he may be a local preacher." Here it is evident that the law contemplates that the membership of said Conference will be male delegates, consequently the pronoun he; and you can't make the pronoun he mean she, as the gender is especially named; and so we may conclude throughout all the Conferences, reasoning by analogy. A steward is, ex-officio, a member of the Quarterly Conference; therefore, passes on the character of local preachers. This gives the women stewards a vote on the passage of the ministerial characters, as also the licensing and recommending preachers.

We hope Bro. "Gilderoy" will keep the question properly before him: Not what wonderful things the good sisters can do (we all admit that), but what is the law in the case. Now, I doubt not but that some good sister could preach better than Bro. "Gilderoy" or myself. But will he contend that because they can the Lord designs that they should preach?

As Bishop Kavanaugh would say, let us mix a little gospel with the law, and see what St. Paul would say on this question (1 Corinthians iv; 2): "Moreover, it is required in stewards that a man be found faithful." (1 Corinthians xiv, 34, 35): "Let your women keep silence in the churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak." "For it is a shame for women to speak in the church." Now, holding office implies the right of voting: voting implies the right of speaking. But the apostle says they are not "permitted to speak." Certainly he does not intend to teach us that women shall not tell what the Lord has done for them spiritually, for this they may do in the great congregation while engaged in worship—not a business Conference. Neither does he forbid them praying in the worshiping assembly, but in taking part in the business discussions of the church. Stewards discuss the business of the church; therefore, women ought not to be stewards. (1 Timothy iii, 1-12). Here are officers of the church spoken of, stating qualification, etc. The bishop and the deacons shall be the husbands of one wife—not that the deaconess shall be the wife of one husband. We might give many other passages from the book to show that the apostles did not recognize female officers in the church. But we only give one other passage—(Acts vi, 3, 6). Here seven men of honest report were selected to attend to the temporal affairs of the church. The names of these seven are given—not a woman among them; and it would have been a good time to appoint a woman, as their widows were to be looked after as well as other temporal matters, as the apostles could "not leave the Word of God to serve tables."

Now, we admit all that our good women are doing in the cause of the Master, and feel that they are doing a noble work in their missionary operations; but a missionary society is not the church, while the church is a missionary society—it is more. The one is the institution of God; the other, of pious men and women to aid the church in her work. God speed the noble women of the church in their great work, for we are with them heart, hand and purse. And I am proud to say that I have yet to see a Southern woman who desires to be a delegate to Conference, or a steward in the church. Let them work; help them work; pray for their work, but don't elect them stewards or delegates. They do not want it; and, under the economy of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, it is not legal for them to have it.

K. A. JONES.

From Troyville, La.

MR. EDITOR: I got here on January 16, during the worst weather of the winter. Owing to continued bad weather and roads, I made no start on my work until February. I have made one round, and am now making the second. My circuit is entirely in the swamp, every appointment but two being on, or very near, the bank of the river. Three appointments are in Concordia, and seven in Catahoula parish. It is about eighty-five miles long by way of the rivers, extending from near the mouth of Black river to the French Fork of Little river, and the appointments are so situated that I have to travel the full distance around the rivers to get to them. I have no horse yet; but, through the kindness of Capt. H. D. Vaughan, of the steamer "Tributary," I go free of charge very near most of my appointments, and when I go as far as I can on the boat, I walk the balance of the way. I have never met a more clever and sociable people anywhere than in this country, though in most places true religion is very scarce. However, I have met a few good, warm-hearted Christians. In some places the religious sentiment is greatly divided. Campbellism seems to be the greatest obstacle in the progress of pure heart felt religion. We have Free Methodists, Missionary Baptists, some Catholics, and a few Presbyterians, besides the Campbellites; and, in my opinion, all the others united are not so destructive to pure Christianity as Campbellism. Campbellism openly denies the operations of the Holy Spirit (so sacred to every true Methodist), and considers it a mere fanatical delusion. It teaches that Christianity means nothing more, nor is there anything else required for salvation, than a public acknowledgment of the Sonship of Christ and baptism by immersion. One of their members attaches so much to baptism that he says it is worth a million dollars to him, and he professes to have nothing else as evidence of his salvation. They hold that conversion means nothing else but a formal renunciation of evil habits.

Well, I have been to Larto. Some of our brethren know, or have heard, of Larto. It used to have a very bad name. I was told when I came here that it was a dangerous place for preachers; that they had run some preachers out of the neighborhood, or, at least, had forbid them to come back in it. Well, others may say what they please about the people of Larto; but, for myself, I can say that I never was better treated anywhere, and I never saw a people more anxious to hear the gospel than they are. Larto is the name given to the settlement on Larto Lake, in the fork of Red and Black rivers, and, like a great deal of the swamp country of Louisiana, has had but little opportunity of hearing the gospel. My spirit groans within me to see the great destitution in some parts of this country.

I found grown young men and women in that country that have never heard exceeding a dozen sermons in their lives. I was in company, a few days ago, with a citizen of Concordia parish, who is well acquainted all over the parish, and who told me that there was not a preacher in the parish, and all the preaching there is in the parish is the three appointments I have, and one Baptist appointment on Black river, and a local preacher of Natchez preaches in Vidalia. How is this? Four churches on the extreme western border, and one on the eastern, of a parish of 15,000 inhabitants, 5,000 of which (approximately) are white people. The same man told me that there are neighborhoods in which he has no recollection of a preacher ever being in, and that there are grown people who have never heard a sermon. How does this speak to our people who have been raised up under the sound of the gospel, and never knew anything but good Christian society and schools and all the other blessings of religion? "The harvest, indeed, is great; but the laborers are few." More anon.

Yours fraternally,

GEO. T. ASHBY.

Seed Sown that Will Bear Fruit.

MR. EDITOR: Carrollton and the Carrollton circuit have just been favored with a visit by our Conference colporteur and Sunday-school agent, Rev. G. W. Bachman. He spent about ten days with us, and did good work in the way of putting good books and papers in the hands of our people, and by preaching four good sermons and stimulating the people to greater zeal in the Sunday-school work. He sold about $70 worth of books and tracts, and got quite a number of subscriptions and renewals for the NEW ORLEANS and Nashville Advocates.

Bro. Bachman is the right man in the right place, doing a work that otherwise would not be done. Any pastor would do well to arrange for Bro. Bachman to spend one or two weeks in his work. He is prepared to impress the people with the necessity of furnishing themselves and their families with good religious books and papers. My experience as a pastor is, that the more the people read our books and papers, the more they are willing to do for the church, and I am satisfied if we could put one of our Advocates in each family in our church, all the demands upon them would be met; and I, for one, am trying to get every family in my circuit to take one of our church papers. We already have quite a number, and don't intend to stop until we have as many papers as we have families in the Carrollton circuit.

SPARTA AND SALINE CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to the ADVOCATE for some time, I thought I would write this morning, as this circuit is on the old plan. But, nevertheless, we have people here who look after the interest of their pastor. Here they come with corn and potatoes, meat, and a great many other things for our comfort, and a small purse of cash for this preacher. Now, as they minister temporal things to us, may God help us to give them spiritual things.

Mr. Editor, I must say this people are improving spiritually. Bro. John A. Miller, of Arcadia, will dedicate our new church at Bear Creek the fifth Sunday in April. It will be out of debt. Pray for us, that we may be wholly consecrated to God and the work.

P. BURKETT.

GALLMAN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I wish to say that I have received ten cents from a little friend in Louisiana, also $2 from "A Widow" living in Richland, Miss., in response to my request for aid to finish our new church at Gallman, Miss.; for which we are thankful, and hope aid may still continue to come.

Respectfully,

MARY HUNTER.

SENATOBIA, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: The second quarterly meeting for Senatobia station was held last Saturday and Sunday, and it was a season of grace to all present. The presiding elder, Rev. S. M. Thames, preached two strong, scriptural sermons, and gave careful attention to the business of the Conference. Steps have been taken to enlarge and improve the parsonage, and the work will be done at an early day. The finances up in full to date. The rule here is to pay in full each quarter. This should be the rule everywhere. Our prayer meeting is one of the most interesting and profitable meetings of the kind I ever attended.

Rev. J. H. Brooks, a superannuated member of the North Mississippi Conference, was here some days before and during the quarterly meeting, visiting his daughter and old friends in this town. It is really refreshing to find a man growing old beautifully as Bro. Brooks is doing. Bro. Brooks has long been known as the "historical preacher." Old Testament history, as he renders it, is more interesting and entertaining than the most charming novel. When I was a boy I used to ride as far as forty miles to hear him tell the story of Joseph, Elijah the Tishbite, Abraham offering Isaac, Jacob and Esau, the finding of Moses, and the history of Rehoboam and Jeroboam. He took his time, but always quit too soon for me. I always went home to re-read the old story with absorbing interest. A book of Bro. Brooks' historical sermons would "go like hot cakes" among the young folks. I would give a pretty sum if I had these sermons just as he uttered them in his best moods. He preached for us on Sunday night, on Elijah the Tishbite, to the edification and spiritual profit of a large congregation. It was an old, old story, but fresh and brand new as Bro. Brooks told it.

Well, well, these blessed old people who link us to the past are getting to be few and mighty far between in this country. They are going home.

Yours, GILDEROY.

HOLLY SPRINGS, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Fires of Pentecost began to burn in our church on Sunday, March 18, and continued to glow for one week. Heaven only kept record of conversions. The revival spirit remains, and services will be resumed every six weeks during the entire year. Thirty-eight accessions to our church since Conference, with more to follow next Sunday.

CONTINENTAL TEMPERANCE.—Robert J. Burdette thus remarks on continental temperance:

If there is one passage in the letters of American travelers in Europe more tiresome than another, it is this: "During our six weeks' stay in Paris we did not see a single drunken person." Then they travel through Switzerland, Germany, Austria, Italy and Spain, and all France, and still they do not see a drunken person." They attribute the sobriety of the people to the fact that everybody drinks wine and beer; drink it at all time, and lots of it, with no high license and prohibition nonsense to bother them; consequently they never get drunk. Well, now, the only inference one can draw from these remarkable letters is that either the writers themselves were blind drunk all the time they were in Paris, or the Parisian drunkard is a most successful hider. Because, while our travelers last year did not see a single instance of drunkenness in Paris, the official police records state that the police of Paris saw and arrested, on an average, one hundred and fifty people every day between January 1 and April 30, for being drunk on the streets. So many drunkards are not arrested in New York, and yet these travelers of ours always contrast the sobriety of Europe with the excesses of America. It is just as well to bear in mind the official report while reading these letters, and perhaps if the writers drank less and thought more, they would remember that official returns will not always agree with letters from the guide-book.

Tailoring.

Nice good men are tailors, and useful withal; as are tinners and physicians and lawyers and merchants, to say nothing of printers and editors; all good in their way after their manner.

Fashion plates—let us not despise them, for they are not without modicum of good; otherwise Christian men and women might not know how to dress as Christians and not as heathen Chinese. But as we do not expect fashion plates with their comments to discuss grave theologies, so neither theologic reviews to discuss tailoring, as does our late American Church Review.

Let us not be misunderstood. We take for breakfast our cup of coffee; have little preferences therein; not inconsistent with living the life of Christ, but most inconsistent with that life when the drinker begins to discuss it: Mocha, java, Maracaibo, so many spoonfuls of ground coffee to the cup, so much cream, so much sugar, so many degrees of Farenheit. As soon as such topics get discussed with appetite and smacking of the lips the interior life gets evaporated.

Let us not be misunderstood. We like surplice, coming down from the long ages, and prefer it clean. We like shirt, it distinguishing us from barbarian Celt or Norseman, and prefer it clean, prefer it fitting about the neck, lest choking come upon us and we be hurried off unrallied or. Surplice and shirt: both like excellent and to be used: but the moment we discuss them and talk of them, then we get the mind of the shirt-maker, saw little thereby: for how can he be wise whose talk is of oxen? how can he be wise whose talk is of shirt or surplice?

Opening our one only Church Review we had a right to expect large and wise topics discussed; but instead thereof have "fashion plates!" Alas! what is our Review editor thinking about? Pictures of stole, pictures of surplice, pictures of alb, pictures of mice!

This is bad enough, but to have these garments, these "old clo'!" offered to us as our duty to put on. Has the editor no wisdom? has he never read the decisions of the courts?

Act of Parliament, which the fashion-plate writer in the Review quotes, is "that such ornaments of the Church and the ministers thereof shall be retained and be in use as were in this Church of England by authority of Parliament in the second year of the reign of King Edward VI., till other order shall be taken," etc. If no other order has been taken, then in the Church of England all ornaments and vestments in use during the first prayer-book of Edward are to be in use now. But such order was taken. In 1561, the Advertisements of Elizabeth appeared, permitting in cathedral and collegiate churches a cope during the celebration of the holy communion; but except at this time and there, in all other churches, there was to be during public prayer and sacraments no other garments but "a comely surplice with sleeves."

The question of other ecclesiastical garments save the surplice came up before the Dean of Arches in 1870, with Mr. Purchas defendant. The dean decided that all other vestments save the surplice were unlawful. The same matter was referred to a higher court in 1871. The Lord Chancellor showed that the Advertisements of Queen Elizabeth had overruled the "ornaments rubric," and again decided that copes (save as above), albs, vestments called apparels, tibbets, stoles, dalmatics, maniples were unlawful, the Advertisements making them unlawful, and the fact that from their date to the time when the "Advanced" began their use they had not been much as seen and hardly heard of in the Church. In 1877 the same question came up as regards albs and chasuble, and was decided against them.

There has never been in this Church since its origin in England, men more determined to make their own tastes and opinions and whims and fancies their rules than these "Advanced" men. They agree not with the Holy Church, nor with the Greek Church, nor with the Roman Church, nor with their own Church, nor with the Protestant Churches. As the silk worm spins its cocoon out of its own bowels, so they spin out of their own tastes and opinions what they like, in spite of rules, laws and canons. They do not like the prayer-book, want a new one; change not the customs of this Church, have made new ones; they like not even the name Protestant, want that changed so they may appear in agreement with that portion of the Church which has not been reformed of its deformities. Beware of these men; they be mischief-makers, they aim to unprotestantize this Church, they have no love for it, they be not even so much as churchmen, be mongrels, be medleys, be jumbles, be mixtures, a kind of odds and ends, whose aim is patchwork, a hodge-podge, as old Latimer calls the non-Protestants of his day. Is all discipline in this Church a thing of the past?—Churchman.

Incident in Bishop Kavanaugh's History.

"Kentucky," whose nom de plume will be recognized by most of our readers, contributes the following incident in the life of Bishop Kavanaugh, to the Richmond Advocate:

"In years gone by H. H. Kavanaugh was stationed in the queen city of the famous 'blue grass'—Lexington. He had reached the zenith of his often unequaled pulpit powers and of his childlike,—pious simplicity. It was during one of the periodic excitements on temperance; when the 'noble women,' the Martha Washingtonians, were profoundly in earnest. There was an annual meeting held in Dr. H.'s church, the leading Presbyterian church of the country. The most elegant ladies and of the most refined circles were met to hear Rev. Kavanaugh address them by especial invitation of a month's standing. The spacious church was filled with just such an audience as that cultured and refined city could assemble. After sweetest music by the united choirs and appropriate prayer by the reverend D. D., Bro. Kavanaugh, the eloquent Methodist preacher, was presented in due form, and began his address. It was like himself—genial, polished, strong in thought, robed in simple, beautiful words. We were all delighted. All at once the thought-string broke and the orator stopped, put his hand to his brow, as if feeling for the broken thread or repairing some part of the hidden brain machinery. He paused for a long moment, when Methodist pride was below par, and Presbyterian, Baptist and Episcopalian wondered what was wrong. The man was equal to the emergency. His troubled face now gleamed with hope, the hand was taken from the brow. He spoke: 'That puts me in mind of an occurrence' ('that' never had any connection or explanation): 'A fellow, who was accustomed to get drunk, was taken in his stupid, unconscious state to a grave-yard, placed in a coffin, the lid loosely put on, and he left there to wake, with the idea that the grave-yard and coffin would break up his appetite for strong drink and make a sober man of him. They watched the coffin until about sun-down, when the man rose in his coffin, and with mandlin tone uttered: "Is they all riz? If so, I's belated." There was one universal laugh all over the house. Presbyterian primness and Episcopal order wilted. None more heartily laughed than the orator at the apparently ridiculousness of the scene. In a moment, recovering himself, he said: 'As I was remarking,' and resumed his previous train of thought, and delivered one of the gladest addresses ever heard in that classic city. He told that incident to amuse his audience while he hunted up the ends of his broken thought-thread."

Woman's Enlarging Sphere.

In speaking of woman's capacity for work, the Baltimore American says: "Her influence in politics is always strong. In numerous cases she has held and is holding office, and it is an instructive fact that no woman has ever been dismissed from an important public position for inefficiency. She does her work promptly and does it well. Her usefulness in business as a correspondent or clerk or typewriter or manager is acknowledged everywhere. Throughout the United States there are thousands of successful women farmers. We have a number in Maryland, and they manage estates in a way that keep the balances on the right side of the ledger. Idaho has a horse queen who owns between seven and eight hundred horses, and although only twenty-three years old, she is making a fortune. Mrs. Deborah Powers of Lansingburg, N. Y., is slightly older, being ninety-seven; but she has vigor enough to be at the head of a banking house. In New Hampshire the other day the stockholders of the Dover horse railroad unanimously elected Mrs. Dow president, and she showed her good sense by at once reducing the fares to five cents, and in her business career she has made her private fortune of $40,000 grow into $100,000. A hundred instances could be cited of women who exercise controlling interests in large manufacturing concerns. In literature woman is unprecedentedly active. More than half of the books published in this country last year were written by feminine pens. In the fine arts she wields a large power, and in journalism she is making both money and reputation. One of the most successful speculators in New York is a woman and a millionaire; but in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, a woman touches speculation at her cost, and her best policy is to let it alone. Many men complain of a decrease in opportunities for employment. They forget that this is due to woman's competition. She does not stand on the street corner and wait for work. She searches for it, and when she finds it she holds on to it. Men of spasmodic activity need not expect to outdo her persistency, and the only way they can equal it is to follow her example. The time will come when women will be paid as well as men. There is no reason why she should not receive equal wages for the same labor, and the tendency is naturally and invitably in her favor. Her enthusiasm is a credit to herself and a stimulus to the sterner sex. May her success increase."

"Purgatory Bullets."

An excited Irishman lately rushed into a Boston drugstore, having a "broken-up" appearance generally. "Be jabbers!" he yelled, "I'm all wrong entoirely. I want some shtuff to straighten me out. Some o' thim 'Purgatory Bullets' will fix me, I'm thinkin'. What d'ye tax for thim?" "What do you mean?" asked the clerk. "'Purgatory Bullets,' sor, or somethin' loike that, they call thim," replied the man. "Shure, I'm in purgatory already, with headache, and liver complaint, and bad shtomach, and nobody knows what all!" The clerk passed out a vial of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, and Pat went off contented. These little Pellets cure all derangements of liver, stomach and bowels. Sugar-coated, little larger than mustard seeds, and pleasant to take. Druggists.

HANDWRITING.—Napoleon wrote the worst hand on record—so had that his letters to Josephine from Germany were sometimes taken for maps of the seat of war. Sidney Smith wrote once to Jeffrey that he had tried to read a letter of the great reviewer from left to right, and Mrs. Sidney from right to left: but neither of them could decipher a single word. Of Sidney's own hand it has been said that, with the exception of Jeffrey's, it was the worst the printers had to puzzle out for the Edinburgh Review.

Dr. Chalmers' handwriting was also perplexing, and often defied all attempts to read it. It is said that when his father received a weekly or fortnightly letter from his eminent son, he carefully locked it up. After a store had accumulated, the son would come and pay him a visit, upon which he would break all the seals and ask the writer of the letters to read them.

The handwriting of Prof. Huxley, whose style is the ideal of lucidity, is almost undecipherable; the pot-hooks of Darwin are so utterly without form and void that there was evidently no process of "natural selection" in their choice.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Tutt's Pills

REGULATE THE BOWELS.

Habitual Costiveness

Causes derangement of the entire system, and begets diseases that are hazardous to life. Persons of a costive habit are subject to Headache, Dyspeptic Symptoms, Gloomy Forebodings, Nervousness, Fevers, Drowsiness, Irritable Temper and other symptoms, which make life a burden. No sufferer for business or agreeable associations. Regular habit of body alone can correct these evils, and nothing succeeds so well in achieving this condition as Tutt's Pills. By their use not only is the system renovated, but in consequence of the harmonious changes thus created, there pervades a feeling of satisfaction; the mental faculties perform their functions with vivacity, and there is an exhilaration of mind, freedom of throat, and perfect heart's ease that bespeaks the full enjoyment of health.

SECRET OF BEAUTY

Is health. The secret of health is the power to digest a proper quantity of food. The soon never broken when the liver does not perform its part. It is the driving wheel in the mechanism of man, and when it is out of order, the whole system becomes deranged, and Fever, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Constipation, Jaundice, Bilious Colic and General Debility ensue. To restore the functions of the Liver and Impart that beauty which always attends a healthy constitution, Dr. Tutt's Liver Pills are recommended. They act on a new principle, but are designed solely for the disordered Liver and the diseases which it produces.

Briefs.

The church-letter system is proving so full of perplexities that its abolition is being called for. Many members are lost to us by it. Sometimes the letter is used as a covert to shelter a backslidden life. If the transfer of membership was made by correspondence of preachers or by statute, so as to locate it wherever residence is taken, both the safety of the individual and purity of the church would be preserved.

M. Ragozine, in his delightful little book—"The Story of Chaldea"—gives this lucid distinction between religion and mythology: "Religion is a thing of the feelings; mythology is a thing of the imagination. Religion comes from within—from that consciousness of limited power, that inborn need of superior help and guidance, forbearance and forgiveness; from that longing for absolute goodness and perfection, which make up the distinctively human attribute of 'religiosity,' that attribute which, together with the faculty of articulate speech, sets man apart and above all the rest of animated creation. Mythology, on the other hand, comes wholly from without. It embodies impressions received by the senses from the outer world, and transformed by the political faculty into images and stories."

Thirty-five out of thirty-eight States have passed laws prohibiting the advertisements of lotteries within their limits.—Exchange.

The refusal of thirty-five Legislatures to allow advertised in their midst what we, as a people, have legalized and complacently patronize is a rebuke which our people must surely feel, if not lost to shame. That a coterie of unprincipled speculators, in the greed of human nature, and a hundred or two politicians and office-holders should be permitted to fasten upon us such a cancerous institution as the Louisiana Lottery is explicable only on the theory of a drowsy or pusillanimous people. It is very certain a majority of our citizens are not dishonest; but there are grave doubts of our manliness, especially in view of the fact that we court and pet and seek to promote the lottery ring to our high places.

There has, recently, been a general assembly of all Protestant bodies in Mexico, to consult upon the best methods of propagating the gospel there. It resulted in an agreement: that in towns of 15,000, unoccupied by any Christian denomination, more than one denomination might enter; that in places of less population, where more than one denomination has gone, the place shall be ceded to the first occupant, save in cases of private agreement among parties interested. This is in the spirit that shall finally dominate all missionary enterprises. It may be the reaction from this will be a closer fraternity of home organizations. No protest to this has reached us except one from Dr. J. D. Easter, of the Protestant Episcopal Church, who calls it an "extravaganza of church union," and thinks it a conspiracy against the Church of Rome, whose advocate he indirectly appears. Nevertheless, towards this we are moving.

Rev. C. W. Carter, D. D., the editor of this paper, is improving steadily, and it is expected that in a few weeks he will be fully restored and at his desk.

The Passage of the Jordan.

Within a few weeks our church in this city has been called to part with some of its most prominent and active members: persons long identified with New Orleans Methodism, who gave to it both character and efficiency. Since the war we have suffered greatly by removal and death; in some of the charges the loss of every prominent official member. They went seemingly in companies together. It lessens the fear and anguish of departure to know that dear friends are just before us making for the celestial city. Those who have gone recently may enter the gates together! It is not certain that time is wholly excluded in this great passage of the soul from earth to heaven. To some of them the change was neither unexpected nor undesired. The added infirmities of life had made it a heavy burden, and rest was longed for. To others the loss of the dearest objects of the heart's affection had left a sorrow which could only be softened by the thought of soon seeing them again; while yet others sought, as for hidden treasure, the repose from anguish, physical and mental, which the via sacra of death offered to all who trust in him who once rested, as for a night, in the sepulchre. They all shared the deep experiences incident to human life. Its uncertainty was often before them, and, at times, there were moments they scarcely hoped to survive. These terrible trials may go with us to the margin, but no further. As a vessel just from a stormy sea, and while yet it is raging outside, glides into the harbor where all is quietness and safety. How deep must the first breath of victory be to those who have survived the conflict, where pain and temptation have contended for years and days against the patience of all spiritual grace!

These dear friends have enjoyed the unspeakable comfort of dying at home, surrounded by forms and faces scarcely less assuring than would be those of holy angels. O how precious is Christianity in the house; in the sunshine and the shadow; in the early and the latter hours; for the children and the old people; where, amid all changes and providences, the family is guided by the pillar of cloud in the day and a pillar of fire in the night; still making its way, through many a tortuous route, over life's wastes and terrors, yet daily drawing nearer to the promised rest.

The New Testament concentrates all its infinite helps and glories upon individuals. All that once nationally invested Israel, and much more, now surrounds the saint of God. The Savior attends himself in the high offices of a Mediator and, in the lower, of friend and a convoy. "Yet a little while and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me. I will not leave you comfortless, I will come to you. Because I live, ye shall live also. I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Such tender words and such a powerful Presence are the full assurance of the Christian's hope. His immortality lies hid with Christ in God—deeply in the life of his Lord. And he is never surer of this than in the moments of his final passage, when he commits, as the last great act of conscious mortality, his whole spirit into the hands of his Savior. Such hope we feel to be all that we could ask for ourselves and for our dear children. And we are fortified in that this is promised to both us and them.

Methodism has illustrated its power of life fully as much in the latest as in the earliest hours of Christian experience. A special vision hangs over the pillow, and the light of a far-off land illumines the features of our departing friends. "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Doubtless to them all his grace and all the graces of his person are then revealed.

"His voice, as the sound of the dulcimer sweet,
Is heard in the valley of death:
The cedars of Lebanon bow at his feet,
The air is perfumed with his breath."

While the tomb and stillness of death hold their secrets firmly, not so the blessed Spirit. He reveals the outburst of immortal beauty that is to wrap in its splendor all that die in the Lord. Their deformity shall be changed into glory; their spiritual bodies will tell the sublime story of their sufferings. The degree of brightness shall, without inquiry, indicate the pangs of a life which was once the mystery of Providence. O what vigor, what excellent favor of countenance, what harmony of movement, what soundness of limb, what color of life, shall then be characteristic of all who inherit the manhood of his glorified body! Even after we enter where Christ is, it will be difficult to realize that this life ran along so near the margin of that glorious one; that we could have lived well nigh in the twilight of heaven so long without knowing it. In a few years, it may be months, "there be some standing here" that shall know the invisible realm. Then we shall rejoin those who have just preceded, as well as many noble and dear spirits who have been gone a good while. O what a treasure-house of life must there be somewhere! What a glorious city of our God to hold such a company as we have known, of whose destination we could have no doubt. Let no pains of death, no joy of life hide from our thoughts that heavenly home. Let us wait for our Lord when he shall come clad in the ineffable rays of the Bridegroom, to be the joy and life of his people forever.

Thou shuddering stream of Death's dark ford,
Bring me the staff, that mighty Word,
Whose haughty waves and raging tide,
As twice before, it shall divide!

But see! What Light is that this side the shore?
It moves—now stands—amid the stream!
The flood is still! I hear no roar—
And I am safe! Is this a dream?

What light is here!—this world's on fire!
A glory leaps from every cloud!
'Tis thunder! No; an angel choir—
Could anthems ever be so loud?

The Marred Countenance.

The reader will recognize the above expression as one of Isaiah's descriptions of Christ—"His visage was so marred, more than any man." The sentence has its counterpart in meaning almost immediately after: "And when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him." The idea is not that the Savior was homely; the reference is to something deeper and more lasting than facial excellence and personal comeliness. The eye of the prophet was upon an inner life and experience—a history within and without—that had left its sure record and sorrowful impress upon the face. A marred countenance and a beautiful countenance are not contradictory terms. The face may have been fair and the disfigurement came in afterwards; or upon the physical ruin of loveliness there may arise a higher order of loveliness, namely: spiritual beauty. Christ, we doubt not, had, as child, youth and man, a face pleasant to look upon. We have never felt like contending for great personal beauty for him. There were other things in him and about him that made this a secondary and inferior thought. The spirit of holiness, strength of character, tranquillity of perfect moral adjustment, gentleness and tenderness of perfect love, with the ineffable sweetness of his heavenly nature—all met in his face and made a moral beauty before which physical loveliness would not only pale, but be forgotten. Children felt this and nestled up to him, women trusted him, and all felt the attractive power of his face. This face, as the years rolled on, became marred—not by sin, for he knew no sin; not by age, for he died at thirty-three. Although it is worthy of remark that when the Jews spoke of his age, they said: "Thou art not yet fifty years old." We judge from this that he looked older than thirty-three.

As he entered upon his work, the great burden of his mission pressed with an overwhelming force upon his spirit. The assaults of evil spirits, the hatred and resistance and dullness and sinfulness of men steadily told upon him. The constant demand upon his sympathies and time, the weariness of long journeys, the frequent hunger and thirst, the length of night vigils, the loneliness of his life—all gathered and beat upon him and left their sure impress. Lines of agony are very different from lines of joy. Suffering brings forth expressions upon the face very different from those born of pleasant days and restful nights. And so the change went on in Christ's face—a change of deepening lines and expressions. Toward the last it was manifest to the dullest observer. For while it was still the same calm, loving face, yet it was a sorrowful face that looked upon the disciples at the last supper; and one night under the shadow of the olive trees they saw it covered with sweat and blood and in an agony never to be forgotten. It was, as the world declares, a marred countenance. It was marred by experiences within; later on it was even more marred by occurrences without. Perhaps the prophet referred mainly to Gabbatha. The prophecy reads like history; and, certainly, the history of the Savior's treatment was the fulfillment of prophecy. He was buffetted and smitten many times in the face by the fists and palms of heavy-handed men, while the prickly crown, by as ruthless hands, was crushed into his temples. Cut and bruised and bleeding from sharpness of thorn and hardness of knuckle, we behold again the marred countenance.

Each generation starts out with the joyous, smiling face; but every individual, sooner or later, comes into the heritage of the marred countenance. Death mars it, of course—though we allude not to that; and sin mars it; but we are not thinking of that. There is something about life and in life that always steals away the first light that shone in the countenance. The loud laugh is laid aside. The smile which takes its place itself becomes rarer, sweeter, graver and more thoughtful as the years advance. The smile and expression of face bear hints of knowledge acquired through much pain. The look is of one who has gone through experiences that tried every grace and quality of the soul; it is suggestive of disappointment, disenchantment, and yet of knowledge and power. Deeper marks and shadows still come. We see things, hear things, undergo things that take away the old-time buoyancy and expectancy; there are experiences that bring the appearance of old age in a single night; and there are bereavements and heart-histories and life-trials that fix lines of soberness and brooding memory and suffering never to be effaced. Whatever goes on within will be written without. Conflict with sin, resistance of evil, endurance of wrong, submission to trial—all reach up and write unmistakably upon the face the fact of their existence and presence. Who wonders that after awhile we come to the marred countenance?

The marred countenance is very apt to be misunderstood by the world. Men may think the bearer of it is a sinner above his fellows, or that he is under the ban of heaven. Christ was misjudged at this point—the Scriptures voice the sentiment and opinion of men: "We esteemed him smitten, stricken of God and afflicted." The face of Joseph was covered with tears, the faces of his brethren were composed, while they ate bread near their captive brother whose death they had meditated. Judged by faces, they were right, and the hated boy was wrong. Let us be careful here. The countenance may be marred not by sin, but by a great inward sorrow that may not be spoken.

The marred countenance is not sought after by the world. In the filling of places of pleasure and fashionable resort it is not desired. Such a countenance would produce as much pain and agitation as did the shade of Banquo at the king's feast. The world takes to the ruddy, youthful countenance of David and the comely face of Rachel. The sensuous face is the world's face—the face of health and youth, and rippling smiles and exhaustless merriment. The face lined with thought, and seamed with grief, and solemnized by great bereavement is not at their gatherings for the double reason that such care not to go, nor are they invited. The marred countenance stands, as did the Savior, misunderstood and rejected; and yet to the thoughtful spiritual mind there is no more interesting face under the sun. Of course, there is a charm about the face of youth, but there is that in a countenance affected, altered, even marred in the line of faithful living, that holds us with a deeper interest. Such a face declares character, speaks of self-conquest, and impresses you all the time in an indescribable way that the highest of all education has been and is still going on. Students of and aspirants after character under the teaching of Jesus Christ, and led deep into the text-books of Sorrow and Temptation and Duty, by and by come into the possession of a depth of facial expression, a luminosity of countenance and an evident knowledge and power never beheld and never to be acquired by the purely intellectual training, no matter how severe and comprehensive that training, nor by whom, nor where it was conducted. Moreover, the marred countenance is full of beauty. It ought to be. It is the beauty of character and not of flesh. Spirit beauty ought to be and is far ahead of mere sensuous loveliness. The standard of beauty in heaven and earth is very different. No lover of physical comeliness will ever be impressed with St. John's description of the glorified Christ as seen in Patmos; and yet he is "altogether lovely." The standards are different, and spirit is nobler than flesh; and the light and beauty we have seen in the marred countenance is far superior to the bloom of youthful attraction. It means more, and is more. It is all the more remarkable when we remember that the soul is at a great disadvantage. It is holding up its beauty from the midst of physical ruin. What will its unclouded beauty be when the face is glorified with immortality! Wherever character appears, there beauty is seen, and felt as well.

I was once looking at a woman whose back was considerably bent. She told me that she became crooked in bending over many children. Under those words the crookedness of form disappeared, and to my touched heart all the lines were curves of beauty.

Bishop Marvin tells of a man whose hand was disfigured. He was setting at a table with a lady who proved to be his daughter. The Bishop noticed that the young woman touched the scarred hand frequently, but tenderly, and even reverently. By and by, thinking she was unobserved, she stooped hastily and kissed it. Later in the evening came the explanation: that the father had ruined his hand in saving his daughter from a burning building. It was not a disfigurement to her; there was no hand she loved so well. It became a beautiful hand to the Bishop, no doubt not, from that time.

On the same principle, the marred face may be beautiful; and I verily believe that in the sight of Heaven the countenance of the Savior was never more attractive than when it was upturned with all the traces that sorrow within and human wrong and indignity without could impress upon it. The marred countenance is not at a discount in heaven. In the book of Revelation we get a glimpse of a great multitude with swinging palm branch and golden harp. Happy now, yet they had all gone up to God with sorrow-stained faces; they had had great tribulation; they had come up with marred countenances, but God received them and welcomed them. Everything depends upon what mars the face. If sin, there is nothing more horrible to look upon. But if the marring comes through and by the life of suffering virtue, the doing and enduring the will of God, then it becomes a face full of heavenly sweetness and power. The difference between the two is one of the silent evidences of the truth of Christianity. In both cases the face is marred: but in one the life partakes of the ruin and is debased by the ruin: in the other the life is superior to the ruin, and shines forth in spite of the ruin. A marred countenance, as here taught, does not mean a marred life, but a made life.

As you look at your picture taken years ago in youth, and brood over the change: as you see reflected in the mirror to-day the man or woman bearing simply the burden of years, the burden of many sorrows; you see the lines of thought, furrows of tears, the unmistakable air of having lived and suffered, and struggled and conquered, do not be pained at the loss of the early freshness and facial attractiveness that had no history, no virtue, and was without character. Behold in the later peaceful light in your face a purer and eternal sunrise on the hills—a growing moonlight shining through the broken Colosseum of the past—a something blessed and prophetic. The body is dying, but the spirit is living. There is sunset and sunrise; there is death and life at the same moment in the countenance. It is the sunset of the physical, and the sunrise of the spiritual—the death of the flesh and the life of the spirit. In the marred countenance I read the notice that the body is getting ready for burial, while, at the same time, the soul is seen disengaging itself from the encumbrements and sepulchres of the dead, and, with the first blush of a coming immortality on the cheek, preparing to wing its flight to regions of eternal light and blessedness.

All hail to the marred countenance!—because of its teaching, its meaning, its power and beauty, and, above all, because Christ for awhile bore it on earth.

B. CARRADINE.

The editor of the Chicago Inter has discovered that the only way by which colored people can be brought into white churches, either North or South, is "to tie them with ropes and drag them in." Yet, many of our Northern brethren are distressing themselves greatly over this fact. What good do they hope to come of an association resisted alike by both white and colored races? How perfectly ridiculous these fanatics appear in their well-meant perplexity over a matter the Lord has settled in the natural and organic race antipathies. Try another problem, and you will sleep better, perhaps. When Mr. Cable's beard has a little longer growth his eyesight and choler will improve.

Bishop Hargrove has transferred less than nineteen preachers this year to the Pacific coast.

Personals.

The Missionary Board at Nashville, at a meeting held recently, accepted Bro. Newton and his wife as missionaries to Japan from the Baltimore Conference. Bro. Newton will take his place as professor in the Philander Smith Biblical Institute of Tokio.

Bishop Wilson is to be in Texas from May 17 to July 21, and will dedicate three churches, hold four District Conferences and preach commencement sermons at Southwestern University and Waco Female College.

It is said that in consequence of Mrs. McGavock's feeble health, and account inability to go to Little Rock, Ark., where the Woman's Board was appointed to meet, that the annual session will be held in Nashville, Tenn., some time in May.

Mr. Yamaguchi, a Japanese student, at Vanderbilt University, pursuing a course to fit himself for teaching in his native land, has been converted and takes part in college prayer meetings.

Rev. Dr. Noble, late pastor of the Union Street Methodist Church North, Little Rock, has severed his connection with that church and united with the Southern Methodists.

Bishop Galloway says that Rev. H. B. Withers, D. D., pastor of our church at Hot Springs, Ark., "more nearly succeeds in preaching to all the world than any minister in America."

Rev. D. L. Savage writes to correct the statistical secretary of North Mississippi Conference. Olive Branch circuit paid presiding elder $50 45, instead of $39 15, and paid the Conference claimants in full—$16, instead of $7.

Rev. W. C. Black writes to say that the caption of his paper, in the last Southern Methodist Review, should be "Thoughts on Teleology."

We are glad to see that the American Bible Society have begun the canvass of this city to supply the destitute families with the Bible. For the district west of Baronne and north of Canal street they have appointed Mr. W. F. Gallway, colporteur, and he is authorized to collect funds and to donate or sell the various editions of the Book, and in doing so will visit from house to house and from street to street.

Rev. C. G. Andrews, D. D., will preach the commencement sermon of Port Gibson Female College, June 10, 1888.

In Arcadia Sentinel, of twenty-fourth ultimo, was an admirable editorial on the Sunday Law, written in the vocabulary of Rev. S. S. Keener, if we mistake not. Why do not all of our preachers thus utilize their home papers in making a sentiment among people who do not wait upon their ministry?

Rev. J. W. Jones, D. D., will lecture in Collseum Place Baptist Church, of this city, on April 5. Subject, "Christ in the Camp; or, Religion in Lee's Army." Admission twenty-five cents.

A note from Rev. J. F. Wynn informs us that there were thirty-six children baptized on Montgomery circuit last year.

"The Problem of Methodism," by Rev. J. M. Boland, of Alabama Conference, is just out and on sale at Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1.

Through Col. W. R. Stuart, we hear of the fine condition of Methodism in Lake Charles, La., under Rev. J. T. Daves, its most efficient and popular pastor. The congregations are unable to get into the church and prayer meetings and class meetings are thriving. That prosperous city and its live pastor have well met.

Rev. C. Marcy Lyons, our young pastor at Parker's Chapel and Soraparu Churches, has just passed through a successful revival of three weeks, and has since Conference received between forty or fifty persons into the church. His battle-axe is sharp and strong.

Ministerial Educational Association of Mississippi Conference.

At the last annual meeting of the Ministerial Educational Association of the Mississippi Conference the president was ordered to appoint a committee of three members to revise the Constitution of the association. In accordance with that action, I have appointed on the committee Rev. J. M. Weems, Rev. W. B. Lewis and Maj. R. W. Millsaps.

The final report is to be made to the association at its next annual meeting in December; but I would suggest that the committee be prepared to make a preliminary report at the meeting of the Executive Committee, to be held, according to our Constitution, at some time between the first of June and the first of September.

A. F. WATKINS, Pres.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS., March 24, 1888.

Notice.

To the Preachers and Delegates of the Columbus District Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: As I left out of my first piece a very important item, I will write again. I have asked reduced rates on the Mobile and Ohio and Illinois Central railroads, which I think will be granted. Therefore, ask your ticket agent to give you a certificate to be presented to the agent at Ackerman, so you can get reduced rates on your return. Yours in love,

W. T. BARNETT.

CHESTER, MISS., March 9, 1888.

An Explanation.

In my article on "The Administration of the Lord's Supper," in the last issue of the ADVOCATE, I referred to pages 245 and 218 of our Discipline. At the time of writing I had in mind the Discipline of 1882; but in the Discipline of 1886 the pages are 224 and 251.

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

NEWTON, MISS., March 30, 1888.

Brandon District Conference.

The brethren who propose bringing their wives with them to the Brandon District Conference, which is to come off at this place soon, will please inform me at once at Newton, Miss. ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

Seashore Camp Ground.

The Board of Trustees of the Seashore Camp Ground will meet on the ground, Thursday, April 12, at 8:30 A. M.

Items of Interest.

The Methodist Book Concern in New York received on Monday before the last blizzard 2,257 letters and on the succeeding day only five.

Mr. Sylvester L. Malone, treasurer of the Anti-Poverty Society in New York City, was expelled from the Catholic Club for presiding at a meeting where Dr. McGlynn lectured on "The Pope in Politics." It is said that he will appeal to the courts, when we shall, doubtless, have some astounding revelations.

A canvass of the American Colleges for volunteers for foreign missionary work has resulted in the offer of 1,050 men and 550 women for that work.

Dr. Talmage's church has a membership of 4,184 persons.

The editor of the Texas Christian Advocate calls for 50,000 subscribers.

The Methodist Advance says that Mr. M. H. Tuttle, sheriff of Caldwell county, N. C., has resigned that office and gone to Randolph-Macon College and will enter the ministry.

Dr. J. J. Lafferty has been to the Florida Chatauqua, at DeFuniak Lake, and is a little sore from his lodgings at the hotel on the soft side of a plank, for which he paid two dollars a night, and a little depleted at the modest hotel rates of $15 a day. Who ever heard before of a poor Methodist preacher faring so high, and exchanging so much money for a little experience?

Our druggists keep for sale Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer, the best preparation ever made for restoring the vitality and color of the hair.

Temperance Notes.

BOSTON RUM AND AFRICA.—Last week we published an item concerning the shipment from Boston of a large cargo of rum to Africa, and were not then aware that some of our noblest and best citizens had been before the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations with an earnest protest against this accursed traffic; but such is the fact. They furnished that committee with valuable information, and amongst other items, the proof that this trade absolutely prevented legitimate and wholesome commerce. From an exchange we clip this bit of history:

When the Berlin Congress was in session in 1884-5, there were an earnest effort made to prohibit absolutely the introduction of all kinds of spirits into the Congo Free State. The representatives of the United States, England, Italy and Belgium warmly advocated the prohibition, but Germany and Holland objected; and the Congress was so constituted that one objection was sufficient to prevent a conclusion—it must be unanimous. And it is openly charged that behind the representatives of these two objecting nations there "stood in open conference the representatives of the wholesale liquor-exporting interests of Hamburg and Rotterdam." The result is that the liquor trade among the 50,000,000 of people in the Congo Free State is "absolutely" unrestricted.

The essentially malign and infernal character of the whisky trade is nowhere better illustrated than in the advantage thus taken of an ignorant people such as is found in Congo. Throughout all civilization the sale of liquor to minors or imbeciles is forbidden. But, just because Christian lands have not forbidden if, these monsters have had the audacity to steal or force their vile death-dealing mixtures on helpless savages in quantities that are absolutely appalling, and with effects such as make us shudder. We hope that every vessel that lands in Africa with such cargoes will be scuttled, and every captain of a vessel carrying it ought to be hanged to the first tree. The native king who put to death the man who imported rum into his tribe did right. It is worse than the slave trade—than Mormonism—and God will curse us, as a nation, if we fail to use all our influence for its suppression.

Dr. Lyman Abbott justifies high license by saying that "the saloon should be made to pay fully for the wrong it does," and this is part of the wrong which he says it does:

As a deceiver and a liar it swindles the poor and rich, it creates the base and horrible appetite on which it lives, it is a breeder of crime and poverty beyond anything else, it corrupts juries and courts of justice, it fills almshouses and idiot and insane asylums, it makes orphans of children and widows of wives, breaks up homes innumerable, robs men of their mental and spiritual worth; slavery never so robbed the workingman of his wages; Mormonism never so debauched the womanhood, and struck so fatal blows at the home; it is a corrupter of the nation at the very source of its power.

The New York Tribune shows political as well as moral sense in declaring that nothing but disaster can come to the Republican party from any farther attempt to conciliate the liquor interest.

Change of Schedule.

The fast train on the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad will leave New Orleans at 9 P. M., and arrive at 6:30 A. M. Change made from April 1.

Periodicals.

—Southern Methodist Review, Rev. W. P. Harrison, D. D., editor. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Six numbers annually, $2. The March number is before us with the usual tempting bill of fare. We notice these, of our contributors, occupying space: Thoughts on Theology, first paper, by W. C. Black, D. D.; Law of Limitation, by W. H. Anderson, D. D.; Ancient Judea and its Institution, by J. B. Walker, D. D. The editor has furnished us some sprightly discussions of live topics.

—The Homiletic Magazine, for February, published by E. B. Treat & Co., 771 Broadway, New York, was late in making its appearance; but is full of toothsome matter, which we hope to devour later. Price 30 cents.

—The Princeton Review, published six times a year for $3, by A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York. The March number of this portly and scholarly review is out. Among its articles are: Emerson—The Present Ethical Relations of Absolute Idealism and Naturalism; Christianity and the Secular Spirit; Law Logic and Government; Practical Politics; Foreign Jurisdiction in Japan; Hidalgo—the Washington of Mexico; Some Aspects of Modern Literature, etc.

—Words and Weapons, for March, edited by George F. Pentecost, D. D., is before us. It is a valuable aid to understanding of evangelistic work. Published at 251 Broadway, New York.

—Good Housekeeping, for March, fortnightly, $2 50 per annum. Clark W. Bryan & Co., publishers, 239 Broadway, New York.

—The American Magazine, an illustrated monthly, published by American Magazine Company at $3 00 a year, 749 Broadway, New York. Nothing more beautiful in conception, both as to its artistic and literary work, comes to this desk. Several days of chaste and delightful recreation are before its readers.

The Rev. Phillips Brooks says that when a mother brings him a baby to admire he takes the baby, turns it over, holds it up, and says: "Ah, ah; now that is a baby!" He thus avoids telling any white lies regarding the baby's merits, and the parent is charmed with his appreciation.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

"Did the wedding go off smoothly?" "About as smoothly as such affairs always go off. The only hitch that occurred was when the pair stood up to be united."

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

O. P. Fitzgerald, D. D., Editor.
Rev. W. A. Candler, Ass't Editor

Twenty pages every week. The largest circulation of any paper in the South. Sound, lively, progressive, PURE. No word which can not be read aloud in the family or in polite society admitted in any advertisement. A paper for the old, the young, everybody!

Subscription Rates: One year, $2; six months, $1; three months, 50c. To preachers, of all denominations, half price.

Our Agents: To agents acting for the Advocate we offer a premium of 25 per cent. on new subscribers, and 12½ per cent. on renewals, provided cash in all cases accompanies the order; otherwise we can allow only 10 per cent. commission. No discount is given on preachers' rates. All traveling preachers in good standing of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, are authorized to act as agents. Agents can deduct their commission and send us the NET AMOUNT of the subscription.

Southern Methodist Review,

—EDITED BY—

Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.,

is published Bi-monthly, or six times a year. Price, $2 per annum. This is cheaper than any similar publication issued in America or Europe. The erudition of the Editor is so well known that no commendation of his skill and ability is necessary. The mechanical execution is not excelled by any publication of its kind. It is specially designed to meet the wants of the THINKING CLASS, both of the clergy and laymen.

No preacher who desires to be progressive can afford to be without the REVIEW.

WE SOLICIT YOUR SUBSCRIPTION.

OUR S. S. PERIODICALS,

—EDITED BY—

Rev. W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM, D. D.

Our Sunday-school periodicals should be used in all our schools.

They are authorized by the General Conference, prepared by our Editor; published by our House for the especial use and benefit of our people.

They are adapted to our wants, and should not be substituted by any other.

Preachers, Sunday-school officers, and all others interested in the furtherance of Southern Methodism, SEE TO IT that no undenominational or impure literature is used in our schools!

In matter and style it is equal to the best, and is cheaper than any other of equal grade.

All the moral and religious reading that will fit for Methodist preachers, in Methodist pulpits, call for Methodist literature, in Methodist schools. Write for specimen copies.

The Sunday-School Magazine. A fifty-page monthly of acknowledged excellence, for the use of officers, teachers, and older scholars. With full expositions of the International Lesson Text; every number contains valuable hints as to the facts, principles, objects, methods and capabilities of Sunday-school work. No publication of equal merit is furnished at a less price. Think of it—600 pages yearly, postage paid, for the small sum of 50 cents.

The Senior Quarterly. A thirty-six page pamphlet devoted to lesson helps for scholars in advanced classes. Its value is enhanced by the introduction of appropriate forms for opening and closing exercises, hymns and tunes, maps, dictionary of proper names, etc.

Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum ..... 25c.
Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 15c.
Five or more, to one address, per quarter, each 4c.

The Intermediate Quarterly. Similar to the above, but with such necessary changes as adapt it to the wants of scholars in the main school. It is marvelously cheap.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 7½c.
Five or more, to one address, per quarter, each 2c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum ..... 15c.

The Illustrated Lesson Paper is a four-page weekly, designed for younger scholars who have outgrown the infant class, but who retain their fondness for pictures and simple stories. 208 pages a year.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 10c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper ..... 20c.

Our Little People is a beautiful lesson sheet, four pages handsomely illustrated and printed on tinted paper; for primary or infant scholars. Each number contains, besides the lesson, a page or more of "baby-land" talk.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 5c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper ..... 10c.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL VISITOR.

An excellent paper for the Sunday-school or the fireside, beautifully illustrated, published in three editions.

Weekly—Four papers each month.
Semi-monthly—Two papers each month.
Monthly—One paper each month.
Weekly—Ten or more, to one address, each 50c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum ..... 75c.

GRAND PALMS FROM SEED.

We are now able to offer for the first time, both seed and plants of that King of Ornamental plants, the new FIJI FEATHER PALM. Stately and beautiful beyond description, it is the finest addition that can be made to any collection of plants, and can be grown in any window garden as easily as a geranium. It is of a compact growth, with feathery leaves 3 to 4 feet long, from which hang long graceful fronds, giving the plant a most odd and picturesque appearance. In fact there is nothing like it in any living collection, regardless of enormous prices. Plants 6 to 9 inches high, from seed are large, germinate quickly and grow rapidly. Per packet 25 cts. 5 for $1.00. Nice cold plants 40 cts. each, 3 for $1.00, 7 for $2.00 by mail or express. Will also mail 3 Sturm King Cactus Plants, 50 cts., 12 Excelsior Pearl Tuberoses (flore pleno), 25 cts., 12 Choice Mixed Bulbous for 30 cts. Our Giant Excelsior Pansies, best in the world, 25 cts. per packet. New Primrose Verbena, yellow, a sterling novelty, 25 cts. per packet. True Pygmae Aster, 50 cts. per packet.

THE DARK.

Where do the chickens run
When they are afraid?
Out of the light, out of the sun,
Into the dark, into the shade,
Under their mother's downy wing,
No longer afraid of anything.

Dear little girl, dear little boy,
Afraid of the dark?
Oh! your good-bye to the daylight with joy,
Be glad of the night, for hark!
The darkness no danger at all can bring:
It is the shadow of God's wing.

Where do the little violets creep
In the time of snow?
Into the dark to rest and sleep
And to wait for the spring they go
Under the ground where no storm can reach,
And God takes tenderest care of each.

Are you afraid, little girl or boy,
Of the dark of death?
Jesus will carry you, full of joy,
To the world of light, he saith:
Under the ground where the violets sleep,
Your little body the Lord will keep.

—The Mother at Home.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years old, and as I have never written to your paper, I thought that I would try to write you a short letter. I and my little sister are going to school now. Our teacher's name is Mr. Elington, and I like him very much. Our pastor this year is Bro. J. B. Williams, and I like him very much. I love to read the Bible and all the precious promises. The one that I love best is: "The Savior hath said, I go to prepare a place for you, I will come again and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." I will close by asking the little cousins a question: Where in the Bible is found, "The seed of the righteous shall never beg bread"? Your little friend,

SELAH E. LINDSEY.

COUSHATTA, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never seen any letters from our little town, I thought that I would try and write one. I am a little girl ten years old. I have two brothers and one sister. My brothers' names are Willie and Jimmie. My sister's name is Velma. We have a nice Sunday-school here. Capt. Bell is our superintendent. We all like him very much. Our preacher this year is Bro. Norfsinger. Everyone is very much pleased with him. Well, I will close for fear of the much-dreaded waste-basket. With many good wishes from your little friend,

MARY A. HARRINGTON.

WEST POINT, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl eleven years old. My grandmother takes your good paper, and papa takes the Nashville Advocate. I am going to school now, and my studies are grammar, geography, history, arithmetic and spelling. Our teachers' names are Mr. R. B. Smith and Miss L. C. White. My father is a farmer, and I have to work in the field. Our pastor's name is Rev. W. C. Lester. I hope this letter will miss the waste-basket. I will close for fear my letter will be too long. Your friend,

R. A. DUKE.

ATLANTA, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl nine years old. I go to school. My teacher's name is Mr. Belford. I like him very much. Our preacher for this year is Rev. Mr. Kilgore. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. My Sunday-school teacher's name is Miss Georgia Gerren. I love her very much. I will answer Mary L. Gilliam's question: "Girl" is found in Joel iii, 3. I will close by asking the little folks a question: Where in the Bible is the word "apple-tree" found? I hope to see my letter in print. I am,

Your little friend,

PAGIE HESTER.

ACOLA, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a boy thirteen years of age. As I see so many letters, and none from Jackson, I thought I would write one. I go to school every day to Miss Helen Nanman. I like her very much. My studies are reading, spelling, grammar, geography, arithmetic, writing and drawing. Wishing much success to the dear old ADVOCATE, I remain,

Your little friend,

CLAUDE BEAMS.

JACKSON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Some weeks ago you asked the question, Where is the phrase, "hot springs," to be found in the Bible? As I have seen no answer, I send you the following: Some commentators claim that the phrase translated "mules," in Genesis xxxvi, 24, should be rendered "hot springs;" that the original means "hot springs."

Your little sister,

FANNIE RAYNER.

ENTERPRISE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy nearly twelve years old. I have never written to the ADVOCATE before, so I hope to see this in print. I will answer Olive Reiley's question: "Eternity" is found in Isaiah lvii, 15. The answer to Bettie Carruth's question: The most beautiful chapter is the twenty-third Psalm. I will answer Fannie Mason's question: There are sixty-six books in the Bible. The answer to Etta May's question: The middle verse is Psalms viii, 98. I will close by asking a question: Who was David's mother?

Your little friend,

WILLIE COCHELL.

IUKA, Mississippi.

Longfellow's First Poem.

When the great poet was nine years old his master wanted him to write a composition. Little Henry, like all children, shrank from the undertaking.

His master said: "You can write words, can you not?"

"Yes," was the reply.

"Then you can put words together?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then," said the master, "you can take your slate and go out behind the school-house, and there you can find something to write about, and then you can tell what it is, what it is for, and what is to be done with it, and that will be a composition."

Henry took his slate and went out. He went behind Mr. Finney's barn, which chanced to be near, and seeing a fine turnip growing up he thought he knew what it was, what it was for, and what would be done with it.

A half-hour had been allowed Henry for his first undertaking in writing composition. In a half-hour he carried in his work, all accomplished, and the master is said to have been affected almost to tears when he saw what little Henry had done in that short time;

Mr. Finney's Turnip.

Mr. Finney had a turnip,
And it grew, and it grew,
And it grew behind the barn,
And the turnip did no harm.

And it grew, and it grew,
Till it could grow no taller;
Then Mr. Finney took it up
And put it in the cellar.

There it lay, there it lay,
Till it began to rot;
When his daughter Susie washed it,
And she put it in the pot.

Then she boiled it and boiled it,
As long she was able;
Then his daughter Lizzie took it,
And she put it on the table.

Mr. Finney and his wife
Both sat down to sup;
And they ate, and they ate,
Until they ate the turnip up.

To Little Girls and Boys.

Shut every door after you, and without slamming it. Never shout, jump, or run in the house. Never call to persons upstairs or in the next room; if you wish to speak to them go quietly where they are.

Always speak kindly and politely to servants, if you would have them do the same to you.

When you are told to do or not to do a thing by either parent, never ask why you should not do it.

Tell of your own faults and misdoings, and not those of your brothers and sisters.

Carefully clean the mud, or snow off your boots before entering the house.

Be prompt at every meal hour.

Never sit down at the table or in the parlor with dirty hands or tumbled hair.

Never interrupt any conversation, but wait quietly and patiently your turn to speak.

Never reserve your good manners for company, but be equally polite at home and abroad.

Let your first and best friend be your mother.

These rubs will make you a desirable companion.—Christian Standard.

Household.

THE AVERAGE AGE OF ANIMALS.—The average age of cats is 15 years; of squirrels and hares 7 or 8 years; rabbits 7; a bear rarely exceeds 20 years; a hog lives 20 years; a wolf, 20; a fox, 14 to 16. Lions are long-lived, the one by the name of Pompey living to the age of 70. Elephants have been known to live to the age of 400 years. When Alexander the Great had conquered Porus, King of India, he took a great elephant, which had fought valiantly for the king, and dedicated him to the sun, and let him go with this inscription: "Alexander, the son of Jupiter, dedicated Ajax to the sun." The elephant was found with the inscription 350 years after. Pigs have been known to live to the age of 20, and the rhinoceros to 20. A horse has been known to live to the age of 62, but averages 25 or 30. Camels sometimes live to the age of 100; stags are very long-lived; sheep seldom exceed the age of ten; cows live about fifteen years. Cuvier considers it probable that whales sometimes live 1,000 years. The dolphin and porpoise attain the age of 30; an eagle died at Vienna at the age of 104; rayens have frequently reached the age of 100; swans have been known to live to the age of 300. Mr. Masterton has the skeleton of a swan that attained the age of 200. Pelicans are long-lived. A tortoise has been known to live to the age of 107 years.—Christian Index.

A GOOD EGG FOOD.—Ten lbs. of best ground beef scrap, 5 lbs. of fine ground bone, 2 lbs. of granulated charcoal or powdered charcoal, 1 lb. of sulphur, 2 oz. of cayenne pepper, 4 oz. of salt. One quart of this mixture each day to every 100 fowls, given in soft food, will produce most excellent results. This recipe has never before been published, and could not have been bought from the author. It is far superior to many of the manufactures of egg-foods on the market that sell for a high price. It is the recipe used by Mr. James Rankin, one of the most successful, if not the most successful, of poultry growers in the United States.—Farm and Home.

IVY POISONING.—The best of all remedies is hot water. All other remedies that I have tried (and I have tried many) only aggravate the poison, but hot water, as hot as can be borne, affords instant relief. It must be applied every hour or two, or as often as the itching returns. In a couple of days a cure is effected. Poison sumac yields to the same treatment. The inflammation, and with it the itching and burning, are allayed at once. I am poisoned dozens of times every year, but suffer no inconvenience except the trouble of applying the hot water.—Cor. Scientific American.

It is astonishing to observe how few people understand the common rules of measurement in purchasing wearing apparel. For instance, a man will buy a coat that is a "size" too small or too large. A "size" smaller or a "size" larger is what he probably needs, but he does not know what a "size" is. Well, a "size" in a coat is an inch; a size in underwear is two inches; a size in a sock is one inch; in a collar, a half-inch; in a shirt, a half-inch; in shoes, one-sixth of an inch; pants, one inch; gloves, a quarter of an inch; and in hats, one-eighth of an inch. Very few purchasers ever understand the schedule named.—Globe-Democrat.

A Capricious Appetite.

Irregular, unsteady, and hard to satisfy is not a blessing. Anybody who "knows how to keep a hotel" can tell by long experience that these are the hardest people to provide for. With digestive apparatus demoralized by dyspepsia, these people hardly know what they want, and they are not satisfactory nourished even with the daintiest dishes that can be set before them. A hearty and generous eater is easier to provide for, and what he eats tells on him, to his own advantage and for the credit of those who feed him.

Dyspepsia and indigestion are domestic horrors which all may rejoice to be rid of. It is a glorious thing to be so well as to get away with pretty fair quantities of good food. "I could not eat with any comfort," is the record of many a dyspeptic before taking Compound Oxygen. The corresponding record after a treatment by means of this great vitalizer is, "I have a hearty appetite, and now enjoy my food." Worth trying. Write to Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., for pamphlet about dyspepsia, also interesting treatise on Compound Oxygen. Sent free.

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known, as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and difficulty in breathing. I have tried great many remedies, but none does me well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which always gives prompt relief in return of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hopkins, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most severe affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children of a delicate constitution, or in adults."—M. E. G. Edgerly, Cowgill Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine, and a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs, and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a terrible cough, slight sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of the medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

HAVE YOU EXAMINED

ROYAL PRAISE

The New Sunday School Song Book by J. R. Murray? We claim it is the best book of the kind now before the public, and feel that an examination of its contents will substantiate this claim. Among the writers represented are Dr. Geo. F. Root, J. R. Sweney, W. F. Sherwin, "Winthrop," J. H. Tenney, James McGranahan, P. P. Bliss, Geo. H. Simmons, Rev. C. H. Oliphant, P. Campiglio, T. P. Westendorf, and many others. The book contains 192 pages of which 160 are devoted to the very best of genuine SUNDAY SCHOOL SONGS, many of them never having appeared before in any book; the remaining 32 pages contain a concise but very thorough course of instruction in the Elements of Music. Price, bound in boards, 30 cts.; if sent by mail add 5cts. for postage.

HOLLOWAY—DR. THOMAS HEATH HOLLOWAY, of Cross Roads, Jackson county, Miss., died of heart disease, on Sunday, February 26. He was born in Maury county, Tenn., December 30, 1826. He was educated at Mt. Pleasant, Tenn., graduated from Jefferson Medical College, of Philadelphia, Pa., in 1851. On October 26, 1851, he was married to Miss Elizabeth C. Kuntz, with whom he had been brought up and educated, her father being her guardian. His health having failed in 1874, he moved to Cross Roads and settled in the pine woods near enough to the gulf coast to get the sea breeze. He joined the Methodist Church in Alabama in 1850, and in 1883 he and all his family that were with him united with the Methodist Church at Cross Roads. He was among fifty who joined in the revival. It was during that meeting that the writer first met him—a handsome, cultured, gracebul. The picture of the man is still before my eyes and can never fade. He was a common man in that part of the country; nor would he have been in any other. Dr. Moody was a born gentleman, courteous, upright, moral. As husband, father, church member, physician, neighbor and citizen, he will be greatly missed. Mrs. Moody and four children (three having preceded him) are left with sad hearts, but not without hope. May God bless and keep them till they meet him with those who are "forever with the sons of light!"

B. S. RAYNER.

HOLLAND.—MRS. DRUSILLA HOLLAND was born in South Carolina, on October 8, 1802; professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in 1820, and lived a Christian life seventy-eight years; died in great peace and triumph, March 6, 1888. Her last days were spent at her son's, Rev. J. Holland, of Mississippi Conference, whose present home is Marion, Miss. Her maiden name was Dearmond. She emigrated, with her parents, from South Carolina to Tennessee; thence to Mississippi, where the most of her life was spent. She was married to Mr. Holland in 1818, and gave him seven children. Four of them are living. Sister Holland suffered much during her last sickness. She for five weeks confined to her room, but never complained, but endured affliction, which at times was very great, as a good soldier of the cross. She was patient and resigned, and was very happy. The night before she died, she requested her son, Rev. J. Holland, to sing and pray, and as they were singing she would clap her hands for joy, and say, Glory to God; I will soon be at home." A good woman has been called to rest. Her husband was a local preacher for many years before his death. He died fifteen years ago. Little more might be said of this true Christian woman; but this is sufficient.

H. P. LEWIS.

ABNEY.—The subject of this tribute, MISS KATE, eldest daughter of J. M. and Sarah Abney, was born in Jasper county, Miss., May 2, 1866, and died in Covington, La., March 16, 1888; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at the age of fourteen; professed a saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, July, 1887, from which time till the "silver chord" was loosed her Christian life was without reproach. Miss Kate was a girl of more than ordinary intellect and beauty. Her virtues shone with lustre in her every-day life. While engaged in domestic duties a sweet spirit of gentleness and Christian patience seemed to pervade her whole being. Her department at home or abroad was that which ever characterizes the true Christian. She had laid up her treasure in heaven and delighted in attending upon the courts of the Lord." Whenever there was a service in the church this precious daughter of God was there to listen with intense delight to his holy truths read or expounded, often attending, as this writer can testify, under circumstances in which many older and seemingly zealous Christians would fail to appear. Hence, it is not surprising that her end was peace. Several days previous to her demise, her father, while gazing upon the suffering form of his lovely daughter, commenced weeping. She said to him, "Don't weep for me, papa, I am going to my heavenly Father, and the only regret that I have is leaving you and the dear ones behind." Six or eight hours before the last struggle came she earnestly prayed to Jesus to save herself and every member of her grief-stricken family. A few hours later she looked me into the tearful eyes of a fond and faithful sister, whose loving hand had administered to this dying saint, and triumphantly exclaimed, "Happy, happy, happy!" after which she "leaned her head upon the bosom of Jesus and breathed her life out sweetly there." Farewell, loved sister, daughter, friend, your chair is vacant, your sweet voice is stilled, our hearts sink within us, we will never more on earth behold thy graceful form, never more gaze upon thy cheek of beauty; but, by the grace of God, we will meet you in that sweeter world, where there will be no parting. May God comfort the bereaved ones! is the prayer of their pastor. G. E. ELLIS.

ELLIS.—DR. JOSEPH WARREN ELLIS was born in West Point, Miss., April 21, 1850, and died, at his residence in Canton, Miss., after a brief illness, March 21, 1888, respected and loved by all classes of people.

Dr. Ellis graduated in medicine with the honors of his class at the age of twenty-one years from Jefferson College, Philadelphia. He was married to Miss Ida Lowry, in Brandon, Miss., on his birthday, April 21, 1875, who, with two little children, survives him. For several years he practiced his profession in the Yazoo Delta. He came to Canton in the spring of 1879 and remained here the balance of his earthly life. He had an extensive practice, and was regarded as one of the best physicians in our country.

Dr. Ellis was baptized and received into the Methodist Church in Canton, November 25, 1886—Thanksgiving Day. He had been a man of prayer for years before this. It was his habit when at home to pray in his family; and he has been known to kneel in prayer with his patients when they were in distress. He was noted for his benevolence, not only in the practice of his profession, but in responding cheerfully and liberally to the calls of charity. He was never known to say aught against anyone. There was nothing low, little or mean about him. He was a high-toned gentleman, and he loved his fellow-men. There is no one in our midst whose death would be more generally lamented than is that of Dr. Ellis. There is but one expression on the lips of those who knew him: "He was a good man." His funeral, at the Methodist Church, Sunday, March 25, was attended by a large congregation of sorrowing friends. After the religious exercises at the church, in which Rev. Mr. Alexander, of the Presbyterian Church, participated with the writer, the service was concluded at the grave by the Masonic fraternity, of which Dr. Ellis was a member.

Shall Women Be Allowed to Vote?

The question of female suffrage has agitated the tongues and pens of reformers for many years, and good arguments have been adduced for and against it. Many of the softer sex could vote intelligently, and many would vote as their husbands did, and give no thought to the merits of a political issue. They would all vote for Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, for they know it is a boon to their sex. It is unequaled for the cure of leucorrhea, abnormal discharges, morning sickness, and the countless ills to which women are subject. It is the only remedy for woman's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. See guarantee on wrapper around bottle.

The Quiver gives us a sketch of Mr. Chalmers' mission work in New Guinea. One little anecdote shows the spirit in which he worked. He and a native teacher were once in some danger from the natives. "They are disputing which shall have the honor of killing us," said the teacher. "Keep steadily on as far as we can," replied Chalmers, coolly. But at last the teacher said: "Tamate, let us sit down and pray," and let them kill us then." "No, no," said Mr. Chalmers, "let us walk and pray." And they escaped without injury.

Sick headache is the bane of many lives. This annoying complaint may be cured and prevented by the occasional use of Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Pillets. They are pleasant to take, no larger than a pin head, and are the ladies' favorite for biliousness, bad taste in the mouth, jaundice, for leucorrhea and painful menstruation.

Scientific.

What Is Graphite?

Graphite is not lead, as its names, plumbago and "black lead," would seem to indicate, nor is it a carburet of iron, as some works of scientific pretension still call it. Except that some impure specimens contain about as much iron as ordinary clay, it is the purest form of carbon, the diamond not excepted. Prof. W. Mattieu Williams believes that it is nothing else than extremely finely divided charcoal or soot: and reasons upon the subject as follows: The hand-rails on the staircases of the Metropolitan Railway stations, after some use, become coated with a delicate film of graphite or "black leaded." The same is seen, but more faintly, on suburban hand-rails, but not at all in rural stations. "Whence comes this graphite film? Why is it developed as we approach the center of London, reaching its maximum in the most densely populated and sootiest regions of the metropolis? My answer to these questions is, that it consists of a selection of the very finest particles of London soot. The hands of passengers in rubbing along these rails conduct a debtor and creditor transaction. There is soot-carbon on the hands and soot-carbon on the rails, as on everything, animate or inanimate, that is exposed to a London atmosphere. Some of the soot particles on the rails are brushed off by the hands, some rubbed down and smeared on the wood; some are abstracted by the hands, and some are contributed by the hands as additions to the smearing. It is obvious that in such proceedings the coarser particles are those that will be brushed off or carried away, while only the very finest, the impalpably minute particles, will adhere as a black, varnish-like, unctuous film to the hard wood." So, when the coarsest lamp-black or ordinary soot, the finest vegetable-black, and powdered plumbago, are rubbed upon paper, the appearance of the fine black will be found to be intermediate between that of the other two substances.—Popular Science.

Inducing Rainfalls.

It is stated that the introduction of railways into Mexico has been productive of meteorological changes: that severe rain storms follow the line of track, apparently attracted thereto by some electro-magnetic influence. This report lacks that quality and quantity of confirmation needed to give it scientific value, and is, in certain respects, only a new version of the statement made of the effect of railways in increasing the rainfall in the State of Kansas. We believe it is a fact that, with the progress of the railways westward, the volume of rainfall in Kansas has increased, and that copious showers now fall upon wide tracts of territory in the west of the State that were looked upon years ago as almost desert regions, in consequence of the continuous absence of rain. But this change would seem to be due not so much to the direct as the indirect influence of the railroad systems. The settlement of the prairie lands, the planting, not only of crops, but of groves of trees, have produced marked meteorological changes, in reverse of the way that the destruction of forests in other parts of the world has had the effect of reducing the amount of rainfall, and of rendering that which has fallen of less service. It is quite probable that similar results will attend the introduction of better means of transportation into Mexico. That is, it will induce settlement in now unsettled and barren regions, and it may be that in time agriculture, which will at firs. need to be carried on by irrigation obtained by pumping water from wells, will be easily sustained by regular and sufficient downfalls of rain.—Exchange.

Does the Earth Really Move?

Science says that it does, but we can not help wondering sometimes if there isn't some mistake about it, when we see how stubbornly certain old fogies cling to their musty and antiquated ideas. It was believed once that consumption was incurable, and although it has been clearly demonstrated that it is not, thousands of old-time physicians close their eyes and put their hands to their ears, and refuse to abandon the theory. But for all that the world moves on, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery continues to rescue sufferers from consumptives' graves. It is sure cure for this dreaded disease, if taken in time. All scrofulous diseases—and consumption is included in the list—yield to it.

A LITTLE THING MAY DECIDE.—A Cunarder put out from England for New York. It was well equipped, but in putting up a stove in the pilot box, a nail was driven too near the compass. You know how that nail would affect the compass. The ship's officers, deceived by that distracted compass, put the ship two hundred miles off her right course, and suddenly the man on the lookout cried, "Land ho!" and the ship was halted within a few yards of her demolition on Nantucket Shoals. A sixpenny nail came near wrecking a great Cunarder. Small hopes hold mighty destinies.

A minister, seated in Boston at his table, lacking a word, puts his hands behind his head, and tilts back his chair to think, and the ceiling falls and crushes the table and would have crushed him. A minister in Jamaica, at night, by the light of an insect called the candle fly, is kept from stepping over a precipice of an hundred feet. F. W. Robertson, the celebrated Englishman, said that he entered the ministry from a train of circumstances started by the barking of a dog. Had the wind blown one way on a certain day, the Spanish Inquisition would have been established in England; but it blew the other way, and that dropped the accursed institution, with seventy-five thousand tons of shipping, to the bottom of the sea, or flung the broken and splintered logs on the rocks.

How to Gain Flesh and Strength.
Use after each meal Scott's Emulsion with Hypophosphites. It is as palatable as milk, and easily digested. The rapidity with which delicate people improve with its use is wonderful. Use it and try your weight. As a remedy for Consumption, Throat affections and Bronchitis, it is unequaled. Please read: "I used Scott's Emulsion in a child eight months old with good results. He gained four pounds in a very short time."—THO. PRIM, M. D., Alabama.

ACCEPTABLE SERVICE.—The bird praises God by singing; the flower pays its tribute in fragrant incense as its censer swings in the breeze; the tree shakes down its fruit from its bending boughs; the stars pour out their silver beams to gladden the earth; the clouds give their blessing in gentle rain; yet all with equal faithfulness fulfill their mission. So, among Christ's redeemed servants, one serves by incessant toil in the house, caring for a large family; another by silent example as a sufferer, patient and uncomplaining; another with the pen, sending forth words that inspire, help, cheer and bless; another by the living voice, whose eloquence moves men, and starts impulses to better, grander living; another by the ministry of sweet song; another by sitting in quiet peace at Jesus' feet, drinking in his spirit, and then shining as a gentle and silent light, or pouring out the fragrance of love like a lowly and unconscious flower: yet each and all of these may be serving Christ acceptably, hearing at the close of each day, the whispered words, "Well done!"—Selected.

MAKE your family happy! Don't you see what a pale, haggard, dispirited woman your wife has become. Get her a bottle of Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier. If you would hear her ringing laugh, and see the bloom of health on her cheeks again.

MORAL EFFECTS OF CLEANLINESS.—We smile at the eccentricity of Hayden, the immortal composer, who would never sit down to compose except in full dress with a diamond ring upon his finger and using only the finest and costliest paper for his musical compositions. Yet was he not wise in using as aids in his great work all uplifting agencies? We are not composers of oratorios or anthems for coming ages, but in our own allotted places are bidden to see to it that there come neither false note nor discordant tone into the required harmonies of our self-made lives.—Mrs. Hill, in Central Christian Advocate.

DR. J. H. MCLEAN'S Liver and Kidney Pillets are a remedy and specific for chills and fever. Mild in their action, they are agreeable to take and a certain cure.

President Barry, of the Western New York Horticultural Society, significantly remarked in a recent address that the largely complained-of over-production of fruit came from the over-supply of poor fruit only, but there had been no over-production of fruit of high quality. The fruit-grower who is thorough in his cultivation, careful in his selection, and conscientious in his packing is not often found among the complainers. He has a ready market for his goods.

DIZZINESS, nausea, drowsiness and distress after eating can be cured and prevented by taking Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Pillets.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book, than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

Mansfield Female College.
1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. D. F. Huddle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 286 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

At Rich Hill, Mo., on March 29, there occurred a fearful explosion of gas in a mine, that entirely wrecked the mine and buried in the debris one hundred miners. More than half that number received fatal injuries.

The water in the rivers below St. Louis is rising at all points. On March 29 several cities in Alabama and Georgia were already invaded by the element, and a part of Columbus, Miss., was inundated. A terrific body of water is coming down the Mississippi.

The Senate passed, on March 28, the Blanchard Bill, making an appropriation of $11,000 to construct the road and approaches from Pineville, La., to the national cemetery near that town.

The Ship Island Quarantine Board has made a report to the Marine Hospital Bureau recommending the establishment of a quarantine station at North Chandeleur, near the northeast pass of the Mississippi.

Claus Spreckels, the sugar king, expresses himself as highly pleased with Baltimore and its advantages for the sugar refinery business. He says that if Baltimore will furnish one-half or two-thirds of the capital for a minor refinery and give him the control, one can be established.

There is said to be no doubt that the President will sign the River and Harbor Bill, provided the Senate does not unnecessarily increase the items as they now stand. The gross amount provided for in the bill is a trifle in excess of $19,000,000, and as this is about equal to the President's expectations, he is supposed to be entirely satisfied with the committee's work.

The Treasury and Law Departments will work together in getting at the bottom of the customhouse ring in San Francisco, which has been perpetrating such extensive frauds in smuggling opium and issuing permits to Chinese immigrants.

The strike on the Burlington road continues.

The prospect of an immediate tie-up of the Chicago Belt Line adds a graver aspect to the railroad situation than at any time since the Brotherhood of Engineers and Firemen quit the services of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy. Every railroad entering Chicago depends almost wholly upon the Belt Line as the means by which an interchange of freight is to be conducted with any other road.

Freight brakemen on the Kansas City, St. Joseph and Council Bluff roads have quit work.

Leavenworth, Kan., was a scene of a serious riot on April 1. A white man, being assaulted by three negroes, fired on them, killing two and wounding the other. A mob of colored miners attempted to lynch him, but were restrained by the police who, after wounding the murderer, took him in custody.

At Oskaloosa, Kan., a city ticket composed of women for the council and a woman for mayor has been elected by 66 majority.

The municipal election in Cincinnati, April 2, resulted in favor of the Republicans.

FOREIGN.

The Emperor Frederick will present to Dr. Mackenzie an autograph letter with the decoration which he proposes to bestow upon him.

Le Monde states that the Duke of Norfolk will carry to Queen Victoria, at Florence, an autograph letter from the Pope.

It is said that King John of Abyssinia has written a letter to King Humbert inviting the latter to meet him and discuss their differences personally and in a manner worthy of kings.

In most of the flooded districts of Germany the water continues to rise and the indications are that the lands now submerged will remain so for at least a month to come.

The Society of Porters, in Paris, March 29, organized a demonstration against employment agencies. They marched through the streets and violently tore down signs and notice boards, having several conflicts with the police.

The French Chamber of Deputies, March 30, by a vote of 268 to 237, despite the opposition of the government, voted for urgency for the extreme left bill providing for the revision of the constitution. The government thereupon resigned.

The barracks at Blarney, Ireland, were attacked by a mob, March 30. The police were compelled to fire in self-defense, but no one was injured. Many windows were smashed with stones.

The Queen has presented to Mr. Chamberlain her photograph, with her autograph, in recognition of his services in connection with the fisheries settlement.

The Emperor and Empress revisited Berlin, April 1, to attend the family gathering and dinner in honor of the Duke of Saxe-Meiningen.

April 1 was the seventy-third anniversary of Prince Bismarck's birth. By noon the chancellor had received fully 500 congratulatory telegrams, and notices of congratulations and gifts of flowers poured into the palace the whole day.

The International Sugar Conference will reassemble in London on April 5.

The Danish ministry has been overthrown on a financial bill.

The Parnellites have decided to hold six meetings, April 8, in proclaimed districts in order to test Mr. Balfour's assertion that in those districts the National League is a thing of the past.

It is reported that Count Von Moltke, Counts Dohan and Schafgotsch and Count Herbert Bismarck will receive the title of Prince.

M. Flouquet is at work forming a new Cabinet.

TEN PER CENT. A MONTH

MAY BE PAID BY THE

Carson River Dredging Co

This Company is to dredge the Carson River for the quicksilver and amalgam that has washed during the past 25 years from the Comstock Ledge. The value of these deposits is estimated by different experts to be from $50,000,000 to $150,000,000.

This Company expects to raise from 400 to 800 tons every 10 hours. The value of the material raised will be $2.50 to $7 and $8 per ton. The expense estimated for lifting and sluicing is only 50 cents per ton.

If the above estimates are anywhere near correct, then the Company will be enabled to pay

MORE THAN 10 PER CENT. A MONTH UPON THE PAR VALUE OF THE STOCK. Which is $5

INVESTMENTS WOULD THEN PAY AS FOLLOWS:

100 shares, costing $375.00, income $100 a month.					15 shares, costing $56.25, income $15 a month.
50	"	"	187.50,	" 50 "	10	"	" 10
25	"	"	93.75,	" 25 "	5	"	" 5

The large boat, which is to receive the dredging machinery, has been completed and launched and the machinery will soon be in place.

The Company own 17 claims on the river of 20 acres each; besides the mills of Dr. Rae's patent.

The success of Dr. Rae's system, as applied to the different mills, makes the success of the company almost certain. Only the treasury stock is being sold. All certificates are registered by the American Loan and Trust Company.

Orders may be sent until April 14, at rate of $3.75 per share, by N. Y. draft or P. O. order to

ONE LESS AT HOME.

One less at home!
A charmed circle broken—a dear face,
Fled day by day from its accustomed place.
Cleansed and saved and perfected by grace!
One more in heaven.

One less at home!
Order of welcome hushed, and evermore
Farewell word spoken on the shore
The parting comes not, one soul landed more—
One more in heaven!

One less at home!
Has the earth-born mist the thought would fling
Around our footsteps round, and dim our eyes,
While bright sunbeam darteth from the skies—
One more in heaven!

One more at home!
Is not home, where, cradled in earthly pain
Christ is dim—our love is cold,
Where, face to face, we shall behold,
Is home and heaven!

Does Mental Breadth Imply Spiritual Breadth?

BY REV. W. H. HUNTLEY.

Thoughtful attention is invited what follows. Go across the sert of preface which appears cessary, and find oases of quesons upon which to reflect, and hich are asked to obtain answer. As to preface. In mental culvation every advantage has en taken, and every energy rected toward improvement. glance over results from inllectual fields shows growth of any products, each succeeding e evidencing increased fertility soil. The wooden plow, primive, has given place to the pres- one of chilled steel, with its zen combinations and convences. The armor casing of flexle scales of tempered metal, cantified by graving and inlaying reads of silver and gold, a ide of bygone knighthood, has llen into rust before the power minie and grape. And these, ore lately, are giving place to ojectiles of greater perfection meet the improvement in proectives. Old-time passenger aches are almost as completely rgotten as are the echoes of eir horns, and steam power aws the traveler many times ore rapidly and comfortably. ourliers rest with occupation ne, and listen to their substite, the click of the telegraph. rom simple, man has become nplex, his complexities inreasing daily. His correspondces encircle the earth, and cablegram makes the circuit und it with thought-like speed. Theories carefully, laboriously nstructed, incontinently crumle under constantly improving ginery of science. The reding of devices to save labor d cheapen living is the daily ork of the patent office. Man called upon almost daily to adst himself to an altered, reed environment, produced by ental activity. Revolution is come a word of as common e as time or tide, and its restss spirit, like theirs, waits for ne. Theory, too, yet flies swift- not like rare or bulky birds, gly or by pairs, but in troops, like swallows, and upon as tireless wings. The world presents an ingenious, eager throng, with letters patent in one hand, and inventive tools in the other. Advance is one word, progress another, to express this search after the not yet attained. The unattainable seems no longer a will-o'-the-wisp, but rosy reality, smilingly inviting approach, and unwiting the clasp of arms rapidly lengthening.

Man is chiming bird wings now, and from several directions comes his claims of perfection for his ships that are to fly the air, and thus add to his complexities that of flight. You are not compelled to accept the suggestion conveyed to this writer's mind concerning this last item—that man is attempting to realize, physically, anticipation of a very comforting spiritual property in the life eternal. But you are ready to admit that man's ambition, in this direction, is a soaring thing! Remarking in his vision the giants prisoned to their waists in the ice of the Inferno, yet "full thirty ample palms" from girth to crown, Dante commends the deep wisdom of nature in discontinuing the mold in which were cast these huge "slaves of mad war," yet continuing the harmless ample mold of elephant and whale. Could this poet write again, he would add, perhaps, that man is striving with giant growth of mind to atone for shortened stature.

So much for preface. There has been no aim here merely to catalogue inventions. Following will appear the reason for this necessity, this need of opening to view a brief number of achievements with which so-called enlightenment is turreting the shores of so-called civilization. It is taken as granted, then, that mental motion is the habit of the world, and rest the accident under which we chafe. When the sea with us is not high and bounding, there is always a ground-swell running. We are never still.

It is noticed, doubtless, that the advance and progress mentioned has been with reference to the mind only. How has this restless spirit of advance affected religion? What increased excellencies have been evolved from busy souls advancing proportionately with busy brains? Has the spiritual advance been proportionate? The subject is before you. Progress along every intellectual path lies clear; its effect upon the spiritual should lie equally clear.

Bending round toward a circle the ends of the line of the past thousand years, man's intellectual evolution is seen to be as from sloth to Arabian courser. Has the spiritual pace kept up? Has proportionate spiritual advance been needed? Doctrines and scriptural interpretation—has the same labor-saving improvements in the physical world been found necessary in the spiritual? It seems hazardous to urge it, for the Truth that grew wings to a spirit centuries ago, and translated it, is the same now as then, no better. But—there certainly is a change. This is shown in multiplying theories as to the Almighty's purpose with man. Perhaps, one says, another probation follows this, of greater length, and furnishing surer salvation. The sulphur and brimstone theory (?), that made the hell of our grandfathers so real and fearful, seems dissolving and disappearing in an immaterial "hades," destitute of flame of the sort we comprehend as burning terribly. The "lake of fire" is sinking lower into excavations dug by implements of increasing culture; for fear (is it?) that the vulgar heat that used to cause a genuine shudder should warp the polished surface of the present veneering of the shadowy hades. It seems that increasing culture is creating a demand for a more aesthetic hell, and the ministry must interpret in accordance with the demand. We must modify. Undue emphasis is not evidence of refinement; fierce invective of Satan and sinner will not do. Colloquial style is proper now. "Amen corners" are memories almost, as also the happy shout and stream of tears that used ever to mark the soul, enfranchised and whitened, at the cleansing fountain.

What spiritual effect is the continued advance in mental development to have upon the generation? And when is the halt to be called in the matter of interpretation? Shall eminence be warrant for a changed translation and an instant following? Is intellectual expansion the cause of present floating, perilous theories concerning the soul?

Finally, the subject is with you, awaiting answer. Is the present mental growth producing proportionate growth spiritually? I am disposed, in my heart, to negative the proposition. Are we bound to show that the most extended and complete intellectual excellence has the effect to brighten the blessed old doctrines, and more widely to open the doors of heaven?

"The Agony in the Garden."

BY "GILDEROY."

Bro. Cameron says: "It was the realization that the salvation of all souls depended upon his death that caused the Savior's agony." The connection in which this statement stands shows plainly that Bros. Cameron and Newsom regard the number of souls to be saved a material factor in the agony in the garden and the suffering on the cross. This is only another form of the old Calvinistic, commercial view of the atonement—"Just so much suffering and so many drops of blood for the salvation of so many souls." Both these brethren believe and teach that Christ tasted death for every man: hence they make Christ suffer more than if he tasted death for an elect number. This is the only point wherein they differ from the commercial theory, so strongly opposed by our Arminian writers. Now, I insist that the number of sinners and number of sins had nothing in the world to do with intensifying the agony of our Lord, either in the garden or on the cross. If there had been but one sinner and one sin, it would have required the same God-man, the same agony, and the same suffering on the cross, or anywhere else our Lord should have chosen to die for the "sin of the world." This is the uniform and unvarying testimony and reasoning of our Wesleyan Arminian writers from Wesley down to Dr. Thomas O. Summers. I am not willing that men of the standing and character of Bros. Newsom and Cameron should, even by implication, depart from the form of sound words so long in use among us. It cost the Son of God no more sacrifice or suffering to redeem a world than to redeem one soul. If it were necessary, I could back up this statement by copious extracts from all the books. I merely call attention to the subject that our young men may be led to investigate these great questions for themselves. I am going over the old books again, as I have often done before; but with a degree of interest and profit entirely new to me. I would note just here that the manner of Christ's death was not of the nature of the atonement. Having consented to die, the manner of death was within his choice. So teach all our books.

Again, Bro. Cameron says: "This realization came through the revelation of the divine to the human nature"—of Christ. Now, I would like to ask, by way of suggestion rather than argument, If Christ, as a person, had any human nature apart from the divine, or divine nature apart from the human? I hope this question will not appear curious or "horrible" to anyone. It is worthy of consideration. It has occupied the time and attention of the best and wisest men who have written on theology. The time was when Christ, not as Christ, however, was a divine person; now he is a God-man. Christ is not two. He is one person. Two whole and distinct natures are so united as to make one person. This is a great mystery—"God manifest in the flesh."

It was this one person, this divine man, who agonized in the garden and died on the cross. I can't, for the life of me, make two out of Christ, and say the divine did this and the human did that, in the work of redemption. Just how to separate the divinity from the humanity of Christ, when he comes to suffer, is beyond my ken. I do not believe it can be done in thought without depreciating the atoning merit of the God-man. How Christ, one person, can suffer in his humanity, and his divinity be exempt from suffering, is too fine a hair-splitting for my brain. Indeed, I had thought the Son of God assumed a human form that he might accept human suffering. I am sure that "the Captain of our salvation," whoever he be, "was made perfect through suffering." I firmly believe that one person—the God-man—agonized in the garden, died on the cross, and was raised again the third day; or, as elsewhere expressed, this person was conceived by the Holy Ghost, born of the Virgin Mary, suffered under Pontius Pilate, was crucified, dead, and buried, and was raised again the third day. I do not want the divinity of my Lord taken out of, or separated from, his passion and sacrificial death. If this thought involved the suffering of divinity, as my Lord was a divine man, I accept it, however grating it may be to my brother's feelings.

Character of Sunday-School Teachers.

BY "DESLEP."

We recognize some difficulty in securing teachers with requisite character for the important work of Sunday-school teaching, because of a too low moral sentiment in certain schools and communities; in others there is a want of proper estimate being placed upon the character of the work of the institution, and in still others because mental qualification is looked upon as the all-important requisite.

The character of the Sunday-school teacher is a matter of weighty consideration if we give to the word latitude and define it as including mental qualification, natural endowments and characteristics.

First of all, the Sunday-school teacher should be a Christian, and fully consecrated to God and his work. The character of the institution, the character of the instructions, the delicate responsibility of the life for which the children are being prepared, and the worth of the souls which hang upon the lips of the teacher; the origin, object and aim of the institution—all call for the whole faculty, superintendent and all, to possess a character corresponding to all these.

The Sabbath-school is a church or divine institution, and, as the whole economy of God calls for religious persons to carry it on, so religious persons are needed in this arm of the church.

The command to the ancient Israelites to "gather the people together, men, women, and children, and thy stranger that is within thy gates, that they may hear, and that they may learn," etc., has considerably the ring of the Sabbath-school. The institution is, therefore, holy in its origin and work, heavenly in its design, heavenly in its subject, heavenly in its substance, heavenly in its object and end. The book used is a transcript of the divine mind, the centralization of all truth, power, light, life and love, and is spiritual in its nature, and requires wisdom in spiritual experience as necessary character to give instruction therein.

A good moral character is absolutely necessary, and none are prepared for this important work who have not been genuinely converted to God; and I am not so sure but that persons should feel divinely called or moved to take part in the work of teaching divine things. A good moral character is not the only requisite, but there must be peculiar qualifications and good natural endowments. A man fully consecrated, with good moral character, presents himself to the Quarterly or Annual Conference for admission into the ministry, and, after examination, may be rejected for want of qualification or because he is out of harmony with the creed of his church. The work of Sunday-school teaching is so closely allied to that of the ministry that some such requirement should be made of the Sunday-school teacher. Indeed, the work of Sunday-school teaching is identical with the work of the ministry so far. The same word used in the original, with reference to the mission of Christ and the ministry, and translated "teach," is used with reference to the more private teacher of the Word. "It is as much the teacher's duty to teach Christ as it is the minister's to preach him." And, in order to be a successful teacher of the Word, in the pulpit or in the Sunday-school, the teacher must be a person of fervent and persevering prayer, of earnestness and zeal, of firmness and great prudence, a lover of the Word, the children, and of the work, and should possess peculiar natural endowments and proper mental cultivation.

"The biographical, doctrinal and practical of the lesson must be considered, explained, illustrated and enforced in an intelligent and earnest manner:" and who can do this except those peculiarly qualified?

A Combination Paper.

BY D. W. FOSTER.

Mr. Goodale, of Baton Rouge, chairman of the State Prohibition Executive Committee, is calling for stockholders of a company to inaugurate a prohibition paper, strictly non-partisan and non-sectarian. Such a paper ought to accomplish much good by calling attention of everybody to the ruinous evils resulting from the useless, wasteful and demoralizing habit of drinking intoxicating liquors, and persuading them to desist therefrom. But, as laudable as the enterprise might be, the prospects for such a paper does not appear very promising just now.

But there is something else also urgently needed at this time which may be effected to meet, in a large measure, the great wants of society, and that is, a newspaper, with high moral tone as well as strong editorial ability—one that absolutely will not cater to vitiated tastes, that have already been pandered to until good morals and healthy public sentiment are in great danger of being engulfed in the dreadful maelstrom of general demoralization and public corruption. Now, can not sufficient capital be raised, suitable talents be combined to inaugurate and conduct successfully a grand combination paper in New Orleans, with the requisite amount of space for three important departments—one for such general home and foreign news as may be proper for pure women and innocent youths, as well as men, to read; one for the able advocacy of prohibition, and one for the inculcation of good sound morals and public conduct, such as "exalteth a nation?" Undoubtedly there are many people who would gladly hail and patronize such a combination paper, who now read only one devoted mainly to only one of these departments, and that generally not pure enough to enter a decent family. Such a paper could be so arranged and conducted that all Christians of all denominations could cordially unite in and patronize it, by keeping it non-partisan and non-sectarian; for all Christian people ought to agree in the general principles of morality and good conduct, at least.

Let the paper be named, "The Combination Independent." Of course, each denomination of Christians can still have, in addition, such a denominational paper as it may deem best suited for the formation of the religion of the Bible and its own peculiar tenets. But let us have this one colossal combination paper, to which all good people may rally, as the common palladium of our public morals and civil liberties.

Let there be one hundred "tried and true men," picked from each of the leading denominations—Methodist, Presbyterian, Baptist, and Episcopalian, for instance, to form a joint stock company, of which each member is to contribute not less than one hundred dollars, nor more than five hundred, for the establishment of such a paper, to be conducted according to rules and regulations to be agreed upon by a Board of Managers to be elected annually by the stockholders, each casting one vote up to two hundred and fifty dollars, and two votes over that sum. Let this be a gigantic enterprise of Christian people for the good of everybody, while it will remunerate the company for the laudable investment of their money and talents, time and labor. Four hundred good, intelligent men distributed throughout the length and breadth of the country, and all united in pushing such a noble enterprise, would speedily insure magnificent success. Having between forty and a hundred thousand dollars to start that paper with, and the price of subscription at $1 50, the list of subscribers would probably reach between fifty and a hundred thousand in twelve months, and soon have the largest circulation of any paper in the South, and become one of the greatest promoters of good in the land.

If the right men will take hold of the grand enterprise in earnest, eternity alone can tell "what the harvest will be."

Overcoming Sin.

Communion with the sinless One is the only sure method of excommunicating sin. Gazing into the face of Christ, and beholding the light of the knowledge of the glory of God which shines there, will surely disenchant our hearts from worldly objects. "Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? I have heard him and observed him." Dannecker, the German sculptor, spent eight years in producing a face of Christ; and at last wrought out one in which the emotions of love and sorrow were so perfectly blended that beholders wept as they looked upon it. Subsequently being solicited to employ his great talent on a statue of Venus, he replied: "After gazing so long into the face of Christ, think you that I can now turn my attention to a heathen goddess?" Here is the true secret of weanedness from worldly idols, "the expulsive power of a new affection."

"I have heard the voice of Jesus,
Tell me not of aught beside;
I have seen the face of Jesus,
All my soul is satisfied."

—A. J. Gordon.

When Peter of Cortona was engaged on a picture for the royal palace of Petti, Ferdinand II. particularly admired the representation of the weeping child. "Had your majesty," said the painter, "a mind to see how easy it is to make this very child laugh?" The artist merely depressed the corners of the eyebrows, when the little urchin seemed in danger of bursting his sides with laughter, who a moment before seemed breaking his heart with weeping. Lives worth living belong to the soul artists whose untiring consecrated hands are always wielding their brushes in changing tears into smiles, and sorrow into joy, brightening dark pictures, and retouching dim and faded ones—in his name.

EASTER.

BY MRS. LILLIAN KIMBALL.

Merry bells are ringing, ringing
For the blessed "Easter feast;"
Little birds are singing, singing
Of the story in the "East"—
"Christ is risen! Christ is risen!"
Sin and death shall nevermore
Chain us in the dim, dark prison!—
Tell the story o'er and o'er.

Bowed with grief and sorrow, weeping,
Holy women went at dawn;
Sought him where they laid him, sleeping,
With their hearts faint and forlorn.
Ah! what changes things that meeting—
Joy and hope for grief and fear,
As they list, the angels' greeting:
"He is risen. He is not here."

Haste they off to tell the story
Of his triumph o'er the grave;
Of his wond'rous power and glory—
Haste they from the silent cave.
Deep in Council and meditation,
Let with Christ they gladly meet,
And in silent adoration
Fall and worship at his feet.

"Mourner, why this bitter weeping?
Why such bitter grief and fear
Jesus Christ, whom thou art seeking,
Stands with [illegible] to cheer.
Go ye to the [illegible] grieving.
Wrapped in [illegible] fashion;
Yet their Lord and Master leaving?—
Tell them of the empty tomb!

Tell them of the grave-clothes lying
Where, in grief, Christ had been laid.
Through his agony and dying
Peace in heaven for us was made.
Ye who sorrow, ye who languish
In this world of toil and strife!
Death the portal to [illegible]
You to give eternal life.

"Christ is risen! Christ is risen!"
Bids us, hasten from the tomb,
Quit sin's dark and doleful prison,
Drive away the dark'ning gloom.
Follow closely in his pathway,
Turn not to the left or right
Till we reach heaven's blessed gloom-day
And are crowned with heaven's light.

"Go ye, therefore, teach all nations,"
Baptize in the Holy Name,
O Tell them of Christ's sweet relations
To this world of sin and shame.
"Fear not, children, I am with you,"
Comfort, Guide, your Friend and Stay;
"I will ever guard and lead you
In the time, the perfect way."

THE TEN VIRGINS.

Matthew xxv. 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And they that were ready went in with him to the marriage: and the door was shut.—Matt. xxv. 10.

TIME.—A. D. 30, April 4, Tuesday afternoon.
PLACE.—The Mount of Olives.

INTRODUCTION.

The last of the parables is one of the most beautiful and touching. The weird pathos of the story is unspeakable. The occasion is so happy, the agents so interesting, the issue so tragic. It is a wedding that is on hand; the characters brought on the stage are virgins, young, bright and fair; the fate of some of them is so hard—exclusion from the marriage festivities at which they so longed to be present, and for so slight a cause—a little too late. One's heart is sore for those five witless, luckless girls. . . No parable has been so completely taken possession of by allegorizing theology. The natural story has been buried beneath a heap of spiritual meanings which have been accumulating from the patristic period till now. To every word—virgin, bridegroom, lamp, oil—has been assigned its emblematic significance. A comparatively sober Catholic commentator counts fifteen parts which have their spiritual equivalents.

1. Then—In the last day—the time just spoken of. Millenarian interpreters refer the "then," and the whole section from chapter 24 to 25, 30, to Christ's coming before the millennium or the judgment which precedes his personal reign on earth, as distinct from his final coming. Kingdom of heaven be likened unto ten virgins—Ten was termed by the rabbins "the all-comprehending number." This number is equal to "practical completeness, as seven is equal to ideal perfection." No special significance attaches to the number. It was a usual number in a marriage procession. Nor any to the fact that virgins are mentioned. In all ages of the world virgins have been chosen as bridesmaids. The whole group represent that portion of any community who hear the gospel, accept its terms, and profess to be the disciples of Christ. The sincerity and depth of their profession will be tested afterward; but, in the meantime, both in their own opinion and that of their neighbors, they are all alike Christians. Which took their lamps—Either like the familiar Roman lamps carried in the hand or attached to staves, or else torches which were sometimes fed with oil. The lamps—not torches—which the ten virgins carried were of well-known construction. They consisted of a round receptacle for pitch or oil, for the wick. This was placed in a hollow cup or deep saucer which was fastened by a pointed end into a long wooden pole, on which it was borne aloft. According to Jewish authorities, it was the custom in the East to carry in a bridal procession about ten such lamps. Went . . . to meet the bridegroom—According to Eastern custom (among the Jews and Greeks), the bridegroom, accompanied by his friends, went first to the house of the bride's father, and then led the bride to his own home, where the marriage feast was celebrated. On the way he was met by a procession of virgins, the attendants and friends of the bride, who waited (probably in the bride's house) for the signal of his coming, and then went out to meet him at nightfall, provided with lamps or torches. Hence the frequent allusion of classical writers to nuptial torches. Some commentators (Meyer and Keil) assume here a departure from the usual custom, namely, that the marriage is supposed to take place in the house of the bride (as in Judges xiv. 10), since Christ at his parousia comes down from heaven to establish his kingdom on earth. Others (Trench and Mansel) assume that the virgins are to join the bridal procession on its way back from the house of the bride to the house of the bridegroom and are waiting at some intermediate place.

2. Five . . . wise . . . five . . . foolish—The numbers make nothing to the case—only the division in essential. I stand in awe of this dividing word. All seem equal in zeal and love. No line visible to human eye divides into two parts the goodly company; yet the goodly company is divided into two parts. The Lord reads our character, and marks our place. Observe that in the Scripture godliness is always represented as wisdom, and ungodliness as folly. (Psalms xiv. 1; Proverbs viii. 35, 36; Ephesians v. 15.)

3. Foolish took their lamps . . . no oil with them—The lamps refer to the outward Christian appearance, the oil to inward spiritual life, the grace of God in the heart. This we prefer. The oil in the lamp, and the flame which it sustained, indicate a seemly Christian profession; this the virgins all possessed, and all alike. The quality that tested and divided them lay not in the burning lamps, but in the supply vessels. The oil, whether employed to anoint a person or to feed a flame, represents, in Old Testament typology, the Holy Spirit. In the parable the ground of exclusion is not want of oil, but lateness. They that were ready went in with the bridegroom to the marriage feast. They were ready by being present, while the others were away in quest of oil. It is a rebuke to shallow religion that dies away when the excitement passes.

4. Wise took oil in their vessels with . . . lamps—The wise ones gave all diligence to make their calling and election sure (II Peter i. 10, and 5–8), making their bodies, souls, and spirits their vessels, II Cor. iv. 7) a means of supplying spiritual food for the light within, by seeking, in the appointed means of grace, more and more of God's Holy Spirit.

5. While the bridegroom tarried—In this there is a hint that the Lord would not come immediately, nor so soon as his church expected him. It was always open to every age by faith and prayer to bring about, or at least to hasten, that coming, so that the apostle speaks of the faithful not merely looking for, but also hasting, the coming of the day of God. All slumbered and slept—Literally, nodded and fell asleep. Perhaps by this slumbering and sleeping more may not be meant than that all, having taken such measures as they counted needful to enable them to meet the bridegroom as they would wish, calmly and securely awaited his approach. In a certain sense, sleep of the mind in reference to eternity is as necessary as physical sleep is to the body. Constant thought about the great realities of the future would only result in weakness, distraction, and madness, or in disorder, idleness, and restlessness. Observe the implication: if the Christian has grace in his heart, he is always ready, though asleep; if not, he is unready, though he were wakeful and seemingly watchful.

6. At midnight . . . There was a cry made—Parallel to this cry is the "great shout" and "the voice of the archangel," which shall accompany the descent of the Lord. (I Thess. iv. 16.) Behold, the bridegroom cometh—For the individual, that cry may come at any time.

7. All those virgins arose . . . trimmed . . . lamps—The trimming itself implied two things—an infusion of fresh oil, and removal of whatever had gathered round, and was clogging the wick. When life is closing behind, and eternity opening before us, we are all aroused. Everyone who has a lamp hastens then to examine its condition and stimulate its flame: all who have borne Christ's name search themselves to see whether they are ready for his presence.

8. Foolish said . . . Give us of your oil—A piteous appeal to believing neighbors for help. How true to nature is this picture! He who draws it knows "what is in man." How fondly the empty, in such a crisis, lean on the full! Our lamps are gone out (Rev. Ver., are going out)—Even the foolish virgins had not been quite unwatchful; they were nearly ready for the Lord's appearing. The foolishness of the five virgins consisted, not (as is commonly supposed) in their want of perseverance—as if the oil had been consumed before the Bridegroom came, and they had only not provided themselves with a sufficient extra supply—but in the entire absence of personal preparation, having brought no oil of their own in their lamps.

9. Not so; lest there be not enough (Rev. Ver., Peradventure there will not be enough for us and you)—In this answer they show their wisdom. No one can supply grace for another's need. Incidentally, there is here a witness against the Roman Catholic doctrine of works of supererogation—that is, that the saints accumulate a store of good works from which the church may draw for those who have no merit of their own. Go . . . to them that sell, and buy—This probably refers to the means of grace, the Scriptures, prayer, the ministry. Turn to the dispensers of heavenly grace, to them whom God has appointed in the church as channels of his gifts, or, as some would explain it, to the prophets and apostles, and learn from their words and teaching how to revive the work of God in your souls, if yet there be time. The five wise virgins having gone by daylight to the stores with their vessels had experienced no difficulty in obtaining a supply. This feature of the parable intimates that those who are found destitute at the coming of the Lord enjoyed their day and their opportunity, but neglected them.

10. While they . . . went . . . bridegroom came—They kept up their endeavor to the very last (see ver. 11), but probably did not get a supply of oil at that late hour. They . . . ready went in . . . to the marriage (Rev. Ver., marriage feast)—The five wise virgins were asleep when the approach of the bridegroom was announced, and yet they were ready to meet him. Their safety resulted not from their flattering activity at that moment in the trimming of the lamps, but from their wise foresight on the preceding day. The salvation of a soul depends not on frightened earnestness in the moment of departure, but on faith's calm closing with Christ, before the moment of departure comes. The door was shut—Shut as much for the security and joy without interruption of those within, as for the lasting exclusion of those without. How graphic and appalling this picture of one almost saved—but lost! Christ is the door (John x. 7, 9), and now stands open to all who will come unto the Father by him (Acts ii, 39), the door which admitted Aaron after his idolatry, David after his adultery, Peter after his denial, Saul of Tarsus after his persecution of the church. But this door does not stand open forever.

11. Afterward came . . . other virgins—They came looking for mercy when now it was time for judgment. Lord, Lord, open to us—Ah! now at length their eyes are wide open, and they realize all the consequences of their past folly. It is not to be supposed that there is to be any literal application by the lost at the door of heaven for admission. But the Savior here puts in dialogue form the utter hopelessness that would attend such an application, as conceived in thought. It is then too late for prayer.

12. I know you not—It is not that he disclaims an outward knowledge, but he does not know them in that sense in which the Lord says, "I know my sheep, and am known of mine." "The Lord knoweth them that are his" (II Tim. ii. 19). The refusal is definite and apparently final, and is the basis for the exhortation which follows.

13. Watch therefore—Our Lord's explanation of the parable, showing the true purport of it. A few country girls arriving too late for a marriage, and being, therefore, excluded from the festival, is not in itself a great event; but I know not any words in human language that teach a more piercing lesson than the conclusion of this similitude. Know neither the day nor the hour—And this being so, the only certain way to be ready upon that day is that you be ready upon every day.

PRACTICAL LESSONS.

It is impossible to determine the precise meaning of the several parts of this wonderful parable, but the following lessons appear to be taught by it:

1. That Jesus will surely come in the future—a Bridegroom to receive his waiting own, a Judge to exclude those who are not truly his.

2. That the time of his coming is uncertain.

3. That an adequate preparation to meet the Lord at his coming, no matter when that shall be, is possible, and is expected of all.

4. That the "wise" and the "foolish" are indistinguishable until the crisis comes.

5. That the certainty of Christ's coming will lose its sharp edge as time goes on. The church will become slumberously indifferent to it.

6. "Character is not transferable." The day of grace ends when the day of judgment begins.

7. That just as surely as the ready will enter into the fellowship and joys of the marriage supper of the Lamb, just so surely, despite all pleadings, the unready will be rigidly and forever excluded.

North Mississippi Conference Notice.

The Columbus District Conference will meet at Ackerman, on the Aberdeen branch of the Illinois Central road, and begin its session at ten o'clock, Thursday morning, May 10 next, and close with the service Sunday night, the thirteenth. Brethren, come promptly to the hour; let us meet and work in the spirit of the Master, that we may have his blessing.

Let the preachers in charge be careful to bring or send written reports of their works. This will greatly help the secretary, and facilitate the business of the Conference. Let each division of the report be made on separate paper, so that, as a subject is called for, the report on that can be made from all the charges and handed to the secretary.

The following are the divisions and a scheme of report on each. (See Discipline p. 54, ¶ 52.)

(1) Spiritual condition of the charge: Noting attention to public worship, prayer meeting, class meeting, family worship, the Lord's Supper, and baptism of children, prayer and self-denial.

(2) Missions: Noting what missionary ground is adjacent to the charge reported, and how it may be occupied; what mission charges should be self-sustaining; what is doing for missions; whether there is a Woman's Missionary Society in the charge; what is the temper of our people towards missions, and whether they increase in liberality to missions.

(3) As to Sunday-schools: Noting how many in the charge; how many officers, teachers and pupils; what literature is used; how the schools are conducted; whether parents generally take part in the school; whether the children are led by the school into the church, and whether they regularly attend public preaching.

(4) Education: Noting whether our people support our own schools; whether there is any day-school in the charge under Methodist control; whether it is practicable to have a primary school or schools in the charge under our care; whether any help is given in the charge to educate young men for our ministry; what can be done in the district to further the cause of Christian education.

(5) As to financial interests: Noting what plan is used in supporting the ministry, and taking the collections; what was estimated for the preacher in charge this year, and what of that has been paid; what has been done in church and parsonage building and repair, and what is now the state of existing buildings; are the people careful to have good, comfortable houses of worship and for the preacher.

(6) As to church literature: Noting how many Advocates are taken; whether our people read books instructive in our doctrines, discipline and history; what can be done to encourage and increase the use of such literature, etc.

Anyone will see at a glance that, if the reports are ready and are so constructed as to keep these divisions separate and to present each one fully, we shall get at our work much more promptly and thoroughly.

A proper meeting will be held during the session in the interest of Sunday-schools.

Will the members of the Conference, preachers and laymen, please study these divisions, so that each one shall come prepared to take an interested part in the reports and in the discussion of them; especially let each one be prepared on the topic which seems to him most important.

The recording stewards will please bring the Quarterly Conference records for examination, according to direction of the Discipline.

"Gilderoy" on the Sufferings of Christ.

MR. EDITOR: "Gilderoy" is surprised that I "should take the horrors over a suggestion found in nearly all the standard writers of our Wesleyan Arminianism." If his statement be correct—that this suggestion is so found—then my "horrors" are surprising. Another thing surprises me, and that is, that any such suggestion has wholly escaped my attention. And another thing may surprise him, and that is, that I utterly fail to see any such suggestion in the quotations he makes from the standards. My "first article was" not "written hastily," as he at first supposed, "without having considered the subject carefully," but only after a careful examination of the standards.

Let us come back to the question. It is not as to the two distinct natures of Christ, nor is it as to the humiliation and sufferings of Christ. His quotations are in point here. But the question is, Did the divinity suffer in the agony in the garden? In proof of this he quotes our Second Article, and to emphasize this proof he puts the word "suffered" in italics; but he overlooks the fact that several other words bear the same relation to Christ that the word "suffered" does. Let us put these also in italics, and, in the light of his theory, see how the article will read: "Two whole and perfect natures—that is to say, the Godhead and manhood—were joined together in one person, never to be divided, whereof is one Christ, very God and very man, who truly suffered, was crucified, dead and buried."

Now, Christian reader, I leave you to make the application of his argument thus legitimately put, and to say whether or not our Second Article of faith teaches any such doctrine. You will pardon me when I say every sense of my moral being revolts at such an idea, and that I must be excused from pursuing the argument any further.

Greenville District Again.

MR. EDITOR: When Bro. Randolph gets older and has more experience, he will know some things that he don't know now. He will find out that statistics in the Minutes are not always correct, nor will they ever be correct until, as a brother recently wrote me, "preachers learn to make out their reports." Bro. Randolph in his zeal—lest Greenville district is robbed of a little of its glory—rather accuses me of warping the truth in favor of Winona district. He takes the statistics to prove his ground of complaint—a thing I most certainly would not do. If he will look at the report of the treasurer of the Board of Missions, he will find that the Conference charges raised for foreign missions $8,063 47. The statistical tables only show $7,343 65, a difference of $719 82 in favor of the treasurer's book, whence the only reliable information on the subject is obtainable. I would not take any honor from Greenville district. I would say to Bro. Randolph that my regards for that district are not only professed, but are genuinely sincere; but I stick to my original assertion, that, as a district, on the subject of missions Winona district carried off the banner; that my figures were correct. As a whole—preacher's salary, missions, church extension, Conference fund and Bishops'—I do think Greenville beat the record. I do not think any other district in our connection ever made such a record—paid everything, and, in some places, and on some items, paid some little over. But, brother, you will beat that all to pieces when you do all Greenville district is able to do.

But, in conclusion, let me exhort you, Bro. Randolph, don't depend on the printed statistics for facts. Ask Bro. Ramsey, of Australia, if the facts agree with reports always, and be a little more cautious in your statements. Don't go off "half-cocked" in your notes. I rejoice with you, brethren, there over your improvements, collections, salaries, parsonages, etc., but please remember that one sows and another reaps. Men labored, built churches, died and went to heaven before you and I ever saw that country. Don't boast; don't be too zealous of glory; don't imagine that that country has been needing you specially bad for the last fifteen years. I confess that your article makes me feel quite natural—like you feel now—that all the preachers who have gone before me were failures. I felt that way when I first went there; but I got over it in three years. So will you, I hope. I feel like saying these things to you, praying that they may do you so much good that you will not rashly accuse a co-laborer of partiality in ignoring your glory.

God bless you, and give Greenville district a bigger year of success than ever before.

Your brother,

T. B. MALONE.

From the Work.

FARMERVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Amid snow, rain and cold we left our home of last year, in the woods of Red River parish, to settle in this pretty little hill town. After much delay and some exposure and discomfort, we arrived here about sunset, January 28, and met a warm welcome from our good Bro. and Sister Cargill, which was peculiarly acceptable, as wife and little ones were travel-worn and weary. After being hospitably entertained by them for several days, we moved into the house selected for us, and are now very comfortably situated, indeed. Thanks be to the Lord, he has opened the hearts of the good people, and they have treated this itinerant much better than he deserves. Indeed, all over the circuit the people appear to love God's servant, and flock to the sanctuary to hear the gospel preached. I am sorry not to be able to report any conversions to date; but think a good foundation is being laid, and surely believe this will be a year of jubilee for many here.

Bro. Robert Randle has been with us, and held our first Quarterly Conference with good results, preaching with great power, and, though he has left, we are carrying on the good work every night.

I have fourteen appointments, holding sixteen regular services monthly, weather permitting, besides weekly prayer meeting in Farmerville.

We are to have a Sabbath-school Convention here May 3, 4, and 5, at which all the preachers and Sunday-schools of all denominations in the parish are expected to be present. Object: More light on this important branch of church work. Addresses on topics connected with the Sunday-school interest will be delivered by Bros. J. A. Parker, E. B. Galloway, D. C. Barr, Thomas Lain, A. J. Calloway, J. D. Edwards, and others. We are looking for a good time, and hope the results will be commensurate with our expectations.

We want the prayers of the brethren that the work of the Lord may be abundantly blessed here this year.

Animated by the way the followers of the Lord Jesus Christ are working in harmony together here, we are led to exclaim, in the language of the Psalmist: "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!"

The financial outlook is much better than it has been for several years, and we hope to carry with us to Conference, next January, a clean balance-sheet. Good Lord, grant it!

Yours in Christ Jesus,

G. A. MANDEVILLE, P. C.

MEADVILLE CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: I see a good number of our preachers are "setting forth in order" the progress made on their circuits. I have been thinking of doing so also as soon as opportunity offered.

We have just held our first quarterly meeting, and are very much encouraged by the attendance of the official members, as well as the private members of the church. Two of our officers walked seven miles to the quarterly meeting, and back home the same night. We had a good attendance of members from distant churches. The financial report for the quarter is the best we have had for some time. A moderate calculation, two hundred and fifty dollars have been raised for the different objects and enterprises of the church. A good part of that amount was collected under Bro. Skipper's administration, who served this work for the past three years. The presiding elder and pastor were not forgotten, but have received about one-fourth of the salary promised them, and, what is much more appreciated than that, the cordial sympathy and hearty co-operation of the brethren.

We (my family), consisting of wife and three children, have been welcomed with great kindness and most substantial expressions of good-will. We are determined to do what we can with our limited means to show our appreciation of their kindness.

We have three live Sunday-schools, two Ladies' Aid Societies, and one singing class, all in active working order.

May God bless our efforts to make this one of the most successful years we have had on Meadville circuit.

H. BRADFORD, P. C.

PAULDING CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: Having my work now fully in hand—district stewards' meeting over with, appointment of the several claims made to each circuit in the district (Meridian), respectively, and the brethren have survived the great confusion caused by the death of their beloved pastor, Bro. J. C. Brogan, whose place I am now filling—I take this chance of informing you and all the readers of our ADVOCATE that I am confident we are advancing all along the line: for notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather, congregations are good, Sunday-schools alive, prayer meetings not forgotten, missionary societies doing their work, collections moving on, members being received, and, considered as a whole, Paulding circuit is moving steadily toward that purity of heart and holiness of living which we have a right to expect from all who are followers of our Lord Christ. We are expecting a happy, prosperous year. So far as can be judged, the brethren in their looks and acts denote their satisfaction with their present pastor; and he can express himself as perfectly satisfied and happy to be with such good Christian people. He is inspired daily to "thank God and take courage." Yes, God is with us. Pray for us.

C. C. CAMPBELL, P. C.
MARCH 27, 1888.

Dr. John Hall is quoted as saying: "One who is healthy does not wish to dine at a dissecting-table. There is evil enough in man, God knows. But it is not the mission of every young man and woman to detail and report it all. Keep the atmosphere as pure as possible, and fragrant with gentleness and charity." That is a wise remark. There are family boards where a constant process of depreciating, assigning motives, and cutting-up character goes on. Let our homes be centers of frank kindness—where whatsoever is lovely and true and of good report is considered, and leave character dissection to others.

Expectation the Limit of Attainment.

We rarely get more than we expect to get. Mary was so busy trying to find her Lord's dead body that her sensibilities were dulled to the power of his living presence, and so she did not know him when she saw him. "According to your faith be it unto you," involves a principle valid everywhere. The bit will not be higher than the aim. Confidence is part of the genius even of billiard-playing. We shall not make many points that we do not feel that we are going to make before we punch our ball. Expectation is the first edge of achievement. We shall not see stars while digging in the sand, nor be in a mood to recognize the risen while exploring sepulchres and lingering bones.

Adult achievement generally answers back to young dreams. The dreams which Joseph had in Shinar stand in psychological bond, perhaps, in causal connection with the exploits which he performed in Egypt. Every small boy who thinks in his sleep about the sun and moon and seven stars dancing attendance about his star will, likely, have some kind of a pit gotten ready for him by his older brothers, or some Midianitish caravan will come to his relief, and by and by the other eleven may be thanking him for corn. Discoveries are generally matters of resentment before they are matters of fact. Columbus poetically found America before he left Spain, and so far from being surprised when he saw the Western Continent, he would have been surprised if he had not seen it. The falling apple recalled to Newton the doctrine of universal gravity. Because he was all ready to believe it—only in the temper to believe it—before the apple fell. Expectancy is knowledge at its green ear, the ear before the kernels in the ear are filled out. In this is the secret of the wisdom and glory of the heroes of Hebrew history and of all history. They were in the mood of the times as it were coming, and the events as they were to be. Abraham, Moses, and Elijah were quiet under the sublime revelations which God made to them, because they were ready for them and in favor of them. The organ must rent in pieces by the splendid music that is played in it, because the organ is adapted to it: it is constructed in the temper of all the marvelous vibrations that are going to be realized upon it.

It is the man without a presentiment instinct that chides Abraham for daring the Euphrates, Moses for assaulting the Red Sea, and Joshua for essaying the Jordan, the Hittites, and the Amorites. If we had more faith in the future, we should get faster to the future. Goodness will, perhaps, keep the world from going backward, but inasmuch as it marry it with enterprise before it will set the world forward. I notice that when new schemes are proposed and new territory explored the first thing reported of is still the Anakims. The Anakims and the Calebs still get cast down and the other ten spies, with the rest of the host, abase themselves by marching and counter-marching till the bones of the wilderness covers their bleached bones, and the spies blot out their unsavory memories. God could not save the world, did he not know how to do it by minorities.

The same principle is pertinent to the enlargement and betterment of our own individual future. We believe in the doctrine of growing in grace; but growing in grace is a distinct thing from believing in growing in grace. We believe that others ought to grow in grace, but that, perhaps, is quite distinct from expecting to grow in grace ourselves. Every man is orthodox in his estimate of his neighbor's duties. It would be interesting to know just how many people are really expecting to be better men and women next February than they are this. We may not be as good as we expect to be, but there is little chance of our being better than we expect to be. We need not suppose we are going to be pleasantly surprised. We pray a good deal about these things; one of the cheapest of all the ingredients, and the least profitable, is prayer—prayer, I mean, which we are likely to make it. If we were a tree out on the prairie, that was being cut down, and after some time had been cut in chopping, a rope were thrown over an upper branch, in order to pull the tree over, every one on the block would catch hold and as they pulled and saw the tree coming over they would assure their small pulling had something to do with its coming over, and it would. They pull because they believe pulling will tell, and after they begin tugging they would be immensely surprised if something did not give way. In a similar way we attach a cord to the hand of God, and let the earthly end of the rope down into the midst of a company of people gathered in what we euphemistically designate as a meeting of social prayer, and the rope has to dangle a good while, sometimes before anybody seizes hold: and a good deal of that is because those present do not believe that in their own petitions there is any practical avoirdupois, and so long as they feel that there isn't, there isn't.—Philadelphian.

The Exhaustiveness of City Life.

There are advantages in city life, but there are results that lessen the gains. It is not merely that there are risks from sewage gas and from crowded rooms, but from numbers that hinder interest. City life brings out the ingenuity of man, but there is a great exhaustion of vital power. There is constant wear and tear of the system by the multiplicity of things claiming attention. Think of the committee meetings to be attended, of the multiplied agencies demanding attention; of the fierce competition for existence; of the strain put on men of small capital by the existence and advertising power of large houses; of the many sights compelling thought; of the paralysis sometimes produced by the mightier work to be overtaken; and the difficulty of making oneself felt amid the moving crowds of the city. Then add the lateness of the hours the shops remain open; the amount of gas used and bad air breathed; the rapidity with which every customer has to be attended to; the distances it is necessary to travel, on trivial business frequently, in a city; the hurrying to catch trains; the complex engagements to be met, and it must be confessed that city life is most exhaustive. The drafts on nervous energy are constant. There is great excitement, and the loss caused is not so readily repaired as in the country. The air is not so pure. It has been vitiated by bad odors from every source breathed and rebreathed: there is no ozone in it. This accounts for the sense of lassitude so many experience. The superintendence of country toil or actual work has a more restorative influence than city work. Agriculture has been thought beneath many, and it has thus been left to lower minds, as though the best cultivator of the land would be one who had least cultivation of brain. To what, however, do men of leisure and competency so readily turn as to farming? It is evidently the normal state in which pleasure and profit are best combined. Man was not intended to be a mere machine to get money. The growth of cities means that men live rather to gain wealth than to produce it. Men may make money there, but at what a cost it is! How much is lost! Some say, "No. There are these advantages, in town: that lectures, services and amusements are more readily reached." Nearly all could be gained in the country under better management.—The Quiver.

The Pundits Confounded.

A recent number of the Bombay Guardian tells an amusing story—amusing to us Westerns, but not at all funny in the apprehension of those reputed wise men of the East—of the trials and labors which some eminent Hindoo pundits are undergoing on account of the interference of modern short-cut ways of doing things with their system of astrology, which forms part, a sort of annex, of their religion.

It seems that the date of the Durga Puja, a very holy festival, requires to be fixed by a careful study of the positions and influences of the stars, whereas it now comes out that the time has been all along determined by an examination of a yearly publication entitled "The Englishman's Street Almanac"—a state of things that vitiates the whole series of religious rites for years past! It is as if some Protestant impostor should squat in the Chair of St. Peter, and furtively cable the Pope's blessing to our contemporary, The Catholic Review. Aware that something was wrong, a meeting of learned Brahmans from Benares and elsewhere has been held, to consider what shall be done to restore virtue and confidence—the latter at all hazards. Referring to this vicious consultation of the Almanac instead of the stars, the Guardian says:

"This impious conduct was sub-reported by an enemy to the orthodox Brahmans, and great has been the agitation produced by the disclosure. Not only according to this discovery have past feasts been observed in violation of planetary conjunctions and stellar influences, rendering acts of merit nugatory, necessitating the repetition of vows, upsetting marriages, confusing births, and including blight, pestilence, and disaster of every kind; but the holidays this month, for which many of us have made all arrangements, will be useless, and need not be observed. Such were the asseverations of the Brahmans, and as the great question when to hold the forthcoming pujahs must be settled immediately, the meetings we have mentioned were convened." There was a heated discussion at this meeting. Many were not prepared to admit that all their rites and ceremonies were wholly without merit on account of the failure to hit upon the right day. But there was agreement upon the doctrine that the stars must fix the day, while it was gravely disputed whether their positions should be determined by the use of modern astronomical instruments or by the study of the Shastras.

Here we have a very impressive glimpse of the bondage which this whole people are under to superstition, of which their belief in astrology is but a feature, and to the interpretation, rather the mere whims, which their pundits may choose to impose upon them as the results of certain mysterious communings with the heavens. The influences authoritatively declared to dominate the hour or time are frequently of a malign nature, calling for many hardships if they would be escaped, on the part of the people. Thus not infrequently the most abject fear prevades all classes, and, as may readily be seen from the above, every department of life, public or private, is affected. The very shadow of darkness and of death broods over the whole land.—N. Y. Evangelist.

The Mother-in-Law in Medicine.

The wife of an editor of the Worcester, Mass., Evening Gazette, Mrs. G. F., had been restored to perfect health by the use of this new and wonderful healing agent. Her health had been completely broken down several years ago, and a long and costly course of treatment prescribed by the family physician, in addition to all kinds of remedies, had utterly failed to stay the steady decline of Mrs. F.'s health. In the spring of 1885 she began the use of Compound Oxygen, having obtained a Home Treatment from Drs. Starkey & Palen, and on September 10, 1885, her husband wrote:

"Mrs. F. is now in excellent health. Her blood is better than it ever has been. I am entirely satisfied that she would not have been alive but for the Compound Oxygen, and I have the satisfaction of knowing that I recommended it to her. I don't think her good mother has ever quite forgiven me for pulling her in the way of a cure, when her parents had endeavored for years, in vain, to find something that would help her."

Good-humored as this bit of sarcasm is, it points an obvious moral. Compound Oxygen is not a drug in any sense. All the facts about its preparation, use and cures will be sent free to anyone enough interested in it to address Drs. Starkey and Palen, No. 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

It is a strong count in the indictment against Romanism as unspiritual that family prayer should be (as the Quarterly Review, for January, expresses it) "so nearly unknown throughout the Roman Catholic world." Can that be the true system of faith which does not secure the result—home worship to the God of the home?

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a fullness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Briefs.

It is time for church officials of all grades to emphasize the soul-saving skill of our preachers, and grade them according to their proficiency in this divine art rather than for their auctioneering talent.

Brother, where will you make your mark for God and the church this year: on the pockets of your people or their hearts? When you read your report at Conference, will your bosom swell more over full collections or big revivals? When you read your final report of life's work at the awful assize, what will thrill you most then?

Canon Wilberforce, a vigorous and wide-awake English churchman, says: "If I were to add anything to the supplications in the prayer book, I would add this: 'From all the paralyzing cant of an unfelt devotion: from all the God-defying hypocrisy of an uplifted voice and a down-hanging arm: from all the miserable mummery of a grand external ritual and a selfish, unChrist-like daily life, good Lord, deliver us!' The only thing that Christianity wants just now—is Christians."

Your faith is the most important thing about you, for around that your character crystallizes. It is the only thing that can build character. If you have faith in low, vile, evanescent or temporal things, your character inevitably takes on that peculiar form: and that, in a very substantial sense, is damnation. If you first blast yourself, it is a matter of small import what follows—the worst need not take you by surprise: the best, without a change within, can not mitigate your doom.

THE DIGNITY OF THE LAW.—A few days ago a zealous policeman of this city accosted a barber carrying on the street a box of tonsorial instruments, and demanded to know if he had been plying his trade. The artiste admitted his guilt, but, being pressed with further inquiries, fell to cursing the officer, who locked him up on charge of violating Sunday Law. The court discharged the prisoner for violating Sunday Law, but fined him for insulting an officer. We suppose the righteous judge construed the abuse this officer got as a contempt of court. It strikes us that an officer who depends upon the confession of suspects as the basis of arrests is the real source of contempt; and that the judge who waives a real offense for an imaginary one ought to carry a coat of triple mail if at all sensitive to the flying missile of contempt. This officer, it may be, was surprised when curses and not gold came to his inquiry of a violated Sunday Law. Hundreds of what Chesterfield calls artists in human slaughter sell liquor in open defiance of the Sunday Law and the courts throughout the city and State, and who dreams they curse the officer when it is so much less trouble to fee them. But let a barber go to shave an old man, or sick man or corpse, and, by the majesty of the law, he shall pay for it unless he give gold and not curses.

The Sunday-school of Trinity Church, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Baltimore, Md., has raised in the last year for foreign missions $1,012 60, while the congregation has raised in addition $1,244, making a total of $2,256 60.

The Editor Abroad.

In my last I left the readers of the ADVOCATE sitting down on the shores of the Pacific, listening to the death-song of the last "poor Indian" as our Christian civilization pushed him off into the "vasty deep." I myself was so affected by the sight that I had to stop before I got through my piece.

As I said, the Indians made the discovery of the medicinal properties of the waters of Sour Lake. The history of that discovery is made in one general sentence; the details can be supplied by each reader's imagination:

"The Indians discovered this wonderful laboratory of nature, and used the water successfully in the treatment of various diseases, and found out the leading properties of the jar by applying it to sores on the backs of their ponies."

In all such matters of discovery the puzzling question with me always is this: What induced the discoverer to make the experiment which resulted in the discovery? Was the experiment the result of a course of reasoning, or was it a mere whim? The discovery of America was the accidental result of a course of reasoning which sent Columbus seeking after a very different object. A man, who had been suffering for months with sore eyes, was hunting in the mountains of Northwestern Arkansas, and, while heated with the fatigue of the chase, came upon a pool of water, formed by tiny streams trickling from the rocks, and very naturally gave his eyes and face a good bath. The next day he discovered that his eyes were very much better. This induced another visit to the pool, and then another, until a permanent cure was effected. Then the world first heard of the now far-famed Eureka Springs! It may have been some such accidental use of these waters by a sick Indian that brought their healing virtues to the notice of his medicine man, who was thus encouraged to make further trial of them upon other patients. The result was a successful treatment of disease. How long the Indians used these waters as a medicine no one knows, but everybody knows that when they left the country they left these springs and the fame of their wonderful cures behind as a legacy to the whites, in part payment of their debt of gratitude for being driven out.

Now, I want to say something more of these springs, for the more I study them, the more wonderful does the whole thing become. In regard to the bath-pools, there is quite a variety of them, though they are all in a row; and the row is not a hundred feet long. In some the water is very dark. These are the iron-water baths. In others the water is of a whitish cloudy color. These are the sulphur-water baths. In others the water seems to my eye to be a whitish green. These are called the "sour-baths." The water of the lake now has a decidedly greenish look. The water in all the pools, as well as in the lake, is impregnated with sulphuric acid gas, which is continually bubbling up in all directions and filling the surrounding atmosphere with its presence. And breathing this atmosphere is an important part of the program of healing. A curious thing here is that the water of the springs is so differently constituted. Here are nine wells and five pools for drinking, and the water in each is different from that of all the others. In some there is not the least trace of acid; in others it is sufficiently strong to make good lemonade, if the imagination can supply a little sugar. In some sulphur so largely predominates as to give the water the appearance of "milky-water." (The readers in town know what that is.) In some alum is present in quantity sufficient to give an acrid taste. In others iron is the principal ingredient. The wells are numbered, and the different numbers are prescribed for different diseases. Number four is cathartic; number five is alterative; number six, seven, eight and nine decidedly tonic in their effects and strongly acid. There is also a pool called "eye-pool," which is said to cure sore eyes. These are all near together. Number three is astringent in its effects, and is a hundred yards away from all, except one and two. Some of these waters are specially adapted to certain diseases of women, and remarkable cures are reported.

Now, it seems to me that, with this wonderful collection of mineral and medicinal waters in this Southern climate, this place could be made a sanitarium the whole year round. An enterprising and energetic man at the head of affairs, and a skillful physician to take charge of patients, would soon convert this place into a health resort that would be sought by people, North and South. Northern invalids would be delighted and benefited by spending the winter here, and Southerners would keep it full during the summer. But the whole appearance of things now seems to say that nobody cares much about it. The bath-houses are in a deplorable condition, the pumps to the wells are all out of order, the hotel and its accessories are in a rotting, tumble-down, leaky state, having the look of abandoned property. A gentleman from St. Paul, who, with his wife and son and daughter, spent three weeks here, said to me that he would not mind staying a week longer, but he could not stand the fleas. If the fleas drive away the guests in March, what may the visitors of July and August expect? I am told that the place is now tangled up in a law-suit, which may account for the dilapidated condition of things here; but it can certainly be no good excuse for it. The charges for board and use of these baths and waters would warrant an expectation of everything being first-class; but such an expectation is doomed to disappointment. When things of this kind are advertised in a way to induce the public to come, common honesty requires that there be, at least, comfortable quarters in which to lodge. But I expect my readers are tired of Sour Lake; so I quit.

SOUR LAKE, TEXAS.

City Politics.

Greatly to the disgust of the better class of our people the nominations of the regular Democracy have at last appeared. In the dilemma but one escape seemed possible, and that through the ticket of the Young Men's Democratic Club; but when, in solemn, popular convention, they essayed to clean the Augean stable, and give us a list of candidates worthy of the city's exigencies and the nobler citizen's vote—alas! for the standards of public virtue—the more fastidious class of public sinners must have a place on the ticket. Is the city so poor in men of unselfish and benevolent purposes that, in a revolt from a rule of demagogues and sinecures, we must take men who shall admit to themselves and their constituents that our laws can not be enforced? Has the Louisiana Lottery a representation on the ticket, or have the gamblers been heard from in the selection of city officers? We will expect the institution and this class of society to modestly retire to obscurity of private life when they are buried and resolved to ashes, but never till then; but the day is not remote when their pleadings and threats and gold shall be silent in the counsels of honest, earnest patriots.

Endowment of Centenary College.

We commend to the friends of Centenary, and to the Rev. P. A. Johnston, its worthy agent, the munificence of Hon. H. E. W. Palmer, of Atlanta, Ga. He proposes to give $1,000 in ten annual installments, with interest at five per cent. from date of subscription; the first payment being due when the sum of $25,000 (one-tenth of amount sought for) has been subscribed. On a plan like this surely $100,000 can easily be raised in Mississippi and Louisiana. If ever a college had claims upon a church—by reason of the liberality of its early friends, superiority of its alumni, the fidelity of its faculty, or its established facilities for doing the work needed by the times or its patrons—Centenary has such a claim. We have waited long enough for some princely saint to die for its endowment; it is time for its friends to live for it and make it the object of their toil and self-denial. The agent will, no doubt, call on you for amounts ranging from $250 to $1,000 on this or some similar plan, and we trust you will be your own heir and administrator, and proceed at once to endow our only male college.

Hurling Firebrands.

Twenty-three years after the Civil War is over Bishop Mallalieu, of this city, amuses himself and inflames the worst passions of his readers by describing acts of phenomenal cruelty perpetrated by Southern people during that period of strife. The country and church are moving forward with railroad-speed, but he rides with his back to the locomotive, and sees only things that are passed. Surely he could find some villainies in the newspapers of to-day, if he would but try; and if none sufficiently large at the South, we could furnish him some rich morsels from our Northern exchanges, upon which any carrion appetite would delight to feed. There are still left in the South a few Northern preachers who—playing between a policy of coquetry, to which either interest or ambition prompts them, and the more natural and usual system of abuse acquired in the strife of the long ago—are likely to die in a fit of indecision. It is immaterial to the world or the church how or where; but both are interested in the fact of their dying.

A Question and Answer.

A brother makes the following inquiry, viz:

"If a preacher is called to attend a funeral service on Sunday at ten A. M. when he has a regular preaching appointment at eleven A. M., twelve or fifteen miles away from where the funeral is to be, and it is too late either to get a supply or to call in his regular preaching appointment, what should he do?"

Answer. If the funeral and preaching are to be on the same day, the writer would go to his regular appointment. He could not help the dead—he might save one man from the eternal death. A pastor is entitled to know of demands on him for a funeral occasion immediately on the occurrence of death. He should prepare for it by reflection and study and, in case of pre-engagement, by providing a substitute.

A Challenged Citizenship.

For unparalleled impudence we commend attention to the following, clipped from the Northwestern Christian Advocate. It is astonishing how soon after his arrival on our soil an Irishman shoulders the responsibility of preserving this country from ruin, and how naturally he assumes control of its morals who never had any of his own to speak of.

The saloonites in Iowa are trying all means to defeat the execution of the law against their nuisance—"business." The latest wrinkle is to question the citizenship of Methodist pastors who have the temerity to make complaints. Iowa law declares that a complainant must be "a citizen," and the saloon tries to show that the Methodist pastor who is liable to be moved by a Bishop is not a citizen by intent, since intent to remain in a given locality is requisite to the acquisition of citizenship in a given township. This dodge has been tried to defeat the legal complaints of Rev. George E. Fuller, of Emmetsburg, Iowa. The issue has been carried up to the State Supreme Court, and a decision is expected soon. One "Mike McDonald" is the appellant, and, wearing the very coat that comforted him in the steerage when he was but yesterday an immigrant, he questions the citizenship of a man born in Massachusetts half a century ago, and whose forefathers came over in the Mayflower. The defendant belongs, too, to a church whose priests are not citizens, and who give allegiance to the sovereign of an alien power: Hurrah for Americanism!

Presbyterianism.

From present indications it is likely that the Northern and Southern Presbyterians will soon coalesce in one grand body. The representatives of the two assemblies have recently held a conference, and come to an agreement upon doctrinals and Church Boards. Upon the matter of the colored people, the Southern Presbyterians favored the plan of an entirely separate and independent organization, or, in lieu of it, separate churches, presbyteries and synods, with a representation in the General Assembly on same terms as the white synods. The conference came to a halt in the matter of political deliverances; but after the session of the two assemblies, next May, we presume an understanding will be had.

Carrollton Church.

Last Sunday was anniversary day at Carrollton Church, and a large congregation assembled to enjoy the occasion and make it profitable. Exquisite music from the trained choir, assisted by four violins, delighted everybody. The violin overture, by four lads, was a joyful surprise, that contributed greatly to the interest of the occasion. The lecture on "Methodist Preachers," by Rev. B. Carradine, was in the best vein of this popular preacher, and his audience were convulsed with laughter or with grief as he yielded to the humor or pathos of his theme. Rev. J. T. Sawyer followed in his own style with a collection, which amounted to $460. So we may hope that the pastor, Rev. F. N. Parker, will push the subscription and wipe out this $1,500 debt.

Who Will Go Anywhere?

We have received many applications for mission work, but nearly all limit their offer to Japan. God bless Japan! Would that we could multiply our force in that field "an hundred fold." But other missions call for help. For years our men in the front have been waiting and pleading for re-enforcements. Missionaries are needed in China, Brazil and Mexico. We now call for men willing to go anywhere in our mission field, making no reservation as to place in their offer. The Master's call embraces "all nations." In sending in your application state whether you will go where the Board and the Bishops will send. In answer to this call, who will say, "Here am I, send me"?

J. H. JOHN, Sec.

The secular press, in its weekly issues, sends out more papers than there are persons in our entire population by 15,000,000, while the religious press does not not send out one paper for ten of the enrolled church members.

Notes.

There is no objection to magnificent piles eventually substituting the chapels, but the original plant must be an humble one—in all Protestant enterprises—where the social element is a prominent feature of church life.

Zion's Herald has this note of advice to the approaching General Conference on the important subject of electing Bishops:

Give us Bishops from the pastorates; not the ascetic, philosopher, or metaphysician, but men who show that they have the genius of hard work for them on fundamental Methodist lines. Let them be men who could say, with Paul, if compelled like him to give their credentials: "Are they ministers of Christ? I am more; in labors more abundant."

Commenting on a recent sermon of Dr. Dix, the New York Herald has this to say in regard to the preaching for the times:

Nothing is more needed in these times than a clergyman who kicks his salary and his popularity into a corner and then proceeds to tell his people that they are going to the devil by a crossent road and will be there before they know it. In other words, there is so much namby-pamby religious sentimentalism and so many goody-goody and wishy-washy sermons nowadays that the community rather likes to be taken by the scruff of the neck and held over the flames for a few minutes, just to learn that religion doesn't bend the pregnant hinges of the knee to thrift and that it means business.

Have you faith in God? Some men have faith in money; others, in wit; others still, in oratory or diplomacy; and all the while imagine that they have faith in God. Some women have faith in fashion and in beauty, in pageantry and the blandishments of polite life, and, while no defeats occur, sail smoothly along under the delusion that their relation to God is an acceptable one. It is faith in God that pleases him. If you have faith in him, you will follow his lead, whether it be in making a trade, or a speech, or address, or casting a vote, or giving a dining: you will do what he directs, and be content with the results.

The following from the Central Christian Advocate is commended to the thoughtful consideration of our laymen: "We venture the assertion that there are few charges in the Methodist Church where any layman can be found who gives as large a proportion of his income to the service of the church or charity as his pastor does." As far as our observation goes, that is the truth. Why is it so? It does not seem to be a special hardship for one man to give as much, relatively, as another. As a rule, preachers give more in proportion to their means than anybody else in the world, and they give it more freely. In the preachers, the laymen have an example of what can be done, and as little as they think of it, that example is augmenting their responsibilities to fearful dimensions. In the light of that example, they will be judged. Ponder over it, brother.

One must be poor to know the luxury of giving.—George Eliot.

As an illustrative comment on the above occurs a recent gift by a working collier in England. He gave five dollars to the English Baptist Missionary Society out of his deep poverty with the statement that, in consequence of being employed only two days in the week, "we have had no meat in the house for more than a month." The self-denial behind this small gift puts in most contemptible contrasts many a larger gift for which no use was found in an abounding luxury. Out of plenty and out of poverty the two gifts will come for judgment, and the appropriate rewards will be given. Brother, how will your gift appear? If your gift awakens but a superficial and fleeting satisfaction now, will it be more than this then?

No man in any community has so many cares or staggers under so many burdens as the faithful pastor. With an average of, at least, three sermons a week, besides occasional addresses and lectures, benevolent and literary enterprises, with three or four hours daily spent in visiting, the care of sick and poor, attendance on several business meetings every week, not to speak of the counsel and help to strangers, the young, the troubled, the belligerent, the agents of all philanthropic enterprises, or the service rendered to the Sunday-school and educational institutions, the missionary, temperance and other church enterprises, he is the most overtaxed man in any community. It is a pity that religious people should increase his burden with extravagant exactions for pastoral service. No denomination of ministers spend so much time in pastoral visiting as the Methodist. It is right that the pastor should make as many visits as possible to irreligious households, and to the sick and poor and troubled especially. But old Christians ought to be able to survive with one visit a year, and let the pastor have time for visits elsewhere. Loose him and let him go.

Personals.

John Wanamaker, the princely Presbyterian of Philadelphia, has recently given $85,000 to the Young Men's Christian Association of that city.

The Evangelist gives the obituary of Captain Joseph Ball; born April 30, 1787, joined the Congregational Church 1807; died March 2, 1888.

Zion's Herald suggests to the Republican party to nominate Depew and Lincoln as its candidates for President and Vice-president.

Rev. W. A. Young, of the Baltimore Conference, is to preach the commencement sermon at Vanderbilt University on June 17.

Rev. Matthew Tyson Yates, D. D., the oldest missionary of the Southern Baptist Convention, and the oldest as well as one of the most useful and distinguished of any denomination, died in China, March 17. He had been expected home this spring to recuperate his health, which has been failing for some time.

Dr. J. M. Thoburn, a veteran missionary of Methodist Episcopal Church, reports to his brethren in India that he has already secured a corps of thirty-four re-enforcements for the work in that land, and that he hopes to increase the number to fifty.

Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, of London, preaching on a recent Sunday evening, said that till recently he knew by name and by face all the 5,600 members of his church.

John Ruskin has developed unmistakable symptoms of mental aberration, accompanied with violence, and he is now confined in a private asylum.

Rev. Dr. Hoss, of Vanderbilt University, is said to be the right man for writing a "Church History," of which there is some talk.

Rev. Thomas Harrison is conducting a great revival in New York City—60 converts reported.

On account of sickness in his family, Rev. W. D. Kirkland, the editor of the Southern Christian Advocate, has not been able to give full time to his work for some weeks past.

The Methodist Episcopal Church North helped to build 522 houses of worship in 1887 through its Board of Church Extension.

M. Wilson, son-in-law of ex-President Grevy, of France, has been acquitted by the Court of Appeals, which reversed the decision of the lower court that convicted him and sentenced him to two years' imprisonment, a fine of 3,000 francs, and declared him of all civil rights for five years, on account of his alleged connection with decoration frauds.

Rev. Bishop J. C. Keener, D. D., LL.D., presided over the New Orleans District Conference, just closed. He was in full mental and physical vigor, both in the chair and pulpit. His sermon, on the Sabbath, at Louisiana Avenue Church, on "The Trial of Faith," was a fine presentation of that broad providence which takes a man from sin's lowest level through penitential and disciplinary fires and finally presents him faultless unto the Father.

Bishop Wilson preached at Third Presbyterian Church, Richmond, Va., Sunday morning and at Centenary in the evening. Hundreds were turned away at night from the crowded church. The sermons, as usual, were packages of heaven.

Henry C. Spaulding, the inventor of "Spaulding's Glue," who was at one time worth $80,000, recently died in an alms-house. Liquor did it.

Rev. G. W. Briggs, D. D., the facile and accomplished editor of the Texas Advocate, we are pained to learn, vacates the tripod on account of ill-health. We sympathize with him in this trial of his faith, and pray that the Lord may sustain and restore him.

Dr. P. A. Peterson has now in press a work entitled "The History of the Discipline."

The church needs a volume on the economy of Methodism—something which will show the value and the relation of all the parts of our wonderful organism, and, weaving together the history and commentary of our Discipline, will give us the genius of our government. Such a book will be a great help to preachers and laity.

Spring Medicine.

The necessity of a spring medicine is almost universally admitted. And the superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla for this purpose becomes more and more widely known every year. That power to purify the blood, and those elements of strength and health which the system craves, and to which it is so susceptible at this season, are possessed by this peculiar medicine in a pre-eminent degree. Scrofula, pimples, boils, or any humor, biliousness, dyspepsia, sick headache, catarrh, rheumatism, or any diseases or affections caused or promoted by impure blood or low state of the system, are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Try the peculiar medicine.

The collections in New York City on "Hospital Sunday" amounted to $50,400.

Annual Meeting of the Woman's Board.

OFFICIAL NOTICE.

The tenth Annual Meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will convene on Thursday, May 3, 1888, in Nashville, Tenn.

Little Rock, Ark., was the place appointed for said meeting, but for the first time in the history of the Board the interests of the work have necessitated changes both in the time and place of holding the Annual Meeting.

Imperative needs in the foreign field required the Board to convene at the earliest possible date, and equally important considerations suggested the change of place from Little Rock to Nashville.

After weighing the questions involved, and conferring with the corresponding secretary of the Little Rock Conference Society, the officers decided to submit the question to the Board for action. Accordingly, the recording secretary sent to every member of the Board an official communication, and requested a decided vote for or against the change suggested.

The response was prompt and decisive. Forty-one votes were received unanimously in favor of the change to Nashville; hence the change as announced above.

Gratification is felt that the decision of the Board attests the wisdom of the change, and yet the remembrance of the disappointment of those who with zeal and joyful anticipation have been making ready for the entertainment of the Board awakens regret for the disappointment to the missionary workers in Little Rock, and a strong desire that the Master of assemblies may grant them richer spiritual blessings than the presence of the Woman's Board of Missions could have insured.

MRS. JULIANA HAYES, Pres.
MISS MARIA L. GIBSON, Rec. Sec.

The opening exercises of the Annual Meeting will be in McKendree Church, Nashville, Tenn., at 8 P. M., Thursday, May 3, 1888. The Board will convene in business session at 9 A. M., Friday, May 4, at the same place.

A preliminary meeting of the officers and managers will be held Thursday, at 10 A. M.

Thursday morning, from 10 to 12 o'clock, an informal meeting will be held at McKendree Church by the Conference corresponding secretaries for discussion of this work.

Items of Interest.

One result of the strike in the Reading coal fields will be the substitution of machinery for men wherever this is feasible. At Port Richmond machinery is being put in for piling and loading coal that will reduce the force of men fully one-half.

The following are the statistics of the Louisiana Conference of Northern Methodist Episcopal Church, 1887–88:

Probationers, 1,903; full members, 11,314; local preachers, 451; total members, 13,713; deaths, 368; infants baptized, 1,489; adults, 1,060; number of churches, 161; value, $247,885; number of parsonages, 53; value, $23,795; paid on building, $9,816; paid on debts, $4,988; present indebted, $9,870; raised on church expenses, $4,921.

The consumption of beer in the United States has increased from 6,200,000 barrels in 1867, to about 23,000,000 barrels in 1887; that is, more than twice as fast as the population.

The great steel gun recently cast in Pittsburg for the War Department was taken from the furnace last week and found to be in good condition. It had been in the furnace two weeks after casting for gradual cooling and the temperature was kept steady at 1,400 degrees.

At a recent entertainment in Philadelphia, admission was not by ticket, but by vegetable, each person being required to hand over to the doorkeeper a potato or some other vegetable product. The net proceeds were distributed among the poor.

Thin hair thickened, baldness cured and gray hair made to return to its youthful color by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

Books and Periodicals.

MEMORIAL TRIBUTES. A compend of funeral addresses. Edited by J. Sanderson, D. D., with an introduction by John Hall, D. D., and published by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York. Price, $1 75.

This is an aid for pastors, and a book of much comfort for bereaved. This is the first attempt to outline in suggestive and valuable thought the proper treatment of funeral occasions; and it has been very successfully done. Under the general divisions of "Childhood," "Youth," "Middle," "Old Age," and miscellaneous, there are specimen talks from the foremost men of America and England on death of persons belonging to every age, condition and occupation in life. We cheerfully recommend to every pastor the purchase of this book.

STILL HOURS. By Richard Rothe, with an introductory by John MacPherson, M. A. Price, $2. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 & 20 Astor Place, New York.

A valuable, suggestive treatment of great themes in a collection of germ thoughts, without formal analysis or rhetorical diffuseness, but, nevertheless, profound, direct and fundamental to knowledge of the subjects treated. Rarely have we met so much in so small a space, and rarely so much wheat with so little chaff. Persons who have thought, or who desire to think, will rejoice over this mine of gold.

PATRIOTISM AND RELIGION AS POTENT FACTORS IN OUR COUNTRY'S HISTORY AND DESTINY. By Rev. E. J. Stanley. A 12 mo pamphlet. Twenty-five cents; in cloth, fifty cents. Published by Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Send orders to author at Stevensville, Mont., or Rev. J. B. Barbee, agent, Nashville, Tenn.

SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY. A complete body of Wesleyan Arminian divinity, consisting of lectures on the "Twenty-Five Articles of Religion." By the late Rev. Thomas O. Summers, D. D., LL.D., professor of Systematic Theology in Vanderbilt University; arranged and revised with introduction, copious notes, explanatory and supplemental, and a theological glossary by Rev. John J. Tigert, M. A., S. T. D., Vol. I, 552 pages. Price, $2; usual discount to preachers. Published by Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

The Methodist preacher will find here the best thoughts of Dr. Summers arranged familiarly, in easy form of assimilation. Neither will we look in vain for the wisdom of both ancient and contemporaneous theologians. Of course, this work will find its place in the libraries of all our preachers, and we confidently expect its larger popularity in other branches of Methodism. We expect to see it put into the course of study at our approaching General Conference. We shall have more to say when the remaining volume—now in press—is out.

—The Quiver, for April, is of unusual interest and beauty. Nothing better for Sunday reading is published. Cassell & Co., 104 Fourth Avenue, New York.

—Scribner's Magazine, for April, keeps up to the standard of a superb family journal. Large clear type, beautiful illustrations, timely topics, clean literature and pleasant instruction. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York.

—Christian Thought, a bi-monthly, edited by Rev. Charles F. Deems, D. D. Contents of April number: The Absolute a Person, by Thomas Hill, D. D.; History—A Demonstration under the Moral Law, by J. F. Riggs, A. M.; Scientific Evidences of the Supernatural, by Prof. Henry S. Williams; The Miracle of Miracles, by Rev. W. G. Blake, D. D.; Conditions of Spiritual Light, by Rev. A. H. Bradford, A. M.; Chauncey M. Depew's Reply to Hawthorne, and Verdict vs. Spiritualism, by the editor. Wilbur B. Ketchum, publisher, 71 Bible House, New York.

—Homiletic Magazine, for March, has the usual Theological Expository and Homiletical Sections. Published by E. B. Treat & Co., 771 Broadway, New York.

—The Library Magazine, for March, a monthly of 200 pages, published by Jno. B. Ahlen, 393 Pearl street, New York. This is one of the best publications in the language, being choice selections, covering the whole field of literature, from the best English and American magazines and reviews. Every minister ought to possess and read this rich repertory of contemporaneous thought.

—Cassell's Family Magazine, for April, published by Cassell & Co., 104 Fourth Avenue, New York, has, besides the usual run of serial stories and miscellaneous papers, an admirable illustrated account of recent inventions and discoveries that is of unusual interest.

—Our Day. This is a new venture now in its third number, being a record and review of current reform, edited by Joseph Cook, of Boston Monday-lecture fame, with Miss Frances Willard, Prof. Edward J. James, Ph. D.; Prof. L. T. Townsend, D. D.; Anthony Comstock, Rev. C. S. Eby and Rev. Geo. F. Pentecost, D. D., associate editors. Nothing more is needed to explain the nature of or skill of the work essayed. $2 per annum. Published by Our Day Publishing Company, Boston.

—Popular Science Monthly, by W. J. Youmans, D. Appleton & Co., New York, publishers. It is only needful to say that this number does not fall behind its predecessors. It contains a picture of David Ames Wells, the famous political economist.

—The Chautauquan, for April, published by Theo. L. Flood, D. D., Meadville, Penn. It is devoted to promotion of true culture, and is the organ of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle. We have searched in vain for its cost.

—Madame Demorest's Illustrated Portfolio of Fashions, and What to Wear in Spring and Summer, can be had at S. R. Perry's, 183 Canal St., New Orleans, La.

—The Statesman is a monthly magazine devoted to the problems of practical politics, published by Statesman Publishing Company, 170 Washington St., Chicago. Price per year $1.

Southern Methodist Review,

—EDITED BY—

Rev. W. P. HARRISON, D. D.,

Is published Bi-monthly, or six times a year. Price, $2 per annum. This is cheaper than any similar publication issued in America or Europe. The erudition of the Editor is so well known that no commendation of his skill and ability is necessary. The mechanical execution is not excelled by any publication of its kind. It is specially designed to meet the wants of the THINKING CLASS, both of the clergy and laymen.

No preacher who desires to be progressive can afford to be without the REVIEW.

WE SOLICIT YOUR SUBSCRIPTION.

OUR S. S. PERIODICALS,

—EDITED BY—

Rev. W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM, D. D.

Our Sunday-school periodicals should be used in all our schools.

They are authorized by the General Conference, prepared by our Editors, published by our House for the especial use and benefit of our people.

They are adapted to our wants, and should not be substituted by any other.

Preachers, Sunday-school officers, and all others interested in the furtherance of Southern Methodism, SEE TO IT that no undenominational or impure literature is used in our schools!

In matter and style it is equal to the best, and is cheaper than any other of equal grade.

All the moral and religious reasons that call for Methodist preachers, for Methodist pulpits, call for Methodist literature, for Methodist schools. Write for specimen copies.

The Sunday-School Magazine. A fifty-page monthly of acknowledged excellence, for the use of officers, teachers, and older scholars. With full expositions of the International Lesson Text; every number contains valuable hints as to the facts, principles, objects, methods and capabilities of Sunday-school work. No publication of equal merit is furnished at a less price. Think of it—600 pages yearly, postage paid, for the small sum of 50 cents.

The Senior Quarterly. A thirty-six page pamphlet devoted to lesson helps for scholars in advanced classes. Its value is enhanced by the introduction of appropriate hymns for opening and closing exercises, hymns and tunes, maps, dictionary of proper names, etc.

Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum.....25c.
Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 15c.
Five or more, to one address, per quarter, each 4c.

The Intermediate Quarterly. Similar to the above, but with such necessary changes as adapt it to the wants of scholars in the main school. It is marvelously cheap.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 7½c.
Five or more, to one address, per quarter, each 2c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum.....15c.

The Illustrated Lesson Paper is a four-page weekly, designed for younger scholars who have outgrown the infant class, but who retain their fondness for pictures and simple stories. 208 pages a year.

Five or more, to one address, per annum, each 10c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper.....20c.

Our Little People is a beautiful lesson sheet, four pages handsomely illustrated and printed on tinted paper; for primary or infant scholars. Each number contains, besides the lesson, a page or more of "baby-land" talk.

Five or more, to one address; per annum, each 8c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper.....10c.

THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL VISITOR.

An excellent paper for the Sunday-school or the fireside, beautifully illustrated, published in three editions.

Weekly—Four papers each month.
Semi-monthly—Two papers each month.
Monthly—One paper each month.
Weekly—Ten or more to one address, each..50c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum.....75c.
Semi-monthly—Ten or more, to one address, each.....25c.
Single subscription, separate wrapper, per annum.....40c.
Monthly—Ten or more, to one address, each, 12½c.
Single subscription, in separate wrapper, per annum.....20c.

How to Remit: Send by Postoffice Money-order, Bank check, Express, or Registered letter. Money sent in other ways will be at the risk of the person sending it.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing.—Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

Gen. W. used to live down in Southern Illinois. When he was in court as a witness, one of the lawyers asked him his name. "Gen. W." "Were you in the late war?" "No sir." "Were you in the Mexican war?" "Na, sir." "Were you ever commander of militia?" "No, sir." "Then," asked the lawyer with a sneer, "how did you get to be a general?" "I was born so," was the reply.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

When Landseer, the great animal painter, was introduced to the King of Portugal, the latter, whose knowledge of English was strictly limited, welcomed him with, "I am delighted to make your acquaintance, Mr. Landseer—I am so fond of beasts."

We would again call the attention of subscribers and agents that, in making remittances, to make them payable to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Please keep this in remembrance.

LIGHT IN DARKNESS;

Missions and Missionary Heroes.

Of the many books which, in this enlightened age, find their way into homes of refinement, displacing a wholesome influence in serving to educate, while affording enjoyment, none can equal in interest and value the great missionary work by the

in which has most appropriately been given the title, "Light in Darkness." This book is comprehensive in its scope, giving, not only a graphic history of missionary work in all lands from the organization of the first mission, and the Christian heroes and martyrs who purified their lives for the heathens, but it also describes, in a highly entertaining manner, the customs, habits, superstitions and curious character of the wild races of the world. In covering this field at extraordinary interest, the book carries the reader into the realm of stirring adventure with ferocious beasts and reptiles as well as fierce battles with hostile natives, so, that throughout the work is one of startling excitement, though the main intent, to convey a true idea of Christian work in heathen lands is at no time sacrificed, but remains throughout, the most prominent feature of this truly great and grand book.

AGENTS WANTED! New workers in the field without experience, selling 10 and 15 copies a day. No experience needed. No capital required. Address for terms.

IT IS NOTHING TO ME.

It is nothing to me if my neighbor should say
That my coat and my hat are old-fashioned today.
And why, I declare,
Should I worry or care
If he cracks a bald joke on the fad of my hair?
So long as I know that the tailor is paid
For the time he has spent, for the garb he has made.
That the barber was never expected to wait
For the pay he's the right to for dressing my pate,
So long as I'm free—
Not in debt—do you see?
What my neighbor may say, why, it's nothing to me.

It is nothing to me if my neighbor should scoff
Because he has smooth hands, while my hands are rough,
For I know that the difference lies only in this—
Honest toil roughened mine, quiet ease softened his;
And I hope, before many years quiver we be,
His may grow strong like mine. But it's nothing to me.

It is nothing to me if my neighbor refuse
To return my salute, or disdainfully choose
To ignore my existence; I shall not repline,
For I have one comfort—the loss is not mine.
But it is a great pity, as all will agree;
Yet his want of good manners is nothing to me.

Still, here let me say
That should trouble some day
Encompass my neighbor and darken his way,
'Twould be both my duty and pleasure to fly
And stand to his back while the trouble was nigh;
For then, don't you see?
I could not be free
To feel that his sorrow was nothing to me.

The Model Child.

MR. EDITOR: Not long since little Jimmie Tucker's papa asked him if he knew whose picture was in a certain frame near by. Jimmie said, "It is yours, papa." His papa then asked him if it was not a pretty picture; and the little fellow looked at his papa right cunningly, and said, "Not much, papa; but I believe it looks a little better than you do." No doubt Jimmie had some delicacy in telling his papa that his picture was not pretty, as he is so much devoted to him. But, as there was no way for him to shirk out of it without telling a story, he stood up in a Christ-like spirit and told his father just what he thought of his picture. Jimmie is a good little boy, godly in his daily walks, keeps the rules of his church as nearly as possible, attends Sabbath-school, preaching, takes the sacrament and fasts in days set apart for fast and prayer, and oftentimes in his papa's absence he holds prayer together with his mamma and grandmother. He is the only child living of his parents, and their greatest anxiety is that his daily walks may be that of a noble young man, a minister of the gospel, and an honor and glory to God.

MR. EDITOR: I will write and tell you about our Juvenile Missionary Society. Our members number from twenty to twenty-five, besides the officers. We have a president, vice-president, recording secretary, corresponding secretary, treasurer and lady manager. We held our first meeting to-day, and, of course, you can not expect me to tell much about it. Our dues were ten cents per month; but to-day a question was given by our lady manager's for us to answer. The question was if we thought it would do to change the dues to five cents per month; and I think that we can get it down to five cents. Fifty cents was taken up to-day. Several of the members forgot their dimes to-day, and that was why we got so little; but we felt proud of that little. We don't know how many heathen will be taught of the true God with it; but there will be more collected between now and our next meeting. We meet the last Friday in every month, and see how our society affairs are, and how many members the officers have induced to join and help us out. I hope all the little cousins will pray for our society, and I also hope that Mr. Editor will pray for us. I will ask one question: What two chapters are alike in the Bible? I hope this long letter will not reach the waste-basket.

Your piece,

JENNIE FAULKNER.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy fourteen years old. My father is a member of the Methodist Church. Mr. Henderson is our pastor. We all love him very much. Mr. Editor, I will answer the question asked by Mr. Thomas Loflin. The question was, "How many blocks a quarter of an inch square could be placed in an inch square hole?" Sixty-four is the number. I hope I will see my answer in print. I remain,

Your little friend,

I. D. WILLARD.

LOGANSPORT, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: Having seen so many pieces published in the ADVOCATE, I thought I would see if you would publish a few lines from me. I do not feel that I have anything to entertain any of the little correspondents, but I will do the best I can. I hope that you will be kind enough to publish this letter, so as my mother can see it in print. I live at Shubuta, Miss., but am now staying with my aunt and uncle, going to school; but I am going home before very long. I have been from my mother a little over a year, and I want to go home so bad that I am nearly crazy; not that I don't like to stay here, but I want to see mother so bad. I think it is time for me to be homesick. I am eleven years of age. My father has been dead four years. I have two brothers and two sisters. I got a long letter from mother the other day. It was four pages long, and I was so proud of it I had to tell you about it. Our pastor is Rev. Robert Selby. We like him very much. I will close, hoping that my mother will see my letter in print.

Yours respectfully,

WILLIE MAY LEGGETT.

My Neighbor.

There are some troublesome neighbors who are the plague of a man's life. They borrow your umbrella when you want to go out, come and pay you a visit when you want to work at home, play the French horn when you want to go to sleep, and give a party on the very evening when you want to finish a tragedy. My neighbor has none of these faults, but he tries to incommode me every moment. He pries into everything in my room, destroys my papers, and devours my breakfast. Butter, cheese, poultry, game—almost everything is acceptable to him; and he never eats bread when he can get cake. He is neither a land owner nor elector, he pays no rent for his apartments, yet lives very comfortably. My neighbor is very gentlemanly in his habits, but never comes home till after midnight, and is fond of serenades and nightly meetings with the object of his affections. In other respects his character is good; he is neither a fop nor a bully, and avoids rather than seeks quarrels. He bears no malice towards those who treat him ill, and if you turn him out by one door he will come back by the other. He goes from house to house, making himself comfortable wherever he goes, and staying till he is tired, without ever waiting for an invitation.

Familiar as he is with your provisions, only take the trouble to put the stoppers in your decanters, and he will not meddle with them. He is always well dressed, his boots never creak on the floor, for their soles are made of the finest chamois, and the upper leather of India rubber. My neighbor, though he knows I must wear a coat out at the elbows, never wears anything but the softest furs. He never lays in fuel, but spends the cold season in my chimney-corner. All this I have to put up with. In fact, I think myself lucky if he does not invite his friends to his nocturnal orgies, but contents himself with abusing my hospitality, rummaging among my furniture, and plundering my larder. My neighbor is one of those personages who must be well treated. It is well known that whenever he leaves a residence it is sure to tumble down soon. This very troublesome neighbor, dear reader, is—a mouse.—Morning Star.

TIGHT-LACING.—Miss Oakey, an artist who has devoted years to the study of dress, thus writes in her book, entitled Beauty in Dress: "Any woman is too tightly dressed who can not raise her arms straight above her head and clasp her hands; who can not stoop to tie her shoe, or pick up a pin, without heightening color. Tight-lacing unrelentingly indulged, like a painless poison, saps the beauty, the grace, the brains, the life, from its unfortunate victims. Tight-lacing is not only a hideous stupidity, it is a crime—a crime that casts a heavy burden upon the next generation, and renders the present one incapable of its duties. It makes all the movements of the body angular and stiff. It ruins the digestion and the circulation, and consequently the complexion, which we all know is one of the greatest of feminine charms. It injures the sight and the color and the expression of the eye.

LIQUID GRAFTING WAX.—It is in print that the so-called "French mastic," long known as "Lefort's Liquid Grafting Wax," is made by melting one pound of common rosin over a gentle fire and stirring in one ounce of beef tallow. Take from the fire, and when it has partially cooled, mix in eight ounces of alcohol. If this cools it off too rapidly, it must again be placed over the fire, but great caution must be used to keep the alcohol from taking fire. When well incorporated and cool, put in tin cans or glass bottles and keep well covered or corked. This was until lately kept a secret, and the "mastic" imported from France.

HOME OF ALLSPICE.—Allspice comes principally from the island of Jamaica and is otherwise known as Jamaica pepper. The tree that bears this spice is evergreen and has glossy leaves that exhale a spicy odor when bruised. The greenish flowers grow in dense clusters, and give place to small green aromatic berries, which are gathered before they are ripe, carefully dried in the sun and packed 160 to 180 pounds in a bag to be shipped. These trees grow in other parts of tropical America, but they thrive best in Jamaica and are not cultivated. Birds scatter the seeds and all man has to do is to thin out the trees.—Good Housekeeping.

FOR INSECT PESTS.—Mr. A. F. Coronel, an extensive fruit grower of Los Angeles, Cal., has used for an insecticide, with great success, a mixture consisting of 40 gallons of water, 10 pounds of brown soap and half a gallon of pine tar. This being thoroughly mixed he applied it with an ordinary spray pump to the trees, the mixture being kept as hot as the tree could stand it without being scalded. At times, when the trees of his neighbors were overrun with pests, Mr. Coronel's trees were as clean and bright as could be desired.

If an apple tree has a sound trunk and roots, it is a pity, says the American Cultivator, to destroy it under most circumstances. It takes many years to get a young tree into bearing, and when it does bear it will not furnish nearly so much fruit as one fully grown. By grafting with the Northern Spy and liberally manuring, an old apple-tree may be made much more certainly productive than young trees of this variety, which are usually shy and tardy bearers.

A city girl recently went to visit her grandfather in the country. She is fond of milk, but refused to drink any while there. Her mother asked why she would not drink the milk. She answered:

"I know where grandpa gets it. I saw him getting it."

She preferred city milk.

Shocking Accident.

So read the headlines of many a newspaper column, and we perused with palpitating interest the details of the catastrophe, and are deeply impressed by the sacrifice of human lives involved. Yet thousands of men and women are falling victims every year to that terrible disease, consumption (scrofula of the lungs), and they and their friends are satisfied to believe the malady incurable. Now, there could be no greater mistake. No earthly power, of course, can restore a lung that is entirely wasted, but Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will rapidly and surely arrest the ravages of consumption if taken in time. Do not, therefore, despair until you have tried this wonderful remedy.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Ask For Ayer's

Sarsaparilla, and be sure you get it, when you want the best blood-purifier.

With its forty years of unexampled success in the cure of Blood Diseases, you can make no mistake in preferring Ayer's to any other. The fore-runner of modern blood medicines, Ayer's Sarsaparilla is still the most popular, being in greater demand than all others combined.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far exceed those of any other, and it gives thorough satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickhaus, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staples. 'There is nothing so good for the youthful blood' as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—R. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, or, as the doctors say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

RIGGS—Died, in New Iberia, December 18, 1887, MRS. M. A. RIGGS, daughter of Mr. Hinkle, of Louisville, Ky., where she was born July 11, 1823. She came to Louisiana with her parents in 1831, and was left an orphan at the age of twelve years; and from that time she was reared under the kind roof of Mr. J. M. Porter, her uncle, in Opelousas. She was married to Mr. David Riggs, of New Iberia, August 7, 1854. In 1855 she professed religion at Perry's Bridge, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, under the ministry of Rev. B. F. Alexander. Sister Riggs was a devoted and doting wife. It was by this appellation that her husband always addressed her; and the address in her case was truly significant, expressing what she really was—wife—in the highest and dearest sense.

The hortative injunction of the apostle found ready compliance in the instance of our dear sister, and the affirmation concerning Sarah's devotion to Abraham may be as appropriately employed in reference to her, "even as Sarah obeyed Abraham, calling him lord." She confided in the judgment of her husband, and, therefore, entered into all his plans, co-operating heartily with him in their consummation. His wifely behavior was calculated, doubtless, did remove all occasion of domestic friction—which circumstance made their home, if not an earthly paradise, at least the abode of family contentment and harmony, which made it pleasant to be there, and always left the impression on those who shared their hospitality and friendship, that their union was one real and conducive to religious happiness and spirituality.

The hortatory admonition of the apostle, "See that the wife render due benevolence to the husband," is exemplified in the life of Sister Riggs. She was a faithful Christian and typical member of the church of God. A casual acquaintance or ordinary intercourse was not sufficient to bring out her womanly instincts and develop her generous Christian sympathies. These were the products of a more intimate association, and, hence, those who knew her best feel her the most and wore her longest in memory and affections. The death of such a woman leaves the world poorer, but enriches heaven and gives to Christ's inheritance in the saint's enlargement.

While upon the brink of the river, and the crumbling sands were falling from under her feet, her weeping husband, under the shadow of her departure, addressed her thus: "Wife, the Lord is good." "Yes," was the ready response; "he has taken care of us thus far and will keep us unto the end." In a couple of hours she made the passage of the mystic river, met the chariot on the other bank, and, sweeping through the gates of solid pearl, shouted, "Safe at home!" There she awaits husband and relatives. May they all meet her in the saint's everlasting rest!

M. C. M.

ATKINSON.—Died, at the residence of his father, in Lincoln parish, La., March 11, 1888, WILLIE B. ATKINSON, aged nineteen years, eight months and one day. Willie joined the Methodist Church seven years before his death, and lived consistently from that time until the Lord called him home. Rheumatism, from which he suffered, for many weary months, with all its horrors never seemed to daunt his spirit nor produce a murmur in his heart. The grace which brought him to the Master kept him close "in his pavilion." The faith which grasped the outstretched hand of love held to it to the last, so that even in death he did not let it go; but just at the last moment, turning himself in bed, he said, "Let me rest easier." How his servants realize at the last the promise of the Master: "There remaineth, therefore, a rest for the people of God." Enter in, blessed spirit, and let this rest be thine. Look you, ye disconsolate ones, to that rest where your circle will be no more broken by death.

J. A. PARKER.

WATTS—After noontide, February 2, 1888, the startling news of UNCLE JARRED WATTS' death reached our ears. It is true, he had been feeble less than a sennight, but his feebleness was not of that type to justify an expectation of so sudden a departure. He was born in Wayne county, Miss., November 14, 1816. In 1834 he moved to Livingston, Ala.; thence to Garlandsville, Jasper county, Miss., in 1845, where he was married to Miss Mary Shepherd in May, 1837, with whom he lived until he died. In 1840 he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, and when it was divided into North and South in 1844, he, being in, and in sympathy, with the Southern division, remained contented during the remainder of his life. He moved to Newton, Newton county, Miss., in 1866, where he died in his seventy-second year. Although he was quite deficient in scholastic learning, he was a close observer and manifested great sagacity and executive ability. He filled about all the offices of the church, except that of the ministry. Few, if any, who were as punctual in attending the church and Quarterly Conferences as he, when not providentially prevented. But he is gone from us. He had been out in his field, burning sedge grass, when he was violently attacked with nausea, and in about fifteen minutes after he reached his house he was dead; no one being present but his wife. He has left his wife and two nephews to weep over his departure. May God comfort them with an assurance of meeting him in the land of rest, where parting shall be felt and feared no more!

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

WITHERILL.—MRS. HARRIET ANN WITHERILL (nee Sweeny) was born June 11, 1811, on Grand Chenier, Cameron parish, La. She took her departure from her earth home and friends for her heavenly home in the forty-seventh year of her life, on January 19, 1888. When she was sixteen years of age she was introduced to her Redeemer and was born again under the preaching and ministry of Joel Saunders. She was married to William H. McCall, who, after a few years of wedded bliss, at his country's call, gave up his life in her defense, leaving his wife the legacy of his own Christian character and two children. After a few years of widowhood she was, in 1868, married to Robert Witherill, who still survives her. Her whole life adorned the doctrine of Christianity—in all the relations of life, as wife, as mother, as neighbor. When the writer of this memoir first saw her she was an invalid, confined to her bed then for five years. She suffered the will of God. The Christians who are shut in from the world in darkened chambers of sickness enjoy a sacred intimacy with the Lord that we who are strong and well never know. The memory of her patient face, her Christian hospitality, the influence of her presence are a rich legacy to all who ever came within the sphere of her influence. Precious to her friends is the memory of her life; precious in the sight of the Lord was her death.

CHRISTIAN KEENER.

LAMBETH.—MISS SALLIE LAMBETH, one of the teachers of the Methodist Sunday-school at Madison Station, has been summoned from earth by the great head of the church. We, the appointed committee, in behalf of our school, take this method of testifying that we have lost one of our best and most faithful members. She had been connected with our school for a number of years, and, whenever her health permitted, was a regular attendant. Not only will she be missed in the Sunday-school; but in the church. Great was her love for the church of God, and, for its ministers. The teaching of her Christian parents and other relatives was not in vain. Her consistent Christian life is to be commended, as deserving of our imitation. To her brother in Japan, her sisters in Mississippi, and other relatives, we extend our sympathy, and trust that by God's grace they may be resigned to the will of him whose word says "that all things work together for good to them that love God."

A. G. BENNETT, Sec.

NELSON.—MRS. MARY C. NELSON, daughter of Joe and Charlotte Buatt, was born November 25, 1833, died February 14, 1888. Her native home was Bayou Sara, La. She was raised an Episcopalian; joined the Methodist Church, South, in Richland parish, in 1871, Rev. J. L. Wright, pastor. Mrs. Nelson, as a member of the Methodist Church, South, cast the pure rays of Christian light around her friends, leaving a void in the hearts of friends and relatives that can not be filled. The daughter she left mourns the loss of brother, sister, mother, gone home. Regretting to leave her daughter, she was willing to die. She lived in humble submission to her heavenly Father. She suffered a long and lingering illness, which she bore with Christian fortitude. I have often heard her say what a little separated her from the loved ones in heaven.

Genteel Quacks.

"Yes, it pays," said a big, fat physician, with a name which is known throughout the medical world. "I have a practice worth $40,000 a year." "Women?" "Yes, you've guessed it first time. They pay $10 every time they come into my office. When one gets on my list I tell you she stays!" and Dr. H—— laughed long and loud. This is quackery—gilt-edged, genteel quackery—to keep suffering women paying tribute year in and year out, and doing them no good. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures the peculiar weaknesses and diseases of women. It does not lie to them nor rob them.

An exchange says: "When saloon keepers say that prohibition does not prohibit, it is just a way they have of telling us that they are a set of law-breakers who do not propose to obey any legislation which they can secure."

* MAKE your family happy! Don't you see what a pale, haggard dispirited woman your wife has become. Get her a bottle of Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier it your would hear her ringing laugh, and see the bloom of health on her cheeks again.

JUAN A. PIZZINI, Editor and Publisher of the Catholic Visitor, Richmond, Va., says: Having tried Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria, we do not hesitate to say, from personal experience, that in our case it acted like a charm, and did all the doctor claims for it, and we would surely have recourse to it again if exposed to Malaria. The Cause of Cyclones.

In cyclones we find the largest manifestation of that energy by which the super-heated lower air whirls upward through the earth through openings which it has rent in the higher, cooler layers. In its fundamental cause the cyclone is essentially like both the lesser classes of whirls, the dust-whirls and tornadoes, but the field of its work is vastly greater, though the energy which it exercises at any one point is less. The conditions which lead to the formation of a cyclone are as follows: In those heated portions of land and sea, where the circumstances permit the air to remain for a long time undisturbed, it becomes very warm and charged with moisture; the hotter it becomes the more moisture it contains, and the less it permits the heat radiating from the surface to pass through its texture; at the same time the upper air, deprived of its usual share of radiant heat, becomes abnormally cold; finally, as in the dust-heels and tornadoes, the lower air breaks through the upper and rushes towards the sky. Although at its beginning a cyclone storm is probably of no greater size and of much less ascending force than a tornado, there are several reasons which make its history different from that of the smaller whirls. In the first place, the field of heated air which causes the cyclone is far more extensive than that which produces the tornado, though at the same time the difference of temperature between the upper and lower air may be less. The greater bulk of the lower stratum of hot and moist air permits the cyclone to grow larger, but the less ascensional force of the lower air makes it rather less violent in its movements.

As soon as the ascending current brings a portion of the heated air from the surface into the higher level it expands, and the force, originally in the form of heat, which kept it in the state of vapor, serves to increase the ascending column just as much as would the direct application of heat sufficient to vaporize the water. Thus we have two forces to impel the air in the cyclone upward. Both these forces appear in the tornado, but there the original heat of the lower air is the principal cause of the motion.—Scribner's Magazine.

That able physiologist, Plateau, of Belgium, is continuing his studies on the powers of sight in the lower animals. As the result of numerous ingenious experiments on vision in centipedes and other myriopods he proves that their simple eyes enable them, in the first place, to distinguish light from darkness; but he adds this power also exists in myriopods normally blind, as the skin and appendages, as well as hairs, etc., are sensitive to the light. Myriopods in general see badly, so that those with eyes are scarcely better off than the blind forms, and many species are blind. Experiments show that centipedes with eyes only perceive at a distance the existence of an obstacle placed in their track, which reflects a good deal of white light, and Plateau thinks that this perception is due to the sensitiveness to light of the skin and its outgrowths. Moreover, these creatures do not distinguish the form of objects, though some kinds seem to perceive marked movements of bodies. He thus confirms the theory of Grenacher, based solely on the structure of the eyes of these animals, that they produce no image, and that they only appreciate the difference between light and darkness. This view is borne out by the kind of life of these creatures, which live for the most part in partial or total darkness.

Now that the Lick Observatory has been completed, and the monster telescope placed on its pedestal, and its marvelous power demonstrated, it has been discovered that the construction of the building is faulty. About $700,000 has been expended upon the building, and expert engineers are of the opinion that some portions of it will have to be taken down and rebuilt.

This is the best time of the whole year to purify your blood, because now you are more susceptible to benefit from medicine than at any other season. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine to take, and it is the most economical—100 Doses One Dollar.

A Man Who Could Not Pray.

Ten years ago, says a student, when an unconverted man, I boarded in the family of a pious woman whose husband was not a Christian. There was a daughter of nineteen, another of fourteen, and a son of ten. Every morning, after breakfast, I heard that humble woman gather her family in the kitchen, and read with them a chapter—"verse about"—in the Bible. Then, as I could not help listening, there was a peculiarity of service which quite mystified me. At last I asked one day if I might remain. She hesitated; her daughter blushed, but said I could do so if I really desired it. So I sat down with the rest. They gave me a Testament, and we each read a verse in turn. Then, kneeling on the floor, that mother began her prayer audibly for her dear ones there, her husband, and herself; and then, pausing a moment as if to gather her energies or wing her faith, uttered a tender, affectionate supplication for me. She closed, and her daughter began to pray. Poor girl, she was afraid of me; I was from college; I was her teacher; but she tremulously asked for a blessing as usual. Then came the other daughter; and at last—the youngest of that circle, who only repeated the Lord's Prayer, with one petition of his own. His amen was said, but no one arose. I knew, on the instant, they were waiting for me. And I—poor prayerless I—had no word to say. It almost broke my heart. I hurried from the room, desolate and guilty. A few weeks only passed when I asked their permission to come in once more; and then I prayed, too, and thanked my ever-patient Savior for the new hope in my heart, and the new song on my lips.

Chronic Coughs and Colds,
And all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, can be cured by the use of Scott's Emulsion, as it contains the healing virtues of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites in their fullest form. Is a beautiful creamy Emulsion, palatable as milk, easily digested, and can be taken by the most delicate. Please read: "I consider Scott's Emulsion the remedy par excellence in Tuberculous and Strumous Affections, to say nothing of ordinary colds and throat troubles." —W. R. S. CONNELL, M. D., Manchester, O.

NOT A CLUB.—The church, as instituted by Jesus Christ, has no resemblance to a club house, but many churches have debased the high idea of a church. To them it is simply a place of entertainment, social recognition, social standing, social enjoyment, Dr. Parkhurst says:

"The church is an army, not a club. Club life, which is so large a feature in modern times, has found its way into the church. With some the church is a place where men and women get together to have a good time. Men frankly say that the reason for their attendance upon the Lord's day in God's house is that they like what they hear, and like what they see. Many upon their advent in a large city select a church with the same governing motives that influence them in the choice of a hotel—because they like it. The consideration of the question, 'In which church can I be the most useful?' never once enters their minds.

"There are people in this congregation who, if it should by a decree of society become proper to attend the theatre on Sunday morning, would forsake the pew here for a box there. They use the same faculties here that they would there, and are pleased in just the same manner. To them the house of God is a spiritual theatre."

A perfect specific—Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

Why do ducks go below the water? For divers reasons. Why do they come up? For sun-dry reasons. Why do they go down again? To liquidate their little bills. Why do they bob up serenely? To make a run on the banks.

WHEN the stomach lacks vigor and regularity there will be flatulence, heartburn, nausea, sick-headache, nervousness. Use Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier to give tone and regularity to the stomach.

God sometimes gives us friendships only as the scaffolding of our lives, and when our character is built up he removes them.

DR. J. H. MCLEAN'S Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier, by its vitalizing properties, will brighten pale cheeks, and transform a pale, haggard, dispirited woman into one of sparkling health and beauty.

There is nothing in the universe that I fear but that I shall not know all my duty, or shall fail to do it.—Mary Lyon.

EXTREME nervousness, attended with fear and superstition, is cured at once by using Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book, than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

Mansfield Female College.
1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. D. F. Hudelle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 28 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Amesbury, Mass., had a million-dollar fire on April 5.

The ladies whose election to the office of mayor and council of Oskaloosa, Kan., has brought in a deluge of telegrams and special reporters took the oath of office April 5, and will at once assume their official duties. They declare for law and order and public improvements.

Jacob Sharp, who was soon to be tried a second time on the charge of bribery of members of the New York Board of Aldermen of 1884, died on April 5.

Senator Daniels, on April 6, introduced a bill to repeal section 1218 of the Revised Statutes, which provides that "No person who has served in any capacity in the military, naval or civil service of the so-called Confederate States or of either of the States in insurrection during the late rebellion, shall be appointed to any position in the army of the United States."

As the result of various hearings upon the subject given by the Massachusetts Board of Health that body will make a special report, declaring in substance that oleomargarine is good and wholesome and preferable to poor butter.

Iowa was visited by a cyclone on the fifth instant, doing much damage. Reports from the rural districts give intelligence of damage to stock.

The Rev. Mr. Sutherland, the evangelist, who quit the stage to preach the gospel, died in New York City, April 6.

The anniversary of the battle of Shiloh was celebrated in this city on April 6. It was commemorated at the graves of the Confederate dead, decorating with flowers the soldiers' monuments.

An organization of veteran soldiers and sailors, which terms itself the Veteran Association of the Regular Army and Navy of the United States, has recently been agitating the matter of securing bounty land and means for improving the same from the United States government.

It is reported that the prohibitionists of Georgia, in their convention, to be held soon, will declare for a third party and nominate a full State and presidential electoral ticket. Sam Small is billed by the leaders to stump the State.

A band of horse thieves was captured at Bundy's Ferry, M. T. When caught, they had in their possession fifty-eight head of horse bearing well-known brands.

FOREIGN.

It is said that the United States government refuses to accept the proposed mediation of Germany in the dispute with Morocco, and demands suitable indemnities and apologies. It is feared that the United States steamer "Enterprise" will bombard Tangiers.

Prince Bismarck threatens to resign the chancellorship. The trouble is caused by the proposed marriage of Prince Alexander of Battenburg to Princess Victoria of Prussia.

The Sultan of Turkey, as a proof of sympathy with the German people, has directed that a commission be appointed to receive contributions for sufferers from the inundations in Germany.

Four thousand Irish emigrants sailed from Queenstown, April 5, for America.

The Italian Cabinet has decided to stop military operations in Africa during the summer.

The Pope has summoned Cardinal Lavigerie to the Vatican to consult regarding the policy of the French Cabinet toward the church.

It is stated that the Emperor Frederick intended to confer upon Alexander the title of "Furst" as the reward for his final resignation of the candidacy for the Bulgarian throne, and thus remove all scruples regarding the betrothal of Alexander and Princess Victoria. Prince Bismarck, however, protests against this course.

Gen. Boulanger's campaign in the department of Nord is meeting with popular favor.

Joseph Chamberlain claims that the suffrage in Great Britain is as wide as in America. The Parliament is directly influenced by popular opinion. The House of Lords is powerless upon any great question. If any great constitutional change is demanded, a much more lengthy and difficult process is required than in England.

Reports from Montevidio announce the loss of the steamer "Rio Janeiro", with fifteen souls aboard.

The project for the liberation of the Brazilian slaves will be submitted to Parliament on May 3.

It is officially announced that all foreign Jews in Odessa, Russia, numbering 1,000 families, chiefly natives of Austria and Roumania, will be expelled shortly.

King Humbert has signed a decree to establish Italian consulates in Denver, Col., Philadelphia and New Orleans.

On April 8 many disturbances occurred in Ireland, as police power was exerted to prevent proclaimed meetings. A desperate encounter took place between citizens and constables at Kilrush. O'Brien's meeting at Longkrea was attacked and dispersed, and similar scenes were enacted at Ennis and other points.

An agreement was signed, April 9, by the Moorish Minister of Foreign Affairs and Mr. Lewis, the American Consul, referring the dispute between the United States and Morocco to arbitration.

The Prince of Wales has donated £100 to the fund for the German flood sufferers.

Captain Force and Guy Norton returned last Tuesday evening from their Southern trip, after making purchases at Crowley, La., Mr. Norton purchased a fine farm near the town, and Capt. Force secured a small tract in the city and will engage in fruit raising and fancy gardening. They expect to return in a few months to make it their permanent home.—St. Paul (Neb.) Phonograph.

DAWN.

BY REV. JAMES B. KENYON.

The dews are sifted o'er the lawn;
Pale vapors fold the shadowy height;
And like a ghost, the pallid dawn
Steals down the aisles of night.

Heaven's myriad torches quench their fires:
And yonder, o'er the earth's faint rim,
Where in the ash the moon expires,
The morning star grows dim.

The soft sleep-angel's dusky plumes
Glimmer along the silent way,
She takes to lands of dream(s) glooms.
Far from the garish day.

The hill-tops flush—the night is done;
A sudden bird-mute, sweet and strong,
Rings out, O'er Heaven the sun
The world is drenched with song.

Figures and Facts.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

In the article headed, "A Text and an Exhortation," published in the ADVOCATE, last January, the statement was made that the 32,265 members and 170 local preachers of the Mississippi Conference had contributed $8,585 46 for the support of ten superannuated preachers, twenty-six widows, and twenty-five or thirty orphans of preachers who had died in the harness.

I want now to get a little closer to the 32,265 members and the 170 local preachers. I want to get as close as the districts now, and then to the circuits and stations. The following table shows the number of members and local preachers (added together), the assessments for the Conference Fund, and the amounts paid last year:

Jackson	2,930	$900 00	$558 70
Brookhaven	5,522	550 00	544 00
Meridian	4,150	540 00	528 45
Vicksburg	3,724	600 00	516 36
Woodville	3,365	110 00	375 76
Seashore	3,420	115 00	296 50
Brandon	3,387	375 00	242 75

Thus it will be seen that even in the Jackson district the payments averaged less than twenty cents a member; in the Vicksburg district, less than fourteen cents; in the Brookhaven and Meridian districts, less than ten cents; in the Woodville district, less than nine cents, and in the Brandon district, less than five cents a member. And these figures mean that in the Brandon district 2,000 or 3,000 members, possibly 4,000, gave not so much as the value of a pinch of snuff to this worthy cause! and that in the Mississippi Conference not less than 20,000, or it may be 25,000, members gave nothing whatever to the support of men who had given their youth, manhood and age to the work of the gospel ministry, or to the support of the widows—those "heroines of the parsonage," as Bishop Galloway so justly calls them, who had "tarried by the stuff," while their husbands were to the forefront of the battle against sin, or to the children left us a precious trust to the church to which their parents had given their all to maintain and upbuild.

"But," says somebody, "we paid the preachers while they were at work. We paid them for their work, and it is their own fault if they laid by nothing to support them or their families in their old age, or in their days of need." Let us see whether this be true or not. With the exception of one or two charges, the salaries now paid the preachers in the Mississippi Conference are, I believe, larger than ever before in the history of the Conference. What are the salaries now paid? The average, by districts, is as follows: Jackson, $598 86; Vicksburg, $508 62; Brookhaven, $501 50; Meridian, $486 51; Woodville, $434 18; Brandon, $362 95; Seashore, $332 44. And on such salaries as these is it expected that men shall support their families, educate their children, and lay up enough to buy a home and support them comfortably in their old age? It can not be done. These figures tell of pinching want, suffering, self-denial immensurable, unknown to the world, and unappreciated by the church. Is it any wonder that preachers sometimes become secularized, their wives sour and waspish, and their children "the worst in the community"? What but the wonderful grace of God keeps so many preachers in the path of duty, toiling on almost without recompense to an old age of neglected poverty? and what but that same grace keeps so very many of the wives cheerful, hopeful, trustful, prayerful, rejoicing always, helpmeets for the preachers, enduring slights, unkind criticisms, and hardships unknown even to their husbands? And what but the same abounding grace of God keeps so many children of preachers "in the way our fathers trod," and lits them for the highest places, social, political and ecclesiastical, in the land? But what an account must the church members render who "starve the preachers to keep them humble," and withhold the small amounts promised regardless of the suffering entailed upon the preacher's wife and children, or who refuse to promise or to pay anything at all?

Was not the Joint Board of Finance right in saying: "We would further report $10,000 to be the amount actually needed by these worthy claimants. * * * Notwithstanding the pressing needs of these claimants, the failure of so many charges to pay the small pittances asked of them prevents our increasing the assessments to meet the actual demands upon us. We, therefore, make the same assessments as were made last year, and urge upon our brethren not only to collect the amount of their respective assessments, but to double the amount, if possible." (Miss. Conf. Min., 1887, p. 21.)

The Prayer Meeting.

BY REV. B. CAGRADINE.

Have an abundance of bright, cheerful and spiritual singing. There are some brethren who think that the harmonies of creation and the melody-making power of the universe were exhausted when "Hebron," "Arlington" and "Dundee" were composed. We regard them as hymns of noble power and gracious influence; but we can not but recognize the fact that they are only three out of countless thousands inspired by the Holy Ghost. To think otherwise is to pay a poor tribute to that Spirit who is recognized in the church, above and beneath, as a Spirit of song. And yet there are those who think that a prayer meeting is not a prayer meeting unless the three aforesaid hymns are piped in a high key, or flung into the nasal organs and whined or whinged forth according to the membranous construction of the nostrils in question.

Suppose all the bees in the country should imagine that all saccharine matter lay in three blossoms. Two things at once would impress us. One is that it would be hard on the blossoms, and another, that it would be hard on the bees. It is not less absurd for all the church to settle down on three or four standard old hymns, and sing away at them forever and forever, under the delusion that all gospel sweetness and power is in them alone. One thing certain is, that such a proceeding is hard on the hymns, and, more than that, even harder on the hearers. I heard of a man once who was struck a half-dozen times on the head with a maul. His final meek protest was, that the thing was getting monotonous. And so certain good hymns have become monotonous to the average hearer. The very sweetness that originally dwelt in them has been sipped out by persistent and manifold retunings. The Holy Spirit has scattered musical blossoms of every shade and variety over the entire field of church harmony. But these brethren of the suspicious mind cry out, "O, my soul, come not thou into their secret." Go not near them, believe them not, but let us stand by "Hebron," "Arlington" and "Dundee!" Do you wonder that the prayer meeting has not attracted?

Everything else advances here but the prayer meeting. The bands practice new pieces, the operas recognize the same necessity, the very hand organs change their tunes, but the prayer meeting in countless places propose to stand by "Hebron," "Arlington" and "Dundee," if it takes all summer. It virtually says, "I will never desert you, Mr. Micawber."

I fail to see the wisdom of the attack made upon the Gospel Hymns and melodies of to-day. The vast majority is excellent in word, truly descriptive of religious want, attainment, and experience, and are spiritual in influence. Moreover, God has honored and endorsed them by using them in the conversion of thousands of souls. The attack springs from the supposition that the Holy Spirit exhausted himself upon "Hebron," "Arlington" and "Dundee," and that all new songs must be wretched counterfeits and interlopers. Such people ought to be pointed to the fact that the song we are to sing in heaven is a new song. Just think of it—a new song! I verily believe that there are some who will never consent to join in it because it is new, and is not "Hebron," "Arlington" or "Dundee!" What we want in the prayer meeting is an abundance of bright, cheerful, spiritual singing. The gospel set to music has always been and will ever be a power. The writer makes this a prominent feature in his Wednesday evening service. He has secured six or eight singers from the congregation, who sit near him and lead, and upon the volume of sound that they furnish the congregation, in a sense, without fear, flings itself, and a great and gracious influence is felt to be at work.

Gov. Lowry's Veto.

BY "W. L. C. C."

The governor of Mississippi recently vetoed a bill passed by more than a two-thirds' majority of both Houses of the Legislature, requiring instruction in scientific temperance to be given in the public schools. The reasons given for the veto are surprising and humiliating. The governor says: "The bill provides that * * * instruction shall be given as to the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, especially as to their effects upon the human system in connection with the several divisions of the subject of physiology and hygiene. * * * I respectfully submit that there are, perhaps, not one dozen teachers out of the three thousand holding second and third grade license that could meet the requirements of this bill." If this last supposition is true, then it proves that instruction in physiology and hygiene should at once be introduced into the public schools in Mississippi, not only for the benefit of the pupils, but for the benefit of the teachers as well. If the study of the laws of health has been generally neglected among us, then so much greater is the reason that we should neglect it no longer. The governor's argument seems to assume that the structure of the human body and the laws of its healthy action are more difficult to be understood than other things usually taught in our public schools. Such a supposition is quite erroneous. With properly prepared text-books, such as already exist in variety and abundance, the laws of health, in spite of the hard word "hygiene," may be as easily taught as reading, arithmetic, grammar or spelling. Teachers are not ordinarily supposed to prepare text-books nor to be perfect in their knowledge of any science they teach. Yet certainly no pupil should be subjected to the control of a teacher who is too ignorant of hygiene to give the child some proper lessons as to preserving its health. Every human being should be taught, first, how to preserve life and health; secondly, how to behave, and, thirdly, how to grow wise.

If we, as a people, have been guilty of hurtful neglect in omitting proper instruction on this, the first of all subjects, in our public schools, why should the governor obstruct the Legislature when it proposes an advance suggested by the growing enlightenment of the day and the urgent demand of the people? Poor Mississippi! Other States may have children taught in public schools the laws by which they may hope to live long and be strong; but Mississippi teachers may not, in the estimation of our governor, aspire to so high an undertaking.

I insist upon it that any school, however primary, which does not give instruction on the laws of health to every pupil according to age and capacity, is deficient in the first element of a good school. Any school law which does not require teaching on the great subject of health as a part of the required course of study is simply behind the enlightenment of the age.

If the use of alcoholic drinks and narcotics has a great deal to do with the public health, as the highest authorities on physiology affirm, why should the law, if it must regulate schools at all, not require special instruction as to their effects upon the human system?

The governor objects to the bill because the teaching is made compulsory. What is there about public schools that is not compulsory, except attendance?—and that is compulsory in some States. But, says the governor, it will cost a quarter of a million to buy the books. If it should, could the people spend that amount more wisely?

Letter from Yazoo City.

BY REV. G. S. WOODWARD.

We have had a most unfavorable winter in this immense Delta country for church operations and for all kinds of outdoor work. But our brave circuit preachers have kept steadily on, wading and plunging through the vast sea of mud and slush that covered the whole face of the country, availing themselves occasionally of the railroad and steamer in reaching such appointments as were accessible. But they have depended mainly on the faithful and long-tried preacher's friend and unfailing servant—the sturdy horse. I know of no class of men of equal talents and dignity of character who sacrifice so much for the good of others as they who do so much to improve our civilization and build up society with so little pecuniary compensation. Strange to say, in some communities the finances of the church are wholly overlooked during the winter months, and the wants of the preacher unthought of. Some of the more timid actually suffer for necessary supplies. But, in most instances, our preachers are well provided for in this section of country.

After a long, dreary winter, spring has burst upon us almost in a day. In place of the chilling north and east winds, we have the soft, balmy south breeze. The leaden canopy and the rifting clouds have given way to the clear cerulean sky. The earth is robed in its delicate carpet of green, while the whole forest is clothed in rich garlands of nature's own adorning, and the compound of flowers, from the same laboratory, permeates the atmosphere with the most delightful perfume. Smiling beneath our Southern sun, we have a rival, in beauty, to the poetic vale of Chamory, and in fertility to the alluvial valley of the Nile.

Yazoo City, the "Queen of the Delta," and metropolis of the hill country as well, nestles, in artistic beauty, between the sinuous river and the crests of the neighboring hills. There is no city in the State that can boast of a better class of buildings. Her residences, business houses, railroad depots, warehouses, oil mills, compress, etc., all bespeak thrift and enterprise. The streets are notably superior; the best-drained, paved and graveled of any city in the State. But it has been a noticeable and rather humiliating fact that the churches and school-buildings of the city have not been in keeping with other improvements. But there is now a thorough awakening on this subject, and the united zeal and liberality with which the whole citizenship have entered upon it augers a grand improvement in this particular. The Presbyterians commenced building last year. Another month or six weeks will find them in a handsome edifice, complete and attractive in all of its modern architecture. Work will soon commence on the Methodist Church. Our good women of the Wesleyan Society are meeting with phenomenal success in raising money for its construction. The Baptist Church is being repaired and beautified. Finances are well up in all departments. I have forwarded to Dr. Kelley $125, our entire assessment on foreign missions, and the other four collections are provided for, or, as the phrase goes, "we have cleared the decks."

Our spiritual state, I think, is improving. We are observing the week of self-denial and prayer, of course; but it is too early to give results. We were favored by a visit from Bishop Galloway in February. He was fully himself, and, we trust, much more, for his sermons were not only to edification and the delight of our people, but they left the stamp of power—the Spirit's impress—when he was gone. To his timely services we are largely indebted in the clearing of the decks. He was pastor here in his early ministry. His allusions to it were peculiarly and touchingly interesting.

Dr. C. K. Marshall was with us on the fourth Sunday in March. He was greeted, as he always is here, with a full house, eager to hear the Word from him who has been, without a rival, their ideal of pulpit eloquence for half a century. His sermon on Sunday morning was the maturity of his most practical and spiritual thoughts, and proved, as it was intended, good to the use of edifying; yet he was not wanting in those elegant and pleasing features of oratory characteristic of his ministry. Rain prevented the evening service, much to the regret and disappointment of the many.

On Monday night he charmed our citizens by one of his versatile lectures. His portrayal of the character of Prentiss, Foote, Shocco Jones and other celebrities of the past forty years, was graphic and inimitable.

We have seven pastors in this county. Though some have had a trying time during the winter, all are looking forward now, with cheerful hopes, to a prosperous summer campaign. God bless the ADVOCATE and all of its readers, restore the editor to health, and preserve him long to serve the church!

Bringing the Truth Home.

The Presbyterian relates that at the village of W—— was the home of a man who was honest in his dealings, but who took no interest in religious things. His business was absorbing; and as the day of rest came, he was disinclined for public service, preferring ease and quiet at home, and rather enjoying than otherwise his reputation as an unbeliever. In the midst of external prosperity and apparent health a fatal disease suddenly appeared. One of his first movements was to send for a minister.

"Now, Mr. F——," he said, "if you can help me, I will be glad, for I am uncertain as to the future; but I don't want to hear about Jesus Christ."

The faithful old servant of God quailed at first, but undertook the service upon the basis proposed. "Well," he said, "I will talk with you to-night upon the greatness of God." His watchful hearer agreed to it, and listened attentively while the minister spoke of the wonders of creation, the beauties of nature, the telescope and microscope. The sick man was profoundly interested throughout the interview, and urged the minister to come again on the following evening. As the good man entered the chamber on the next evening, he said: "I will tell you to-night of the goodness of God." His hearer listened attentively, and, as the unnumbered mercies and blessings were made to pass before him, his mind was moved, and he exclaimed: "It is all true!" And yet the name of Christ had not been alluded to.

At the next interview the minister said: "We will talk to-night of the justice of God." The sick man in his arm-chair trembled with new and strange emotions as the awfulness of this attribute of Jehovah took possession of his mind; and, as the skillful fisher drew the net tighter, his conviction of sin had became a power within him hitherto unknown. At the crisis, when the face of the hearer indicated the alarm of his soul, as his sins stood in awful array before him, the minister rose to take his leave. "You are not going now, Mr. F——, and leave me in this distress! Can't you give me some comfort?" "No," said the minister kindly, "I can not. You have yourself forbidden me doing so."

"What do you mean, sir?" said the distressed man.

"I mean that he whose name you will not hear, and whose love is so deep, is the only one in heaven or earth who can comfort and save you."

The veil dropped from the eyes of the blinded man; he listened eagerly to the way of salvation through a crucified Redeemer, joyfully accepted the terms of salvation, and lived for seven months, testifying continually of God's great mercy in saving the chief of sinners.

Purity of life and character is one of the essentials of this type of loveliness. Good thoughts, good motives, good companionship, are the influences that mould the mind into a form of real and lasting beauty. An impure heart, a foul and diseased imagination will discover themselves in the outward features, in spite of all that art or skillful dissimulation can do. And there is nothing more repulsive or hideous to view than a corrupt, sin-disfigured character brought into sharp contrast by the weak and shallow disguises of cosmetics and gaudy attire. Meekness, patience, kindness, charitableness, a self-denying spirit—these are the vestments of the highest type of beauty—the kind which commands not only the admiration of the best of men, but is admired by God himself.—Christian at Work.

THE LAST HOUR.

The Sabbath day was ending in a village by the sea.
The offered benediction touched the people tenderly;
And they rose to face the sunlight in the glowing lighted West,
And then hastened to their dwellings for God's blessed hour of rest.

But they looked across the waters, and a storm was raging there.
A fierce spirit moved above them—the wild spirit of the air—
Hot it lashed and shook, and tore them till they thundered, groaned and moaned,
And, alas! for any vessel in their yawning gulfs entombed.

Very anxious were the people on that rocky coast of Wales,
Lest the dawn of coming morrow should be telling sad tales;
When the sea had spent its passion, and should cast upon the shore
Bits of wreck and swollen victims, as it oft had done before.

With the rough wind blowing round her, a brave woman strained her eyes,
As she saw among the billows a large vessel fall and rise:
Oh! it did not need a prophet to tell what the end must be,
For no ship could ride in safety near that shore on such a sea.

Then the praying people hurried from their homes and thronged the beach.—
Oh! for power to cross the waters and the perishing to reach!
Helping hands were long in terror, tender hearts grew cold with dread,
And the ship, urged by the tempest, on the fatal rocks drove sped.

"She has parted in the center! Oh, the half of her goes down!
God have mercy! Is his haven far to seek for those who drown?"
Lo! when next the white, shocked face looked with terror on the sea,
Only one last clinging figure on the spar was seen to be.

Near to the trembling watchers came the wreck tossed to the waves;
And the man still clung and floated, though no power on earth could save;
"Could we send him one short message? Here's a trumpet, shout away!"
'Twas the preacher's hand that took it, and he wondered what to say.

Any memory of his sermon? Firstly? Secondly? Ah, no;
There was but one thing to utter in that awful hour of woe.
So he shouted through the trumpet, "Look to Jesus! Can you hear?"
And "Aye, aye, sir!" rang the answer, o'er the waters, loud and clear.

Then they listened. He is singing, "Jesus, lover of my soul,"
And the winds brought back the echo, "While the nearer waters roll."
Strange indeed it was to hear him, "Till the storm of life is past," Singing bravely o'er the waters, "Oh, receive my soul at last."

THE TALENTS.

Matthew xxv. 14-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life.—Rev. ii, 10.

TIME.—A. D. 30, April 4, Tuesday afternoon.
PLACE.—The Mount of Olives.

INTRODUCTION.

This parable is peculiar to Matthew. Mark xiii, 34-36, contains an abbreviated form of it. Luke xix, 11-27, contains an analogous parable, that of the ten pounds, which has sometimes been confounded with this, but is different in structure, and was uttered on a different occasion. Its primary application is to his immediate disciples; it applies to all his disciples throughout all time, and it applies to all men; for all receive their native capacities and their opportunities, their characters and their circumstances, from God; he bestows them not as a gift, but as a trust. The whole parable pivots on the words "unprofitable servant," and it is one of solemn warning. The warning here is for those who hide their talent; who, being equipped of God for a sphere of activity, do yet choose, in Lord Bacon's words, "a goodness solitary and particular, rather than germinative and seminal."

14. For the kingdom of heaven is as a man—The Savior introduces his additional parable in the way of adducing an additional reason for that watchful preparation which he had just inculcated. Traveling into a far country—The proprietor who went abroad represents Christ at the close of his ministry on earth leaving his disciples and ascending to heaven. His continued presence spiritually with his people is not inconsistent with this representation, for our parable deals with the bodily and the visible. Called his own servants—The Savior refers only to such persons as have, by profession, a standing in his household. But as all men without distinction ought to be his servants, the principle of the parable is applicable to men without exception. Delivered unto them his goods—A great deal of the commerce of antiquity was managed by slaves. In this case they are expected to use their master's money in trade or in cultivation of the soil, and to make as large an increase as possible. His "goods" mean all their gifts and endowments, whether original or acquired, natural or spiritual. As all that slaves have belong to their master, so Christ has a claim to everything which belongs to his people. The day of Pentecost was the time when the goods—that is, spiritual powers and capacities, were by him most manifestly communicated to his servants, that they might profit withal.

15. Unto one ... five talents ... another two ... another one—The Hebrew (silver) talent is variously estimated at from $1,600 to $2,250, the gold talent as high as $15,000. The amount, therefore, here represented is considerable. But it also includes powers which are external as well as those which are inherent in the character, and, therefore, wealth and position. Chrysostom gives the meaning well: "The talents here are each person's ability, whether in money or in teaching or in what thing soever." The natural gifts are as the vessel, which may be large or may be small, and which receives according to its capacity, but which in each case is filled; so that we are not to think of him who received the two talents as incompletely furnished in comparison with him that had received the five, any more than we should affirm a small circle incomplete as compared with a large. To every man according to his several ability—No one is burdened beyond his ability; therefore, he is justly compelled to render an account. Observe the teaching in this parable, that there are no absolute gifts; all are trusts, to be employed in God's service for the edification of his church. (1 Corinthians xiv, 12.) And straightway took his journey—It denotes the leaving of men to the action of all those spiritual laws and influences of heaven under which they have been graciously placed for their own salvation and the advancement of their Lord's kingdom.

16, 17. Then—He lost no time, but instantly devoted himself to carrying out his master's desire. He that ... received five ... traded with the same. The fact that the capital was doubled implies that the trading was both active and prosperous. The ideas of trade and traveling were very nearly connected in ancient times, as the Greek words for traffic shows. Made ... other five—He increased his master's capital cent for cent. Whoever, in allegiance to his divine Master, and by his diligent use of God's gifts, adds to the spiritual value of his own character (1 Peter i, 5-10), or to the true welfare of his fellow-men (Romans xv, 2; 1 Corinthians xiv, 12), fulfills the part of a faithful servant. The result is to gain to God a true addition to God's wealth. He that ... received two ... gained other two—Each doubling what he received, and, therefore, both equally faithful.

18. He that ... received one ... digged ... and hid his lord's money—He buried it. Of what use to him would it be to enrich his master? Was not his master rich enough already? He buried his spiritual gift in what is earthly, fleshly, "the napkin" in the other parable means idleness in office. The man with the one (spiritual) talent is negligent not because he has little natural capacity, but from envy, or false ideas of human inability (verse 21), etc. Among the apostles Judas affords a sad illustration. He simply did nothing with it. Now that means that he "neglected" his opportunities. He did not lead a scandalously wicked life; yet he took no care to improve the openings for the service of God and his generation which were put before him, but passed them by as if he had never seen them.

19. After a long time—Long in the history of the whole church, and long enough in the case of individuals to allow them to make good use of the trust. It was an incidental intimation to his apostles that they should not weary, though their Lord did not make his appearance so soon as they desired or had anticipated. The lord ..., cometh ... reckoneth—To saints and sinners, whether they long for his presence or loathe it, he certainly will come at length.

20. He that ... received five ... brought other five—The first of the servants, without speaking of his labor or merit, His approval was all that the faithful servant had looked for. How beautifully does this illustrate what the beloved disciple says of "boldness in the day of judgment." (1 John iv. 17).

21. Well done—It is a condensed expression of approval. Good and faithful servant—Two significant adjectives, good and faithful. One who is good, in the sense of putting his whole heart and soul into his work, can not fail to be faithful, for the very secret of fidelity is single-heartedness, and the sole cause of unfaithfulness is a divided heart. Will make thee ruler over many things—In the kingdom of glory; or on the other theory, during the millennium. An intimation that there is enlarged activity as well as rest in the future world. The privileges of heaven shall be in proportion to the services wrought on earth. Enter thou into the joy of the Lord—The blessed inheritance which Christ's servants will have with him. The words are almost too strong for the framework of the parable. A human master would hardly use such language to his slaves. He bids them share his joy, for that joy also had its source (as he told them but a few hours later) in loyal and faithful service, in having "kept his Father's commandments." (John xv, 10, 11.) Here some drops of joy enter into us; there we shall enter into joy, as vessels put into a sea of happiness.

22, 23. I have gained two other talents—This second servant, morally viewed, was in all respects as noble a man as the first. His vessel could not hold as much, indeed, as the others, but it was as full. Well done, good and faithful servant—Christ expects faithful, not profitable, servants. In Luke xix. 17, 19, the reward is proportioned to the amount gained. All faithful servants inherit the same heaven of bliss; but there are different degrees of bliss adapted to the capacities. For keen and sharp as he seems to be in looking after his interest, he does not value men merely by the amount of money they bring in. ... He has regard to the diligence and devotion displayed, whether the results be great or small, and he will pronounce the encomium, "good and faithful," on many whom the world has regarded as comparative failures. How blessed to serve a Master who is utterly superior to the vulgar worship of success and quantity!

24. Then he which had received the one talent—This slave anticipates his lord's condemnation. Lord, I knew thee ... a hard man—Very few men excuse their own sin without blaming God as a hard master. His religion is severe; he lays down too stern a morality; he exposes us to powerful temptation; he has established a humbling plan of salvation; he has not made the evidence of Christianity sufficiently clear; and, in fine, he expects too much of men in the circumstances in which he has placed them. Reaping where thou hast not sown—The sense is obvious: "I knew thou wast one whom it was impossible to serve, one whom nothing would please; exacting what was impracticable, and dissatisfied with what was attainable." Gathering where thou hast not strewed—That is, "gathering into the garner from another's threshing-floor where thou hast not winnowed" (Meyer); so, "exacting interest where thou hast invested no money." The accusation was false, but the lord takes his slave at his word, "thou oughtest therefore," for that very reason.

25. I was afraid—Partly the real reason, and partly a veil to hide the real reason, his cherished indolence and self-indulgence. He feared to trade on that talent, lest, in the necessary risks of business, seeking to gain other he might lose that one, and so enrage his master against him. There, doubtless, will many be damned from moral cowardice. The "fearful," as well as the "unbelieving," shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. Went ... hid thy talent in the earth—This depicts the conduct of all those who shut up their gifts from the active service of Christ, without actually prostituting them to unworthy use. Lo, there thou hast that is thine—I give you back all you gave me. I have done no harm. I am a very innocent man. I have destroyed nothing. We now are about even. How could God's gifts be hidden, and yet restored to him entire, since the suffering them to lie idle is, in fact, one form of wasting them? The interest of the money, the profit of his own time and labor, due to the lord, should have been added before this could be true.

26. Thou wicked and slothful servant—"Wicked" or "bad" means "false-hearted," as opposed to the others, who are emphatically styled "good servants." The addition of "slothful" is to mark the precise nature of his wickedness. There is just one thing he can not tolerate—waste of opportunity. Keeping his money lying idle, neglecting to make the most of things, sloth, unprofitableness. Thou knewest that I reap ... and gather—The master echoes the culprit, in order to condemn him on his own grounds. It is best understood as an interrogation: "You knew I was a hard man, did you?"

27. Thou oughtest—In view of my very supposed hardness. Put my money to the exchangers—Literally, to those who stand at tables, because the bankers had tables before them. This was the very least the slave could have done. Should have received mine own with usury (Rev. Ver., with interest)—It is implied that the duty, profit, and pleasure of the servant should have been in gaining for the master. Labor for Christ is not a matter of bargain, but of loving service. When the servant came with a false plea of returning to the master what was justly his, he was condemned on his own showing. When men in the Middle Ages gave to a cathedral or a college, when they subscribe largely now to hospitals or missions, doing this and nothing more, they are "giving their money to the exchangers." It is not so acceptable an offering as willing and active service, but, if it be honestly and humbly given by those whose wealth is their one talent, the giver will not lose his reward.

28. Take, therefore, the talent from him—This deprivation may be considered partly as the directly penal and partly as the natural consequence of his sloth. For there is this analogy between the course of things in the natural and in the spiritual world, that, as a limb which is never called into exercise loses its strength by degrees—its muscles and sinews disappear—even so the gifts of God, unexercised, fade and fall from us. Give it unto him which hath ten talents—Thus the kingdom was taken away from Saul and given to David, and the gospel passed from the unfaithful Jews to the believing Gentiles. The abilities themselves can not be thus transferred; the opportunities can, and often are, even in the approximate working out of the law of retribution which we observe on earth. ... One form of the penalty of the slothful will be to see work which might have been theirs to do, done by those who have been faithful while on earth.

29. Unto everyone that hath shall be given—The expression is well-nigh proverbial. It is not a law for conduct between man and man, but of God's dealings in providence and grace. Nor is it merely that the one receives more and the other loses what he had, but that very gift which the one loses the other receives; he is enriched with a talent taken from the other. We see this continually; one, by the providence of God, steps into the place and the opportunities which another left unused, and so has forfeited. He shall have abundance—Not only full, but running over. From him that hath not shall be taken—Faithful use for God of every capacity will ever open fresh opportunities, in proportion as the old ones have been used; while spiritual unprofitableness must end in utter loss even of that which, however humble, might have been used, at one time, or another, for God and for good.

30. Cast ... unprofitable servant into outer darkness—"Darkness" where no ray of God's countenance ever penetrates; "darkness" unrelieved, unmitigated and eternal; "outer darkness," away from the abode of God and of the holy; "outer darkness," made more miserable by the wailing of those who now unavailingly upbraid themselves for their folly and their selfishness. And this is to be the end of burying our talent by neglecting our opportunities. Observe that the same condemnation is visited on the unprofitable servant as on the guest without a wedding garment, the hypocrites and the workers of iniquity. Compare with the teaching of this parable the parable of the fig tree (Luke xiii, 6-9), that of the vineyard (Isaiah v, 1-7), and the injunction of 1 Timothy iv, 14, "Neglect not the gift that is in thee," and observe that the smaller the apparent gift the more reason for its careful and diligent cultivation, development and use. There ... weeping and gnashing of teeth—Tears or regret over a wasted life and lost opportunities, and bitter chagrin at thought of joy he too might have had, had he only been faithful. And all this for no greater offense than burying his talent in the earth.

Biographical.

Edmund Howard Wailes was born in Milledgeville, Ga., July 12, 1799, and died, at the residence of his son-in-law, Nathaniel Cropper, near Woodville, Miss., January 3, 1888. He was, therefore, in his eighty-ninth year.

"He was so reticent," says his daughter, wife of Rev. Ben Jones, in a letter to the writer, "with regard to himself that we know but little of his life save that which occurred under our own observation. This was pure and beautiful, but bare of striking incident." Meteors flash and leave only darkness. The lives of many have been famous for successful enterprise, for the display of masterful genius in various directions, and have left the world no better—nay, sometimes by the very force of genius have been as a baleful breath in the moral atmosphere, leaving behind them a legacy of disease and death. But the savor of a good life is never lost; and here was a life, "barren," it is true, of "striking incidents," but full of all that makes life beautiful—full of love and kindliness; in the home and social relations characterized by more than womanly tenderness and refinement, and in matters of principles, by integrity, uncompromising, unimpeachable and unassailable, winning the devoted affection of his many friends, and compelling the reverent esteem of all who knew him.

Mr. Wailes assisted his father, Levin Wailes, in the survey of Louisiana in the early history of the State, and remained with him for some time in the United States Land Office at Opelousas, of which, if I am not mistaken, his father was the first registrar. Subsequently, and when still a young man, he was also associated with his father in the survey of what was then called the "New Purchase," a portion of the Choctaw Nation, including what is now the site of Vicksburg. After this, he went to Woodville, Miss., where he lived, except a brief interval, the rest of his long life. Here he married, and raised a family of sons and daughters. Here he enjoyed the friendship and confidence of that prince among Christian men, the Hon. Edward McGehee, and was associated with him for many years as cashier of the Feliciana Railroad Bank. Here, "before he was thirty-six years old, he had so won the regard and confidence of his friends and neighbors that six of them dying left him guardian to their children with encumbered estates; and when he surrendered each trust, the estates were unencumbered and greatly increased in value." He was a decided poet and after, enfeebled by age and bad health, in his eighty-first year, he had to retire from business, he amused himself with writing poetry. Some of it was published, but always anonymously, and was attributed to different persons. In this, as in all else, modest and unostentatious, he would not permit to be made public the true authorship of what others did not disclaim.

Of the home-life Mrs. J. P. Drake, his youngest daughter, writes: "The tender affection of my dear parents for each other was very beautifully exhibited in their home-life. Father seemed so completely satisfied in mother's companionship as not to be very dependent upon the society of his children. After her death, he sunk into a state of melancholy, from which only a new and more active life could rouse him. Then it was that the presence of his children seemed to be a great pleasure and comfort to him. He loved, as all old people do, to dwell upon the past, and told us many interesting things. He was always a kind and amiable man, but his spirit sweetened more and more as the years passed on. His face lost the careworn and rather stern expression of his younger days, and glowed with the reflected radiance of his inner life." Of his last hours Mrs. Cropper writes to her sister: "He was not sick, had no fever. The machinery was just worn out, and ceased to work. He was conscious; knew us all. Of course, you know he was not only fully prepared, but anxiously awaited the call. * * * His last words to me were on Tuesday evening. About five o'clock Mr. Cropper and I raised him up, that he might cough with more ease. When we laid him back on his pillow he looked up at us, and said: 'I suffer, my precious children, I suffer; but it is all right. I know that my Redeemer liveth. He doeth all things well; it will soon be over.' About six o'clock Mr. George McGehee came to sit up with us. Father knew him, and said: 'Is that you, George? It is kind in you to come. I thank you. God bless you!' He asked for water. Mr. Cropper and Mr. McGehee raised his head to give him some, but he lay back on his pillow, and in about ten minutes his spirit passed gently away."

"The best people are the least known. Those who are quietly building up the Christian civilization, of the ages are like the coral insects in the Pacific. The reef rises year after year, but the builders do not grave their names upon it. They build not for themselves, but for God."

One of these reef-builders was the subject of this memorial, and one of a group of whom tender and grateful memories will be recalled to hundreds by the words of George McGehee, a few minutes after his departure: "Mrs. Cropper, can't you see that glorious crowd who stood at the beautiful gate waiting and watching for him? What a sweet reunion there is up there now—your mother, and my mother and father, and Uncle and Aunt Hoard!"

Blessed hope of a resurrection to life eternal!

W. H. N. MAGRUDER.

Woodville District, Mississippi Conference.

The seventeen Quarterly Conferences of the first round have been pervaded by a tone of religious interest and enterprise that promises much. Public services have been well attended. The love-feast has sometimes been notably useful. Preachers in charge are all in health and at their work. No serious affliction in any of their families. Salaries are fair, with upward tendency. Stewards, generally, are resolved that their preachers shall be paid. Of this, except in a few instances, the earnest is seen in receipts of the first quarter.

Amounts to be raised for missions, Conference claimants, church extension and education have been equitably apportioned by the district stewards, who are enthusiastic for every claim to be met. Preachers and laymen have accepted the apportionment as reasonable, and expect to bring up all collections in full. Already the collection for foreign missions has, in some charges, exceeded the assessment. From the week of self-denial good results may be expected, each pastor being aided by leaflets from our mission-rooms.

Some notably superior Sunday-school workers are in this district. In some country churches, as well as in the towns, schools continue through the winter. A convention is held once a quarter, representing the six Sunday-schools of Livingston circuit.

Centenary College has ardent friends. A brother, when asked, "What would you do if rich?" instantly replied, "Endow Centenary."

On Amite, East Baton Rouge and Livingston circuits parsonages are in course of erection, or about to be. Committees are appointed for building churches at Port Vincent and Maurepas, Livingston; and Ponchatoula, Springfield circuit. Vigorous work is begun for completing our imposing church edifice at Centerville.

Altogether, preachers and people have reason to thank God and take courage—courage for continued prayerful endeavor. By the blessing of God on our District Conference—Clinton, April 19-22, Bishop Keener presiding—we are expecting fresh inspiration, as well as new light, for the work before us.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

From the Work.

EAST BATON ROUGE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I see the Minutes fail to give me credit for nine hundred and thirty dollars, the amount expended on churches and parsonage. Also sixteen dollars for church extension, and seven dollars for foreign missions.

I think it due the good people of this circuit to have you announce that they paid every dollar assessed to them, besides improving the parsonage and churches to the amount of one thousand dollars. We added about twenty-five new subscribers to the ADVOCATE last year, and I think that I will be able to add as many more besides. I think that I will succeed in getting all of old ones to renew. The Sunday-school work is on a boom, and the children are urging me to have a Sunday-school reunion, and have you to address them. Please make the above corrections. Yours truly,

G. D. ANDERS.

CARROLLTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: The services of the "week of prayer and self-denial" have just closed at Carrollton, Miss. Our people are unanimous in the opinion that it has done our church great good. We took a collection at every night service and Sunday morning, and the result was $181 35, an average of $1 50 per member. We had sunrise prayer meeting during the week, which was largely attended, and proved a spiritual blessing to all who attended. There are but few Carrollton Methodist Churches. The pastor was assisted in the plan of the work by Bro. J. R. Bingham, who is the preacher's "standby." Bros. A. H. George and D. N. Estes rendered valuable aid two nights by delivering addresses on topics suggested in the program. We are observing the week of prayer and self-denial at Greenwood this week.

T. W. LEWIS.

M'COOL CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: McCool circuit, Winona district, North Mississippi Conference, is certainly making great progress in money matters. The last four weeks I have given to foreign missions and other collections; have secured in good subscriptions twenty dollars over assessment, with one church yet to see. They are also coming up on preacher's salary. We expect a revival on other lines.

D. M. COGDELL.

WEIR, Mississippi.

DANGERFIELD, TEXAS.

MR. EDITOR: I do hope all your readers will send you ten cents for Rev. B. Carradine's sermon on "Church Entertainments." They are a curse to the spirituality of the church. I had thought of writing on the subject, but prefer to recommend Bro. Carradine's Winchester. It's loaded with dynamite. May God bless its truth.

Yours, etc.,

L. L. PICKETT.

PEARLINGTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Pearlington circuit has raised her Conference collections in cash and good subscriptions, and forwards to-day to Dr. Kelley $36 75, as the result of our week of prayer and self-denial.

Ministerial Grit.

The following from the personal experience of Bishop H. N. McTyeire, culled from his letter to the Alabama Christian Advocate, illustrates the quality essential to the success of an itinerant preacher. The preacher who can't stand fire must very soon drop out of ranks:

Let me give you an incident. At the General Conference of 1846, held in Petersburg, Thomas O. Summers was "translated," as he would say, from St. Francis Street charge, Mobile, to an editorship in Charleston. I was picked up by Bishop Andrew, not to fill his place, but to be put into it. My first year in the itinerancy was half out, and, quitting Williamsburg, I started for Mobile. The Virginia friends did not weep and fall on my neck and kiss me, like Paul's did when he was on his way through Miletus and Tyre and Cesaria (see Acts xx. and xxi.) to unwholesome Jerusalem; but they made as many forbidding prophecies. "What! going from this latitude to Mobile, at this time of the year? You'll die of yellow fever, sure." On the way I spent a few days at home, and my mother took leave of me as never expecting to see me again. Floating down the river, on the steamer "Bradstreet," I fell in with passengers who gave doleful accounts of epidemics, and bade me look out for yellow fever if I spent the summer in Mobile.

It was Saturday, about the last of June, when having landed and fortified myself with a good dinner at the Mansion House, I sallied forth, a perfect stranger in quest of Methodist headquarters. On Franklin street, in the old Beehive, they were holding a Quarterly Conference. By a custom of that day it was a joint Quarterly Conference of the two city charges. Dr. Boring, presiding elder, arrested proceedings to introduce the new comer. "Now, brethren," said the presiding elder, "we will resume the business we were on." What do you suppose that business was? The old city graveyard having been filled, a corporation had lately bought a new and large piece of ground for that purpose, and the Quarterly Conference was discussing the propriety, whilst lots were cheap, of buying one to bury the preachers in. My feelings can better be imagined than described.

Darwin's Great Mistake.

The New York Evangelist, reviewing the Life and Letters of Charles Darwin, edited by his son, and published by D. Appleton & Co., New York, gives the following explanation of Darwin's loss of religious belief. It is well worth the attention of all readers:

The autobiographical chapter is one of deepest interest to us in these volumes, because it displays the great observer of nature as the honest observer of himself, and the fearless recorder of the facts he observes. He confesses his predilection as a child for sensational falsehood, his simplicity of nature, his passion for collecting all sorts of things, his humaneness, his fondness for observation, his pleasure in understanding any subject, his industry and concentrated attention and growing fondness for science. He lost entirely his early taste for poetry, and almost entirely his passion for fine scenery and music. Though he acknowledges that "the loss of these tastes is a loss of happiness, and may possibly be injurious to the intellect, and more probably to the moral character, by enfeebling the emotional part of our nature;" and though he confesses that his "mind seems to have become a kind of machine for grinding general laws out of a large collection of facts," yet he fails to account for his gradual loss of faith also by the atrophy following the disuse of "parts of the brain," to which atrophy he attributes the losses in his esthetic nature. Darwinism, as he held it, begins in this confession of Darwin. He neglected God in nature, and God gave him over to a reprobate mind, even as he neglected God in beauty, and lost all relish of poetry and music. He made the world a machine, and his studies made a machine of him. Prof. Asa Gray was an evolutionist and a Christian, because he did not allow his ardent study of physical facts to atrophy his faith in God as creator, nor the physical and metaphysical proofs of creation to supplant his faith in the God of Revelation. It is the old physiological dictum raised to the highest power—neglect to use a tissue, and its atrophy is certain. His disbelief crept over him "at a very slow rate, but it was at last complete. The rate was so slow that I felt no distress." He felt the truth of a First Cause when he wrote The Origin of Species, but it became "gradually weaker." Darwin was a great observer, and the truest of all his observations is that disclosing the gradual atrophy of the religious part of his nature. "But then arises the doubt," he writes in 1876, "can the mind of man, which has, as I fully believe, been developed from a mind as low as that possessed by the lowest animals, be trusted when it draws such grand conclusions?" "I can not pretend to throw light on such abstruse problems." Of course not; the atrophy is complete. In 1871 he had written, "I feel in some degree unwilling to express myself publicly on religious subjects, as I do not feel that I have thought deeply enough to justify any publicity." In home life he had said nothing that enables his son to add "to the impression here given of his attitude toward religion." So it stands, that while Darwin was making his mind a machine for grinding out laws from observed facts, his various God-given powers that would have lifted him out of a mechanical into a created world, were dying the natural death of gradual decay, and when summoned by himself or by others to give a judgment in the region of causation or theism, he was compelled to confess the agnostic's ignorance. If indeed, as Huxley maintains, "the doctrine of evolution is neither anti-theistic nor theistic," Darwin's agnosticism must be charged to pure mental preoccupation in matter, with no power left for uplift above it; and he must go into history with a splendid name for energy, industry, insight, concentration of attention, and power of abstract thought in the region of observed phenomena, yet apparently destitute of the organ of religious consciousness, and indifferent to the world of religious life and work. As a man at home and among friends, he was attractive and pleasant. His correspondence, which makes the bulk of these volumes, is of intense interest to men of science, and of hardly less interest to the general reader who loves excursions into unwonted fields, and can admire the movements of a great mind. We regret that we can not add that the great mind belonged to a great man.

We accidently overheard the following dialogue on the street yesterday:

Jones. Smith, why don't you stop that disgusting hawking and spitting?

Smith. How can I? You know I am a martyr to catarrh.

J. Do as I did. I had the disease in its worst form, but I am well now.

S. What did you do for it?

J. I used Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy. It cured me and it will cure you.

S. I've heard of it, and, by Jove, I'll try it.

J. Do so. You'll find it at all the drug stores in town.

God's Plans.

Many men wreck their lives by determinedly carrying out their own plans without reference to the plans of God. In an army every part, every brigade and regiment must wait the commander's orders. If any battalion moves independently, though ever so heroically, it not only confuses the whole plan of battle, but brings disaster to itself as well in the end. So each individual must always wait for God's command to move. Keep your eye on the pillar of cloud and fire that leads. Rest when the pillar rests, move when it moves. Never lag behind, but be sure you never run ahead. You can make the clock strike before the hour by putting your own hands to it, but it will strike wrong. You can hurry the unfolding of God's providence, but you will only mar the divine plan unless you wait for him.

You can tear the rosebud open before the time that it would naturally open, but you destroy the beauty of the rose. So we spoil many a gift or blessing which God is preparing for us by our own eager haste. He would weave all our lives into patterns of loveliness. He has a perfect plan for each. It is only when we refuse to work according to his plan that we mar the web. Stop meddling with threads of your life as they come from the Lord's hands. Every time you interfere you make a flaw. Keep your hands off and let God weave as he pleases. Do you think you know better than he does what your life ought to be?—The Presbyterian.

To Make Sermons Popular.

The Evening Sun says: "The way to make the sermon popular is to apply Christian philosophy to the social and political conditions of to-day, and not to those of eighteen and thirty centuries ago."

There is some truth in this, and yet it may mislead. Nothing will make a sermon more popular than the proper preaching of those fundamental truths that relate this life to that which is to come. The most popular preacher in the world for the past thirty years, unsurpassed during the Christian era in the power to attract and hold audiences in the same place through consecutive years, is Charles H. Spurgeon. He combines the practical with the spiritual; the affairs of this world he interprets in the light of that which is to come. To-day the preacher who rightly divides the Word of Truth, and has an animated, natural style, and a strong personal character, whether with the manuscript or without it, can attract and hold large audiences, if the church be situated within the reach of the people. Of course, the people have not as much interest in the Israelites as they have in the Americans, and the Corinthians can be harped on till saints will sleep, and the sinners stay away; but a graphic sketch of moral conditions as existing in ancient times will often serve the true orator an excellent purpose. As Shakespeare's compositions interest the world still, and the philosophy, history and poetry of classic ages find willing readers among the cultivated of all lands; so the historical setting of moral and religious truths in the Word of God will always interest if, after the setting is displayed, the application of those principles to the people and conditions of the present time is luminously made.

William M. Taylor commands an immense audience of vigorous masculine intellects in this city as he proceeds through the Old Testament, and his successive volumes do not want for readers. Joseph Parker does the same in London. And there is this to be said in favor of Dr. Talmage, that he preaches the old-fashioned theology, together with an abundance of reference to current affairs. The basis of any preaching to be at once impressive, useful and popular must be the great truths of the soul, God, immortality, and the eternal consequences of human conduct.—New York Christian Advocate.

The Art of Getting Acquainted.

It is a fine art to bring two entire strangers together for the first time, by means of a letter or an introduction, in just such a manner that the true character of each shall appear and that neither shall be deceived. Candor is of the first importance. Without mutual truth and personal integrity one of the parties is likely to suffer by the meeting. Philosophical lawyers and conscientious physicians all know that their clients or patients respect them just in proportion to the conscious ability manifested to aid them. The value of an advertisement rests on the confidence inspired as to the good faith of the advertiser. Drs. Starkey & Palen, who for many years have been effecting remarkable cures with their Compound Oxygen treatment, declare most emphatically that they will give a truthful and candid answer to every patient who applies to them for cure. If they believe that the patient requires some other system of treatment they will say so at once. Cotopoond Oxygen is not a "cure all" remedy, but for diseases of the lungs, throat, stomach, and nerves its success is wonderful. Their offices at 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa., are crowded with patients, but applications from people in distant parts of the country have induced Abbo to introduce their new system of Home Treatment by which patients can take the gas at their own firesides. Write for a pamphlet. It is sent free.

A man's forgiving faculty is in proportion to the greatness of his soul. Little men can not pardon.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Briefs.

The way to provide for honest things in the sight of the Lord and of men is to pay the price of individual thought and self-denial and exhaustion.

The sore disappointment of your plans was intended to turn your thought on God. If you had thought of him, gratitude would have turned your groans into hallelujahs.

Who would discover in your sharp rebukes of sin any approach to the pathos of the Savior's tones as he foretold the destruction of Jerusalem? How many tears were there in your burning denunciations?

Godly repentance works, amidst other things, an indignation, and revenge against sin, and the clearing of yourselves from the presence and suspicion of your accustomed sins. Brother, make a broad line between the present and past.

Mr. Hammond, in his meeting in California, remarked: "Religion never makes life dismal. If any man professing religion wears a long sombre face, he's got something besides religion—perhaps, dyspepsia." Get religion and Christ in the heart, and you can't keep the sunshine out.

"The minding of earthly things" may seem to be a necessity laid upon us for educative and disciplinary purposes: but if we invest in this occupation so that we love the world or the things of the world, we shall find ourselves "glorying in our shame," worshiping our appetites, and inviting destruction.

Jesus is the friend and brother who is to be partaker of the whole life—the life of the store, and kitchen, and parlor, and chamber and closet, as well as that of the sanctuary. No joy may come to which he is not invited. No sorrow so trivial or great which he does not expect to hear of.

St. Paul, after giving up all that the worldly man prizes, said: "I am now ready to be offered." What about the sacrifice of yourself? When you are so proud of your opinions and your power and your place that you trample rudely upon other people and for them in the competition of life, how near, think you, are you to the offering up of yourself?

Religion may be a mere pastime, or it may be a fashion, or it may be an accomplishment; and illustrations of this use of it are not wanting in any pastor. When it is pursued in any such spirit, there is inevitably a sense of weariness that will eventuate in loathesomeness. It was never intended to be put on, but to be put within, and, by pervading the whole life as the blood goes to every point of the body, to be, like healthy blood, the occasion of joy and strength and beauty.

It is hard to find a hoodlum so destitute of reverence for beauty that he would ruthlessly trample upon a bank of flowers; but there are some preachers who go into God's garden and slash and batter about and trample upon the tender blossoms as if they never thought of God's delight in them. Train and nurse the feeble saints with trembling, sympathetic hand, and remember that the daisy and forget-me-not, as well as the most gaudy flowers, were planted from above.

The Editor Abroad.

I have something more to say of this Sour Lake. The gentleman with whom I am stopping has been here for quite a number of years, and has several times had charge of the hotel during the interim between the regular lessees. He has seen the lake drained and cleaned out, and assures me that not one drop of water comes up from below, as is the case with ordinary springs, but it all comes from the clouds. It is nothing but a common rain-pool. The bottom is covered with soft sandstone, through the crevices of which issue innumerable gas jets; and these impregnate the water and give to it all its medicinal qualities. Where or how this gas is generated no one has yet discovered. That these sandstone rocks should underlie this lake is, at least, very curious. As the lake is only about three or four feet deep, it seems that if these rocks undergirded this whole region they would be discovered in digging wells, for the wells range from ten to twenty feet in depth. I suppose the rocks were put there to hold down the gas until the time for the great cataclysm of fire shall come. That event is surely coming. The Scriptures assure us that "the heavens and the earth which are now are kept in store, reserved unto fire." The discovery of inflammable gas in almost every part of the globe points out the certainty of the fact that it is not a difficult matter to set the whole world on fire, and may also be taken as an indication that that supremely interesting event is approaching an uncomfortable nearness. A simple chemical change in the gases below the earth and in the atmosphere above, affected by the word of the Lord, is all that is necessary to produce an explosion which will make the solid globe reel and stagger and crumble to atoms under its mighty force. It behooves us then to heed St. Peter's admonition: "Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat." But why should the earth be destroyed? To make way for the "new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness," as some translate the phrase, "Wherein the righteous shall dwell." The "new earth," full of righteousness and righteous people, will be ample compensation for the destruction of this old earth. It is a favorite idea with some wise students of the Scriptures that the earth, renovated by the last fires, will be the future residence of the saints; and I once heard Bishop Parker, in an address in Felicity Street Church, say that if the notion was a correct one, he thought he would take up his final abode right on the spot where that church stands.

But, as often happens in my preaching, I have got entirely away from my text. About one-quarter of a mile from Sour Lake is quite an extensive salt marsh, where, during the war, salt was made to supply all the surrounding country. The water is exceedingly brackish, and at one time in the past there were bath-rooms, where people could take a "salt-sea bath" without fear of the hungry monsters of the deep. Along the edge of this marsh are, what the people here call, the "soda springs." I could not detect any soda in the taste, but it has a whitish appearance, and, as all the soda I ever saw was white, excepting when I found a lump of it in a biscuit, I concluded maybe it is soda-water. At these soda springs the people hereabouts do their washing, and they say it don't take much soap, but unfortunately that little has to be "bought soap," as the water absolutely refuses to have anything to do with the home-made article.

By this time I guess my readers are thoroughly tired of my gossip about Sour Lake, but if they were here, they would have nothing else to think about, and, of course, will excuse me for going off into gossip for just once.

I have seen some specimens of, what I suppose to be, genuine Texas characters, and would say something on that interesting subject, but I remember gratefully that the ADVOCATE has a "right smart" circulation in Texas, and also that several years ago a certain newspaper correspondent traveling about in Texas published some "impressions" which raised a regular cyclone about his head; so I shall exercise the grace of saying nothing on that point, of which grace my friends say I have quite a large share.

SOUR LAKE, TEXAS.

The Episcopacy in the Methodist Episcopal Church (North).

Our Northern brethren are not yet done with the doctrine of the episcopacy promulgated in 1844. They launched themselves upon a troubled sea that has never ceased to cast up jealousies, suspicions and contention, and may yet break the noble old vessel in twain. At its late session the Philadelphia Conference adopted a resolution calling upon the General Conference for an elective presiding eldership, with final control of the appointments of the preachers. This would make the Bishop simply an amanuensis of his own Cabinet, and transfer the responsibility of the appointments in each district to the local presiding elder, for he soon will become local under the influence of local prejudices. A few years of such administration will suffice to congregationalize the church. In other quarters a Northern exchange declares a disposition exists to subject the episcopacy to a quadrennial election or re-election. It is barely possible that some men think their chances for the highest office in the church would be enhanced if rotation in office or frequent elections occurred. It may be that a conviction of partial and unjust exercise of episcopal authority obtains in some quarters, or, as has been suggested in the Northwestern Christian Advocate, the discontent originates with the transfer system. Holding, as they do, the doctrine that the episcopacy is merely the agent of the General Conference, of course, it will be no difficult thing, under what they judge sufficient provocation, to hedge in the office with limitations that, while it serves the popular and current purpose of the preachers, will eventually and must inevitably do away with the itinerant general superintendency.

The root of all this trouble lies in their doctrine of the episcopal office. We are not disposed to think they have, in any one instance, egregiously misconstrued the character of a Bishop and elected an autocrat who has trampled upon the rights of the itinerant preachers. We take it to be an unfair and groundless suspicion that reflects upon the gentility or conscientiousness or Christian sympathy of these high officials. It is equally beside the truth in our opinion that a Bishop, with a secured salary—an office never yet in the history of the church vacated otherwise than by death—with a residence remote from the Conference he serves, can be prejudiced by a coterie of laymen against a preacher, and chastise him for suppositious faults by an oppressive appointment. The improbabilities are all against such a course, and it seems as if only an embittered and spiteful mind could invent such a complaint. Preachers will always be found who imagine themselves qualified for pulpits they never have and never will fill. Perhaps, they may have greater learning or sprightliness or oratorial ability than the men who fill such places habitually, and, in consequence, may feel that they are neglected or persecuted by the appointing power. But there are other qualifications just as essential to which they are strangers, and, it may be, of which they have never dreamed. With an eye that scans the whole man, as well as the whole work of an individual church, the Bishop, without reason either to fear or court any man, makes the selection from another Conference. It is but a rare thing that an appointment of prominence reflects adversely upon the judgment of the Bishop; and even these neglected men, if they are religious, find, with the better self-acquaintance and the success of the works they coveted, that the Bishop acted wisely. We have yet to hear of serious mistakes in the use of the transfer power, and, as no committee on episcopacy has yet reproached the judgment or the sympathy of a Methodist Bishop for its exercise, we are indisposed to charge this restlessness upon this much-criticised system. The friction it causes is, after all, a healthy one. But any man in the episcopacy of the Methodist Episcopal Church must be the subject of sharp criticism and suspicions, no matter how circumspect and judicious and even successful. With the prevalent view of the episcopal office, it is their right to unmake him, since they made him. He is simply their agent, and may be dismissed at their pleasure. It is their privilege to commend or reproach him, as he is merely their employee. Like the public servants of the nation, the magnitude of his performances and the publicity of his life invites the animadversions of a democratic constituency—that part of them, at least, whose willing and obedient instrument he refuses to be.

We are thankful that in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, we have no such contentions. Of course, we have occasional discontents, and sometimes malcontents, but we are thoroughly satisfied with the men we have selected. They are men of God with clean robes. We are satisfied with their official acts; they understand our discipline and enforce it with a godly judgment. We are satisfied with our form of the episcopacy, since God has given us a pure administration through it, and great peace and prosperity reigns throughout our borders.

A Coffin Trust.

Boston is the great emporium of everything to facilitate a genteel escape from the world. Why should not it be so? She is the seat of "cultyar;" the glass of fashion; the home of the millionaires; the fruitful womb of all reforms and of all the backsliding of the nation; the only city that can appreciate Mrs. Browning, and the only city that could monopolize the rum trade with Congo Free State. Boston comes to the front again in organizing a coffin trust. The largest depot in the country for undertakers' supplies is there. Besides the rings and screws and plates and floral designs and all the interior upholstery of a coffin, in endless quantities and varieties, one entire floor of an immense building is devoted to grave costumes. They are, of course, in the tip of the fashion, and adapted to every age of death. Why shouldn't people die as genteelly as they live, and why should not gentility in either case pay handsomely the artists who attend to such matters? So by dint of "cultyar" Boston has made a nice thing of mortal agonies and afflictions' tears, and now has organized a close corporation by which to keep up the prices and keep out competition. If any man impudently suspects a living can be made by less extortion in funeral expenses, the trust is obligated to teach that man a lesson in humility by means of a rival shop and the sheriff's flag. It is a question of "cultyar," and Boston's ideal greed and gentility must be maintained.

The heartlessness of this whole business is a legitimate result of the cold-blooded covetousness that has grown into the undertakers' trade in the last thirty years. A coffin whose real value is fifty dollars brings, under the distraction of bereavement, two hundred, and a vault that ought to be sold for twelve or fifteen finds sale at from seventy to one hundred and fifty. There is no more revolting comment on the lust of money than the writer has seen in an undertaker's bill and a regularly made-out bill for funeral prayers and holy water presented by a Catholic priest, unless it be in the iniquity of a coffin trust.

The Trial of Faith.

Nothing in connection with any man is so important as the faith that is in him. That it is which determines his solidity or purity or beauty, his earthliness or his saintliness. A man who believes in money is sure to spend his strength in accumulating it; and eventually his conscience and affections will be invested in its pursuit. He who believes in diplomacy as a means of success will become finally indifferent to all obligations. The butterfly or the libertine is the product of a faith in worldly pleasures, and frivolity comes inevitably of a faith in happiness as the object of life. Only a faith in God can give breadth and compass to a character. The foundations of true dignity, value and usefulness can be laid only on the unseen. Constancy, heroic self-denial, great sympathy and love must have God as their basis if they are more than an ephemeral sentiment. The uplift of a great affection that marshals all the life forces on a line of purity and projects them over interminable duration is found only when the Son of God is realized within. Hence it is of immeasurable importance that a man's faith in God should be unsimulated, unadulterated, and so intense as to control the entire spheres of deportment and experience.

The very moment a man begins to exercise faith God begins to try it. Frequently within forty-eight hours after conversion a man becomes conscious of the commotion that the process of proving inaugurates. Sometimes a shadow creeps over the mirror-like brightness of his assurance; sometimes he fights with fears; sometimes a burden of care presses him to the earth, and his downcast eyes see not the presence of the Burden-bearer; sometimes a great affliction hedges his pathway or darkens his prospects or confuses his thoughts. That he or his faith are being tested is not always distinctly understood. It is a great relief to know that God is at work by these or any means to develop or to verify to ourselves the presence of that temper of mind which, being acceptable to him, will be rewarded with all good things. It is all the consolation we need when we apprehend the sufficiency and the solicitude of the Father in these sifting and purifying processes. If at last we are deceived and ruined, God is vindicated in the fact that by a thousand providences we were put upon the inquiry after our faith, and our attention recalled to its weakness, its adulteration or its falseness, and that, being alike precious to God and ourselves, he tried it as by fire.

Notes.

The iron and steel product of this country for 1887 was the largest in its history. Pig iron was produced to the amount of 6,250,000 gross tons, which was 600,000 tons in excess of the output for 1886. Of steel rails we turned out 1,950,000 gross tons, which was 375,000 more than in 1886. Even these amounts were not enough to meet our wants, and we accordingly used 500,000 tons of imported pig iron and 160,000 tons of imported steel rails.

The pastor's most important and difficult work has only begun with the close of his protracted meeting. What will become of these converts depends largely upon the pastoral skill and fidelity he displays. A young life is capable of almost limitless development, and runs with almost equal facility along any line it is brought to. The young convert needs the sincere milk of the Word; but, above all things, needs pure, invigorating association and constant exercise. Put every convert at work. Form at once for each healthful associations. Draw out toward each the tender mother instincts of the church, and enlist an immediate cooperation in the work of soul saving.

A writer in the New York Independent observes that, as a rule, more people wonder at absence of spiritual conversation by their pastors than resent it when introduced. Certainly the Savior is not pleased when his messenger attends to every interest but that for which he is sent. To have served himself, or pleased his friend, or advanced any worthy cause in the time given to save a soul from death, will give the pastor no great joy in the great day. Nor is the pleasure of a purely social visit comparable with that of a truly pastoral one. The main interest of life is the soul. It is neither polite nor manly, neither discreet nor religious, to talk alone on side issues. The physician comes promptly to his work, with the question, "How's your body?" Shall not the pastor ask, "How's your soul?"

It has been generally understood that Prince Alexander of Bulgaria sought the hand of Victoria, daughter of Emperor Frederick and his queen, Victoria, who is the child of the reigning queen of England. To this arrangement Bismarck objected as likely to strain the relations of Germany with Russia, whose opposition to Alexander has been so recent and so strong. The cable informs us that Bismarck was so bitter in his objections as to ask leave to resign if his views were not supported by the Emperor. Later dispatches, however, report that the great diplomat has withdrawn his opposition, and we may now soon expect the nuptial ceremonies. But, what then? The intermarriage of royal families frequently result in national treaties, the modification of national policies and combination of national armies. What will Russia have to say on a coalition of England and Germany, when she considers her eastern boundary. Two such Protestant empires confederated may have yet in their grasp the evangelization of the East, and the suppression of papal schemes all along the horizon.

The splendid munificence, for which the times call and which the pulpit urges, is not a matter of great bequests nor of individuals of magnificent charity, but of the daily or weekly benevolence of the whole church. Many give nothing, while others give occasionally. The faithful pastor must by constant instruction from his pulpit and persistent efforts in the homes of the people secure the contributions of every church member. He has accomplished a great deal when he has succeeded in this, but not all that he should look for. He should see to the frequency and constancy of these gifts. The result will be found chiefly in an improved spirituality of his flock. If they are faithful to their promises, they will acquire method, order, diligence, an intelligence of current church history, economy, faith and an increased interest in the movements of the church. They will be more sympathetic and loving towards charitable enterprise and God's people, and frequent gifts will sweeten their tempers and introduce an unfailing joy into their lives. Even one cent a day from 100 members will produce annually $365. The people who spend five cents daily for tobacco or drinks surely could not object to seven cents weekly for God and humanity. The absence of one car-ride daily is five times as much as the average member gives to evangelize the world and ninety times as much as he gives to evangelize the whole world. Come, brother, and try this rule: One cent a day for your charitable enterprises this year.

Personals.

J. L. DeYampert, Esq., died at Hamburg, Ark., April 1. A noble Christian gentleman he was.

Dr. John Writes: "Dr. Allen expects to arrive at St. Louis, the fourteenth—will spend Sunday in St. Louis, visit Sedalia and other points during the week, and reach Kansas City by Sunday, the twenty-second—visit St. Jo. and Fayette during the week, and reach St. Louis by the twenty-fifth."

Sir Henry Parker, Prime Minister and Colonial Secretary of New South Wales, has sent to the Colonial Office in London a dispatch urging the government to negotiate with China for the total suppression of immigration to Australia. He says that the public feeling against Chinese immigrants is becoming stronger throughout Australia.

Dispatches to the Chicago dailies announce the resignation of Rev. M. Timms, pastor of East Mainstreet, Norwich, Conn., on the ground that he no longer believes in the polity of a church which assigns pastors to churches regardless of the wishes of either."

Queen Victoria is to receive a deputation from the Queen of Amatongas. The object of the visitation is to beseech the English Queen to save her people from destruction from the liquor imported into her land by her permission, but against the protest of the beseeching Queen.

Mr. Leander Stone, for many years assistant editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, which position failing health made it necessary for him to resign some time ago, died of paralysis at Chicago, April 1. He was a hard-working and successful journalist.

Mr. T. Craig-Brown, of Selkirk, says the prevailing idea that Sir Walter Scott was an Episcopalian is a delusion. In 1806 Scott was ordained elder in Duddingston parish church and twice he represented the burgh of Selkirk in the General Assembly.

Rev. Thomas Harrison has been conducting very successful meetings in Lane Street and Central Methodist Episcopal Churches, New York City. There have been about 1,000 persons forward at the altar as seekers of religion, and a "jubilee for a thousand souls converted" was held.

Rev. R. H. Withers, of Hot Springs, Ark., has been quite sick and had to cancel his appointments. We trust he will soon be able to be in his pulpit.

This personal from Zion's Herald, Boston, has a point: "Prof. George Prentice, of Wesleyan University, gives us a most genial call. We were much impressed by a single fact which fell from his lips—that he had led a class-meeting each week, in his seventy years as an instructor, for the spiritual compensation, in great part, which came to his own soul."

Last Sunday our new church on Lafayette avenue, in St. Louis, was opened. Rev. S. H. Werlein preached at 11 A. M. from the text, "We are laborers together with God." A full house greeted him. A Sabbath-school organization preceded the preaching; about 140 were entered as scholars and teachers. A society was organized of 55 members: 51 of these came from Centenary Church. The Chonteau Society added to the list, and about twenty-five or more new names. At 7:30 P. M. Bishop Hendrix preached and performed the dedicatory service. The sermon—from Luke xiv. 23—was vigorous and healthful, setting forth the hindrances to the gospel in our great cities and the necessity of personal and compelling forces. An intense and representative congregation were confronted with their perils and their duties. The sermon will bear fruit for God. The Lafayette Church begins its history most auspiciously. No debt on the building; a small amount yet due on the furniture, which will, doubtless, be liquidated at once. The house is a gem and reflects credit on all concerned. The presence of God in power will make it a blessing to the vicinity which it is located. Methodism of St. Louis must not settle on its lees with complacency at what it has done. The work of the church is never done. There is neither place nor time for congratulation on what has been done when so much remains to be done.

Bishop Keener is at Summit, Miss., holding the Brookhaven District Conference. There were present at the opening hour seventy members of the Conference, and twenty-five more were expected the next day.

Rev. J. B. Walker, D. D., is holding, with fair success, a protracted meeting in his church, in this city.

Captain Force and Guy Norton returned last Tuesday evening from their Southern trip, after making purchases at Crowley, La. Mr. Norton purchased a fine farm near the town, and Capt. Force secured a small tract in the city and will engage in fruit raising and fancy gardening. They expect to return in a few months to make it their permanent home.—St. Paul (Neb.) Phonograph.

Children's Day.

To the Preachers of the North Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: Remember the third Sunday in May is set apart by General Conference action to be observed as Children's Day. See to it that suitable services be held at every church in our Conference on that day, and that a collection be taken for Sunday-school purposes, according to General Conference resolutions and the instructions of the Annual Conference, last session. (See report of Sunday-school Board in Minutes.) Send to Rev. W. G. E. Cunnyngham, D. D., Nashville, Tenn., for programs.

It is suggested that on circuits, this day be observed on the Sunday (in May) of preaching at each church, so that the pastor may be present to direct and aid in the exercises. This to apply, however, only where other competent persons are not available to conduct the services. By all means let us make timely arrangements, procure and study the programs, talk the matter up and make the Children's Day, of 1888, a great delight and grand success. Let everything be done to make it an occasion of special joy and inspiration. May he who accepted the children's hosannas in the temple approve our Children's Day services and bestow his blessing!

G. W. RACHMAN,
Sunday-school Agent.

The Committee on Territories has unanimously reported adversely to the admission of Utah as a State, until the practice of plural marriages, bigamy or polygamy has been entirely abandoned by the inhabitants of the territory, and it is certain that the affairs of the territory are not controlled by the Mormon priesthood.

One year ago the property value of all the Methodist colleges and seminaries in Southern California was $1,100,000. At present their total value will not fall short of $3,350,000, making an increase in one year of $2,250,000.

The women of the Methodist Church, South, gave to missions last year $50,000; the North Carolina women's missionary societies giving $1,700, and the children's societies seven or eight hundred.

According to the reports of the various railroads, the gross earnings during the past year was $44,000,000 in excess of the preceding year, 1886. This was the case with 110 roads, including all the important lines. What the net earnings were we have not learned, seem no statement except as here stated.

On last Sabbath Dr. W. C. McCoy worshiped with the congregation at St. John's Church, Birmingham. He preached for the pastor on the subject of missions, and at the close of the sermon took up a collection amounting to $113 50—$50 in excess of the assessment. This sum, added to the $50 already raised during the week of prayer, gives to St. John's a total of $463 50 for missions. The pastor is happy and the people are not hurt.

Temperance Notes.

A TEMPERANCE SALOON.—A temperance bar-room in Boston, that is a great success in every way, is on Washington street, and advertises in big letters: "Temperance drinks." The man who started this saloon three years ago says he lost several thousand dollars the first six months of his experiments. He lets his saloon advertise itself by its refreshing drinks. Behind the counter stand six young men in white coats and caps. Each man wears a flower in his buttonhole and a pleasant look on his face of being in a business he is not ashamed of. Besides ice-cold soda in all its agreeable compounds there are lactarts, egg phosphates, acid phosphates, hot beef-tea, and other refreshing and invigorating fluids—all of the kind that cheers without inebriating. In the rear of the saloon the very best chicken and ham sandwiches, rolls, pies and delicious coffee may be had. The custom at the lunch counter is only limited by the room. The proprietor said that they had consumed 100 dozen eggs in one day during the hot season for egg phosphates. That means that 1200 people took a glass of this one fascinating drink. Only the very nicest material is used. The eggs are furnished by one collector, who is paid nearly double the market price to warrant their freshness. So particular is the proprietor that he gave up the use of grape milk, a profitable unfermented drink, because he found it to contain 1½ per cent. of alcohol. There is no fuss or philanthropy about this bar-room; no pretense that it is carried on for any other purpose than to make money. It really pays better than a liquor saloon of its size would. What the gains are to the people who accept it in place of the old tap nobody can tell.

If the reports in the secular papers are trustworthy, the Michigan liquor law is pressing very heavily upon the saloon keepers in the counties where local option has not prevailed, and is seemingly paving the way for local option generally. This law, while it does not go far enough, has some good points. One notable feature of it is the heavy bonds liquor dealers are required to give and the restriction thrown around them. The bond of a dealer must be $3,000, and his surety must not be concerned in the manufacture of liquor or on more than one bond at the same time. It is said that a large number of saloon keepers are preparing to quit the business because they find it no longer profitable under the new statute. We have no faith in license laws of any kind as permanent measures, but if the Michigan liquor law strikes a heavy blow at the liquor traffic in its greatest strongholds, and by so doing prepares the popular mind for prohibition, it will have served a useful purpose.

Mayor Hewitt, of New York, in a message to the Board of Aldermen, said: "A visit to the great charitable institutions maintained by the city, containing a population of over 14,000 persons, will convince the most skeptical observer that the chief cause of crime, sickness, and poverty, which fill these institutions with their tenants, is to be found in excessive indulgence in intoxicating liquors."

It takes 50,000 bar-keepers to supply the inhabitants of New York, and it takes all New York to supply the greedy treasuries of the bar-keepers.

The Philadelphia C. T. A. News (Catholic Total Abstinence) fearlessly says of its own people who deal in intoxicating liquors: "The license court in Philadelphia is now a sickening sight. Notwithstanding the advice of the church to liquor-dealers to get out of the dangerous business and make their living in a more becoming way, the court is full of Catholics asking for liquor licenses: Catholics who are saloon-keepers, Catholics who are bondsmen, Catholics who are lawyers, Catholics who are politicians—the very air of the court is saturated with rum and religion."

Books and Periodicals.

AMATEUR ETCHINGS OF TEXAS CHARACTER. By Gulliver, with an introduction by Gilderoy. Price, fifty cents. R. D. Woodward & Co., Greenville, Texas.

The book is full of wit and pathos, with touches of the beautiful; is a series of character-sketches drawn for a purpose, and calculated to magnify the gospel. You need not fear to read them aloud in your family, and you need not fear the children will nod while listening.

IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL VOICED BY NATURE, AND CHRISTIANITY IN ACCORD WITH SCIENCE. By Rev. B. T. P. Allen, A. M., LL.D., with an introduction by Rev. J. D. Young, Ph. D. 12mo. cloth; 160 pages. Price, seventy-five cents. Rev. J. H. Barbee, agent, Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn.

The author attempts to concentrate vague and uninterpreted suggestions of matter and law into an argument for the future state, and has made an entertaining and curious monograph.

FRUITS AND VEGETABLES. By Rev. J. W. McNeill, of Crystal Springs, Miss.

This is a pamphlet of twenty pages on the horticulture suited to lower Mississippi, Louisiana, Texas and Alabama. The best recommendation of the work is that the author, following his own theory, has made a handsome success of his art.

MISSIONARY CATECHISM By Rev. Thomas F. Saunders, of Memphis Conference. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. 24 mo. paper; 31 pages. Price, five cents.

This is a timely effort to instruct the children of the Methodist Episcopal Church in the missionary enterprise; and the author deserves great praise for the skill he has displayed. We heartily and cheerfully commend his work to all our Sunday-schools.

SPIRIT OF CHRIST. A sermon. By Rev. J. V. Penn, of Mississippi Conference. Spiritual, practical, clear; calculated to do good.

HEALTHY HOMES AND FOODS FOR THE WORKING CLASSES. Published by Republican Press Association; Concord, N. H.

SANITARY CONDITIONS AND NECESSITIES OF SCHOOL-HOUSE AND SCHOOL-LIFE. Published by Republican Press Association, Concord, N. H.

DISINFECTION AND INDIVIDUAL PROPHYLAXIS AGAINST INFECTIOUS DISEASES. Published by Republican Press Association, Concord, N. H.

THE PREVENTABLE CAUSES OF DISEASE, INJURY AND DEATH IN AMERICAN MANUFACTORIES AND WORKSHOPS, AND BEST MEANS FOR PREVENTING AND AVOIDING THEM. Published by Republican Press Association, Concord, N. H.

Four pamphlets sent out by American Public Health Association, all of which are prize essays, and full of valuable facts and suggestions on subjects of vital import and universal interest.

COSMIC EMOTION. By W. K. Clifford; also VIRCHOW ON THE TEACHING OF SCIENCE. Humboldt Library No. 98. 30 pages. Price, ten cents. J. Fitzgerald, publisher, 21 East 4th street, New York.

—From the National Prohibition Bureau we have received several Prohibition Bombs. They are contributions to the temperance literature of our times by the foremost men and women of our country, such as St. John, Finch, Dow, Bain, Demprest, Dickie, Thomas, Miss F. Willard, Mrs. Luthrop. These leaflets or tracts will make about 4½ columns of the ADVOCATE, and are sold at ten cents per hundred, or one dollar per thousand, and our people ought to scatter them like autumn leaves.

A DYING MAN'S GRIP ON A KEY.—In the course of an address to the Evangelical Alliance by the Rev. A. J. Gordon, D. D., of Boston, which is published in his Watchword, the following incident was related: "An eminent clergyman of England has described his visit to the death-bed of a wealthy parishioner. As he knelt by his side he twice requested him to give him his hand while he prayed, which he strangely declined to do. But as soon as the death gasp was over and the blankets turned down the reason was apparent. It was found that both hands were holding his safe-key in their death-grip, so that he had no hand of fellowship to extend to the minister praying for his soul. Where are the church's hands to-day, when the greatest opportunity ever brought within the reach of any generation of Christians is just within her grasp? It is possible that, with the memory of him 'who though rich, for our sakes became poor,' ever before us, we should be found impotent to take hold of this opportunity, because we could not let go of our safe-keys?"

Dr. Cuyler gives the following as the secret of his remarkable success as a pastor: "Personal contact with souls and personal effort for souls." Such pastoral labor cost him many sacrifices. He says he very soon discovered that he could not delve deeply in the mines of profound scholarship or roam in the fields of elegant literature, and be a faithful pastor, too. "So," says he, "I made my choice, and I think eternity will show that I chose the better part." Who doubts it? Time, without waiting for the disclosures of eternity, has vindicated his choice.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

Publisher.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

Rules, or Principles.

It has often been said, but can never be said too often, that the Scripture is rather a book of principles than of rules. Let us clearly understand the difference. A rule of duty sets us a definite task, a task which wears one and the same aspect under all circumstances, whose limits are prescribed, and whose nature there can be no mistaking. "Thou shalt set the 'show-bread upon the pure table before the Lord"—this is a rule; it prescribes an action, clearly defined, and never varying in its form. A principle, on the other hand, prescribes not an action, but a frame of spirit, a tone of mind, which will develop itself differently under different circumstances. "Honor thy father and thy mother," is a principle. The honor may be shown in many different ways—by outward marks of respect, by attention to their wishes, by praying for them, by giving them our services when they are in difficulty, by manfully refusing to be ashamed of them if they move in a lower sphere of life than ourselves. Sir Thomas More acted on the principle when, being lord high chancellor of England, he knelt down as he passed the door of an inferior court in Westminster Hall, and solicited, on bended knee, the blessings of his father, who sat as judge in that court. A school-boy, adapting the same high principle to his own circumstances, when, in some trifling matter, such as communicating frequently with home, or avoiding the first step toward certain habits, he carried out at the cost of his own inclinations the decidedly expressed wish of his parents.

Now, since the many rules of the Jewish dispensation, so far as they were mere rules, have passed away, it is surprising how few rules, binding upon Christians, the sacred volume contains. Almost all the preceptive part of the volume is devoted to the laying down of principles. And by way of impressing upon us more clearly this character, certain rules which we should expect to find there are purposely omitted. Thus, we might have expected a rule prescribing prayer a certain number of times every day. We find no such rule. We find only the broad principle, "Pray without ceasing." We might have expected rules forbidding slavery and forbidding suicide. We find none. But in their place we have the broad principles given us, on which such sins must be perfectly odious in the sight of God. We have the strongest assurances of God's hatred of oppression, of the duty of submission to his will, and of the importance of the span of time allotted to us here below, and from these principles of duty those rules are easily evolved. It requires, however, reflection to evolve them, an application of the mind to the principles, with the view of developing the rules. —E. M. Goulburn, D. D.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

"The doctor said he'd put me on my feet again in two weeks." "Well, didn't he do it?" "He did, indeed. I had to sell my horse and buggy to foot the bill."

We would again call the attention of subscribers and agents that, in making remittances, to make them payable to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Please keep this in remembrance.

"TO LIVE IN GOLD."

(Italian Folk Saying.)

BY LAURA SANFORD.

Oh, what it is to live in gold!
Some flowers first the secret told:
They gave the sun's gold ray away,
And golden flowers they shine to-day.

Oh, what it is to live in gold!
These birds that no sweet note withhold
Are golden birds with golden songs,
For what they give to them belongs.

As by its gifts the heart is known;
What we give most is called our own;
And good bestowed creates a grace—
The heraldry of a grand race.

Oh, what it is to live in gold!
The miser's soul for riches sold
Is ignorant of wealth like this;
He dies, and never knows the bliss.

Oh what it is to live in gold!
To live, in giving hundred-fold!
Gold words, gold deeds, the coinage pure,
Of blessedness that shall endure.

MR. EDITOR:—As it has been some time since I wrote to your dear paper, I thought I would write again. I was so proud to see my last letter in print. I go to school to Bro. Birckhead. We have had a large school all the year; but our school is not a free school. I have nine studies each day in the week, and one for Sunday-school. We go every Sunday when the weather is good. My papa is the superintendent. Bro. Scarborough is our pastor for this year. We think we will like him very much. He has visited us one time. For fear of the waste-basket, I will close by answering Chalmers L. Gilliam's question. The verse in the Bible that contains all the alphabet except "j" can be found in Ezra vii, 21. With many good wishes for the ADVOCATE, I remain,

Your little friend,

MINNIE HOLT.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl eight years old. This is Sunday evening, and it is very gloomy. I am going to school to Mrs. Maggie Dinkins. I like her very much. I have a little twin sister and brother two years old—they are Methodist; also a brother six years old, named for Bishop Marvin. I love to read the little cousins' letters. Papa takes your valuable paper. Bro. C. A. Powel is our preacher. Papa is superintendent of two Sabbath-schools. Marvin and I attend regularly, and are quite fond of going. I fear my letter is getting too long. I will close with best wishes to you and the dear old ADVOCATE.

Your little friend,

ANNIE GALLOWAY.

CANTON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to a newspaper, I thought I would write. I am a little boy twelve years old. We have Sunday-school the first and third Sundays. I will answer Chalmers L. Gilliam's question: Ezra vii, 21, has all the alphabet except "j." I will also answer Thomas H. Loflin's question: Sixty-four blocks a quarter of an inch can be placed in a hole of one inch. I will ask a few questions: Can any of the little cousins tell me where "sirs" is found in the New Testament; and where is "girl" and "boy" found in same verse? I will close for fear of the waste-basket.

Yours truly,

JOHN C. MONROE.

RAND'S BARRIE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: Will you permit me to write you a short letter in the children's column? I will answer Katie Eagan's question in regard to the number of letters in the Old Testament. There are 2,728,100. I will ask our little folks a question: How many books, chapters, verses, words and letters in the Old and New Testament? Please give the answer in an itemized form. As short letters are requested, I wish mine a safe journey to press and escape from the waste-basket. I remain,

Your friend,

WARNER H. GREEN.

FALSONIA, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy twelve years old; but I hope some day to be a big boy. I belong to the Methodist Sunday-school. I go every Sunday. Our Sunday-school meets every Sunday at half-past nine o'clock A. M. I get a reward card almost every Sunday. My teacher's name is Mrs. Satterly, and our superintendent is Mr. W. N. Jones. My papa moved from Washington, La., to West Melville on January 1. With love to the little cousins, and kind wishes to the editor, I close.

JOSEPH A. ROWE.

WEST MELVILLE, Louisiana.

The Tools of Animals.

Animals do not know enough to make their own tools as man can, and God has given them ready-made ones.

The tail of a fish is his sculling oar. He moves it first to one side and then the other, using his fins as balance to guide his motion. If the fish moves fast and wants to stop, he straightens out his fins just as the rower of a boat does his oars.

A man makes a tool for drilling wood, but the woodpecker has a drill in his own bill, and when he drills holes in the trees in search of food, you can hear the click of his tool just as you would the man's.

The drill of the woodpecker has another tool inside, a sort of insect-catcher. On the end is a bony thorn with sharp teeth, like barbs on a fish-hook. As he works and finds an insect, he opens the drill and sends out this barbed tongue, and draws it into his mouth.

Some animals have tools to dig with. The hen digs for herself and her chickens. The pig uses his snout and roots away under the mud. The elephant uses his strong tusks, and the queer underground galleries of the mole are made with the heavy claws with which he plows and digs.

The woodchuck, too, is a great digger. His hind feet are shovels to dig the hole where he lives, and the beaver uses his broad, flat tail as the mason does his trowel, spattering, and smoothing the mud with it as he builds the walls of his cabin, while his sharp, powerful teeth are his saws, with which he gnaws off large branches of trees to build his dams.

There is no limit to God's power in supplying the needs of the creatures he has made.—Exchange.

Killing the Dragon.

A little boy about four years old was much impressed by the story of "St. George and the Dragon," which his mother had been reading to him and his sister; and the next day he said to his father:

"Father, I want to be a saint."

"Very well, John," said his father; "you may be a saint if you choose, but you will find it very hard work."

"I don't mind," replied John. "I want to be a saint and fight a dragon. I am sure I could kill one!"

"So you shall, my boy."

"But when can I be one?" persisted the child.

"You can begin to-day," said his father.

"But where is the dragon?"

"I will tell you when he comes out."

So the boy ran off contentedly to play with his sister.

In the course of the day some presents came for the two children. John's was a book, and his sister Catherine's a beautiful doll. Now, John was too young to care for a book, but he dearly loved dolls; and when he found that his sister had what he considered a much nicer present than his own, he threw himself on the floor in a passion of tears.

His father, who happened to be there, said quietly:

"Now, John, the dragon is out."

The child stopped crying, and looked quickly around the room, and then up at his father's face, but said nothing.

That evening, however, when he bade his father "good-night," he whispered, "Papa, I'm very glad Catharine has the doll. I did kill the dragon!"—Michigan Churchman.

Pruning Grape-Vines.

Pruning grape-vines requires to be done for two reasons: First, to prevent the vines from over-bearing; and, secondly, to improve the fruit on the canes or parts of canes which are allowed to remain. Nearly all the valuable varieties of grapes prepare fruit buds for a great deal more fruit than they can mature with safety; and pruning removes the wood containing these superfluous buds. The strength of the vine going into one-half the number of clusters, or less, the fruit is benefited in every way, and the vine is saved from injury.

It is to be remembered that the grape bears only on the previous season's canes, new wood for fruit bearing being made by the vine every year, if it be of proper age and in good health. Understanding this, it may be best sometimes to remove part of the old wood, especially if there happens to be a good strong cane below it; that is, nearer the root. Generally the weakest canes should be cut out entirely, leaving only the strongest ones to bear; and it is best also to shorten the latter, cutting off one-third or one-half of their length. Where there are many of these, and a choice has to be made, the ones which are retained will produce each a cluster or two of the best fruit if cut back to the third or fourth bud, counting from the base of the cane. The best of the weaker canes should be cut back to the first or second bud, in order to produce bearing wood for next year, and the poorest ones may be removed entirely, as remarked above, cutting off more or less of the old wood with them as may seem necessary.

Of course, it will require some experience to do this work in the best manner; but keeping the foregoing in view one may soon learn; and even imperfect pruning will be better than no pruning at all. It is best to do the work before the sap begins to flow.

A RICE SANDWICH.—Wash half a pint of rice, and put it on in a saucepan with a quart of cold water. Keep it boiling hard for about twenty minutes, adding salt when half done, and shaking vigorously from time to time, but never stirring with a spoon. When soft, pour on a cupful of milk, and let it stand in a warm place till this is absorbed, if you have time, or it may be taken up at once. Spread half the rice evenly on a square platter, cover it with a layer of jam or preserves of any kind, and put the remainder of the rice over it. Eat with sugar and cream or a sauce.

A MIXTURE TO ERASE GREASE SPOTS.—Equal parts of strong ammonia water, ether and alcohol form a valuable cleansing compound. Pass a piece of blotting paper under the grease spot, moisten a sponge first with water, to render it "greedy," then with the mixture, and rub with it the spot. In a moment it will be dissolved, saponified and absorbed by the sponge and blotter.

The following recipe for whitewash is excellent: Add to one peck of white stone lime, while it is slacking, one pound of tallow and two quarts of strong rock salt brine. Thin to a proper consistency, and apply with a whitewash brush. The tallow repels moisture, and the salt hardens the lime. Colors may be produced by adding common pigments.

TELEGRAM PUDDING.—Boil a quart of milk in a saucepan, adding a pinch of salt and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Beat four eggs and mix to a smooth batter with four tablespoonfuls of flour and a little cold milk; add this to the boiling milk and stir rapidly till it thickens up. Eat with powdered sugar and cream or a fine maple syrup.

Edwin Forrest's Secret.

The great tragedian, Forrest, had a secret which everybody ought to learn and profit by. Said he, "I owe all my success to the fact that everything I have undertaken I have done thoroughly. I never neglect trifles." That's the point—don't neglect trifles. Don't neglect that hacking cough, those night-sweats, that feeble and capricious appetite, and the other symptoms, trifling in themselves, but awful in their significance. They herald the approach of consumption. You are in danger, but you can be saved. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will restore you to health and vigor, as it has thousands of others. For all scrofulous diseases, and consumption is one of them, it is a sovereign remedy.

Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leitha-ville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—H. Burr, Saco, Me.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know no better remedy for liver troubles and have always found them a perfect cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have used Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of their merits."—Sam'l T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

When parties desire extra copies of the ADVOCATE containing the obituaries of their friends, they must send with the order the sum of ten cents for each extra copy ordered.

FAUQUIER—MRS. MARY ANN FAUQUIER was born in Madison county, Miss., November 1, 1818, and died March 21, 1888, in this city. She was buried in Ocean Springs, Miss. When eighteen years old she was formally received into the Carondelet Street Church by her father, the Rev. Dr. Walker, then its pastor. About three years after she was married by him to Mr. R. M. Fauquier, from whom she leaves, with three children, to mourn her loss.

She was, as child and maiden, possessed of much natural vivacity, and more than ordinary aptness for intellectual and æsthetic accomplishment. Beloved by all around her, she opened as a flower in the springtime. Presently the sobering period of marriage and maternal experience opened the deep inner qualities of her spirit; and it was evident that now she had started under the guidance of mysterious, though loving Providence for the development of the richer graces of an immortal life. She could tell the passages which she passed through in the physical anguish and what to the outside world seemed not an ordinary unheroic career; how often she was called to approach the gates of death, look at them, and then slowly find her way back to life? These light afflictions, which are but "for a moment," often demand the grace of a martyr, that they may "work for us" there "weights" of glory." It was in this crucible for nearly twenty years that her faith was refined. Much more precious was it than gold, which must needs pass through the fire. "O Mary," said a friend to her, but a few days before her last trial; "what a rest heaven will be to you!" "Yes," she replied, "I am ready in any event: if I survive it, all will be well; or if I do not, it will be equally well." What a power of life is that of the Holy Spirit, which can solace the heart of one dying amid loving parents and children, so that the valley of death becomes a "green pasture," through which flow pleasant streams, where the soul is led by the Savior, whose rod and staff shall be its comfort: "no more lion" or "ravenous beast" shall be found on the holy way that leads to the celestial city. Apparently her life ended at midday; but, doubtless, in the sight of her Lord it was a finished career, and we all have in the joyful hope of seeing her again by and by. J. C. KEENER.

BLAKELY—On the first day of March, 1888, BRO. MARSHAL BLAKELY fell asleep in Jesus, being twenty-nine years old. He was born in Newton county, Miss., February 24, 1859. When he was about eighteen years old he joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and remained in the same until his death. In 1886, February 3, he was married to Miss Maggie Smiley, and, as far as we know, he was true to her the remainder of his life. About three weeks before he died he was attacked with a severe bilious remittent fever, which terminated in pneumonia, and ended his mundane existence. The writer of this was with him occasionally during his illness, and was favorably impressed with the patience with which he endured his exquisite sufferings. When it was discovered that he was expiring rapidly, he was asked whether he feared to die or not; to which he replied with great calmness, that he was not afraid to die and that he was prepared to die. He was afterwards asked if he felt very happy, and that if he realized that God is a present help in time of need, to which he replied in the affirmative. He has left a family consisting of his wife and little daughter and mother. May God comfort them with the happy thought of a possible meeting again, to part no more forever! "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be his holy name." ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

THEOBALD—MRS. HARRIET BYRON THEOBALD died at her residence, in Greenville, Miss., January 23, 1888. She was born in Greensboro, Ga., April 17, 1798. She was the daughter of Captain John McAllister, who was an officer of the British Army in the war of the American Revolution. Her father moved to Washington, Miss., near Natchez, in the year 1810, and, after residing here for some years, he moved to Walnut Hills, back of Vicksburg. Here she met, and in the month of March, 1818, married W. W. Blanton, her first husband; and with him, in the year 1828, moved to the Blantonia Plantation, now the site of the city of Greenville. At the time of their arrival here it was a dense forest and an unbroken canebrake; and here she lived, continuously, up to the time of her death. In 1838 her first husband died at Blantonia Plantation; and in June, 1841, she was married to Dr. Samuel Theobald, of Lexington, Ky., with whom she lived until his death in the year 1867. She took a great interest in the welfare and prosperity of the town (now city) of Greenville, and was always ready to aid any enterprise that would benefit either. She was a woman of firm and very decided character, speaking what she believed, and doing what she thought to be right in all instances. Her intellect, naturally strong, was unimpaired up to the time of her last illness, and her judgment upon all subjects was as strong as it was at any time of her life.

She was converted in the eighteenth year of her age, and was an upright and consistent member of the Methodist Church for more than seventy-five years, contributing liberally of her means for the support and spread of the gospel. It was through her instrumentality that the first Christian minister came as a missionary to the counties of Washington and Bolivar; and from that time up to the present she had been zealous and earnest in her efforts to promote the cause of morality, virtue and religion. Just before her death she was often heard to say: "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me."

Of a family of twelve children only one is living. But the sorrows of life are over and she is gone to dwell in that city where there is no death, and where sorrow and weeping can never come. R. M. S.

INGRAM—NICHOLAS D. INGRAM was born in Kentucky; raised near Clarkesville, Tenn.; came to Carroll parish, La., at about eighteen years of age, and died in Lake Providence, in said parish, October 14, 1887, aged seventy-six years. He was married three times.

Uncle Nick, as he was familiarly called, was one of nature's noblemen—an honest man. In early life he professed religion; but, like many others, had "forgotten that he was purged from his old sins." During his long affliction, however, he gave his heart again to God, and for months before his death "rejoiced in hope of the glory of God." The writer of this visited him frequently during his long illness, and, on one of these occasions, suggested that if he should retain consciousness after he became speechless, and Christ should still continue precious and all-sufficient, to manifest it by raising his right hand, which he did on several occasions when death seemed inevitable. The final hour came, and at short intervals his hand would be lifted, and when he could no longer raise the hand he would point heavenward with the forefinger of that hand, and, literally, died pointing toward heaven. I have never witnessed a more triumphant death, and have no doubt of his present and eternal happiness in heaven. Uncle Nick was universally respected by all who knew him. THOS. J. UPTON.

ANDERSON—MRS. ELIZABETH A. ANDERSON (nee Witherspoon) departed this life, March 17, 1888, being about sixty-five years of age. She had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for nearly thirty-five years, and her life was blameless. Much physical suffering had fallen to her lot. An invalid for nearly twenty years, she bore patiently the pangs of disease, and learned to bestow charity and sympathy through her actual experience. She was truly open-hearted and open-handed in her course towards all, being without hypocrisy, full of good works. Acquainted with the vicissitudes of life, her faith grew steadier in heavenly things with the years. She saw through the waning light of earth the clearer dawn of the new world in which life is not a hopeless struggle with overmastering disease, nor enjoyment the short removal of the day of evil. She has entered and is well. Blessed from henceforth she rests, and in that day of days may she meet with all her company that is gone before!

T. A. S. ADAMS.

FORMAN—Died at his residence, on Black river, Concordia parish, La., March 17, 1888, THEODORE H. FORMAN, after suffering intensely of pneumonia and epilepsy seven days. Bro. Forman had long been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was one of its most devoted members. He led a quiet, but upright, godly life, always setting an example worthy of imitation. He left a wife and two children to mourn his loss. To the bereaved we extend sincere sympathy in their irreparable loss. GEO. T. ASHLEY, Pastor.

The prevalence of Malaria in large sections of country where, until recently, it has never been known, is not easy of explanation. If you are a sufferer, it will be more interesting to you to know how to get well. A few doses of Shallenberger's Antidote will do the work, and do it immediately. The medicine is prompt in destroying the poison, and always safe; even for young children. Sold by Druggists.

Your Friend Committed Suicide.

You never suspected it, none of his friends dreamed of it, he did not know it himself, but it is exactly what he did, nevertheless. Do you remember his sallow complexion? Do you recollect how he used to complain of headaches and constipation? "I'm getting quite bilious," he said to you one day, "but I guess it'll pass off. I haven't done anything for it, because I don't believe in 'dosing.'" Soon after that you heard of his death. It was very sudden, and every one was greatly surprised. If he had taken Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets he would be alive and well to-day. Don't follow his example. The "Pellets" are easy to take, mild in their action, and always sure.

BESSEMER STEEL.—The Evening Post, of this city, not long since published the following statement, under the head of "Industrial Items:"

Mr. J. S. Jeans, in his "History of Steel," says that Mr. Bessemer's patents have brought him in £1,057,000 in royalties, of which the United States has paid a large part, besides what he realized from the manufacture of Bessemer steel for many years on a large scale at Sheffield, England, when he sold a large amount of this product to this country. At the end of the fourteen years fixed in the agreement under which the firm was formed, the works were sold for twenty-four times the amount of the whole subscribed capital, and during this time the firm had divided fifty-seven times the gross capital in profits, so that, by the mere commercial working of the process, apart from the patent, each of the five partners received during the fourteen years, eighty-one times his original outlay, or an average of nearly cent per cent every two months for the whole time.

This marvelous financial success rarely falls to the lot of mortals. Most men, if at all, get rich by slow degrees, and this, on the whole, is best for the general interests of human society. The occasional exceptions do not change the general rule.—Independent.

ANTIPYRIN IN SEASICKNESS.—In a note presented to the Academy of Sciences, M. Dupay calls attention to the value of antipyrin as a remedy against seasickness. He states that he prescribed to some persons who had previously suffered terribly from seasickness, three grams daily of antipyrin on the three days previous to embarking and the three days following, while some patients continued to take the medicine throughout the voyage, and he has been informed that all these persons crossed the Atlantic without suffering from seasickness. This experience was subsequently confirmed in a communication from M. Ossian-Bonnet, who states that in about sixty cases, occurring during a voyage to Buenos Ayres and back, he found antipyrin invariably effective in arresting seasickness, though the dose required was variable. In most cases 1.50 gram was sufficient, the complete effect being produced in about ten minutes. In other cases the dose had to be repeated, but it was never necessary to exceed three grammes to produce cessation of the sickness within an hour. In a few cases, where the sickness was so incessant as to prevent absorption by the stomach, the same effect was produced by the hypodermic injection of one grain of antipyrin.—Scientific American.

The action of earth-worms, as described by Darwin, is not the only animal work that is being done in overturning and breaking up the soil. Prof. N. S. Shaler mentions that the operations of various other creatures appear to be quite important. In America, some twenty or more species of mammals burrow in the forest, and overturn considerable earth, though the quantity of this is quite insignificant in comparison with that acted upon by invertebrates. In the moist forests where they abound, crayfish may bring to the surface, over moderate areas, material which may amount to a complete covering two feet deep in half a century. Over extensive districts, or, at least, throughout eastern North America, the ants are evidently by far the most effective animal agents in preparing soil for plant use; the part they play being much greater even than that of earth-worms themselves. The latter are confined chiefly to cultivated clayey fields, while the ants rapidly overturn the soil-material as well within the forests as in the open fields wherever that material is of a sandy nature.

Russian observations have shown that teeth decay in a quite regular order, the lower third molar being the first attacked, then the upper, then the lower fourth molar, and so on, the lower incisors and canine teeth being the last affected. Upper teeth, as a rule, are more durable than lower, right than left, those of dark persons than those of blondes, those of short persons than those of the tall.

SOMETIMES an extreme tired feeling comes over one, when any effort to move the limbs or body, is attended with weariness and exhaustion. At such times Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm by its genial action on the Liver and Kidneys restores health and vitality.

Physical Antipathies.

We have read somewhere of a man who, if he saw a crayfish, became perfectly limp and helpless, while the perspiration streamed from his face. The writer's brother has so strong a dislike to beet-root, that a dish of it placed near him will not only destroy all appetite, but cause him to turn pale and feel faint.

Boyle, philosopher though he was, tells us himself that he was unable to overcome his aversion to the sound of a jet of water splashing from a pipe. He records the case of a man whose antipathy to honey was so great, that a poultice of which it was an ingredient applied to his foot made him ill. He mentions that a servant of his could never hear a knife sharpened, or a sheet of brown paper torn, without bleeding at the gums. Chesne, secretary to Francis I., would bleed at the nose at the sight of apples. Jean Jacques Rousseau writes of a Parisian lady who was always seized with uncontrollable and violent laughter at the sound of any music. A friend of the writer's is affected obversely; at the sound of a barrel-organ it is only by the strongest effort of will that she refrains from sobbing and shrieking aloud. The aversion in this case is only to barrel-organs; street pianos do not disturb her peace more than to the usual extent. Another lady friend at the touch of a russet apple shudders and has all her teeth set on edge.

It may be said that the majority of the above mentioned cases, curious as they undoubtedly are, are mental or nervous antipathies; constitutional and deep-seated, perhaps, but still affecting only the nervous system.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

How to Increase Missionary Collections.

1. Reach every member of the church with a sermon on the subject.
2. Reach every member of the church with missionary literature.
3. Reach every member of the church with a personal request for a contribution for missions.
4. Read out once or twice during the year the names of all who have paid and the amount each paid.
5. Let the pastor study the fields at home, in the West and in heathendom, until he realizes the magnitude of the work now open and ready for the workers.
6. Study the commands of Christ until they burn like fire in the soul, and you feel you must "go or send."
7. Abide closeted in prayer with God until you can sincerely pray: "Thy kingdom come," or I die."
8. Give liberally yourself.

The pastor who will follow this programme will increase the collections in his charge.

Chronic Coughs and Colds,
And all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, can be cured by the use of Scott's Emulsion, as it contains the healing virtues of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites in their fullest form. Is a beautiful creamy Emulsion, palatable as milk, easily digested, and can be taken by the most delicate. Please read: "I consider Scott's Emulsion the remedy par-excellence in Tuberculous and Strumous Affections, to say nothing of ordinary colds and throat troubles." —W. R. S. CONNELL, M. D., Manchester, O.

A gentleman once went to Sir Eardley Wilmot in great anger at a real injury he had received from a person high in the political world, which he was considering how to resent. After relating the particulars to Sir Eardly, he asked him whether it would not be manly to resent it. "Yes," said Sir Eardley; "it would doubtless be manly to resent it; but it would be God-like to forgive it."

IF the Kidneys are inactive, the blood becomes poisoned, and produces disorders throughout the entire body. Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm will restore those organs to healthy action, and thus purify the blood.

The archangel who has never felt anger has reason to envy the man who subdues it.—Richter.

FOR physical ailments, especially those incident to declining years, there is no remedy that produces such satisfactory results as Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm. Its genial and invigorating effects on Liver and Kidney is remarkable.

Phillips Brooks says: "The glory and heroism of Christianity lie in the missionary life."

IF you feel the necessity of a corrective for your liver, and to infuse vigor into the secretive action of your kidneys, you will find a wonderful remedy in Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

For The Nervous The Debilitated The Aged.

Medical and scientific skill has at last solved the problem of the long needed medicine for the nervous, debilitated, and the aged, by combining the best nerve tonics, Celery and Coca, with other effective remedies, which, acting gently but efficiently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, remove disease, restore strength and renew vitality. This medicine is

Paine's Celery Compound

It fills a place heretofore unoccupied, and marks a new era in the treatment of nervous troubles. Overwork, anxiety, disease, lay the foundation of nervous prostration and weakness, and experience has shown that the usual remedies do not mend the strain and paralysis of the nervous system.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book, than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

Mansfield Female College. 1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College and Prof. D. F. Hurdle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 288 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

There were 66 small-pox patients in the New York hospitals on April 12, and new cases constantly reported.

At Milwaukee, Wis., reports have been received stating that large ice gorges at Grand Rapids, La Crosse and other points have broken and many million feet of logs have been floated off.

The New York Assembly committee on judiciary has begun an investigation into the published charges that members of the Assembly had been corruptly influenced by lobbyists.

All union malsters and brewers in Chicago went on a strike on the thirteenth instant.

Senator Walthall's bill to withdraw the public lands of the United States in Mississippi from sale at ordinary private entry, and to restrict disposals thereof under general statutes to homestead settlers, was referred to the Senate committee, who were so much pleased with it that they reported a general bill embodying the same provisions and applied it to all the States in the Union.

The Big Sioux river has overflowed its banks and done considerable damage in the vicinity of Sioux Falls, Dak.

A special correspondent of the San Diego Sun, who was sent to the new gold fields in Lower California, telegraphed to-day from Real del Castillo that there are great mineral indications in the region, and that a score of clearly defined quartz ledges bearing free gold have already been discovered.

The Memorial Home for Young Women, in this city, an institution for reclaiming young women, was dedicated on Sunday, the fifteenth.

The levee at Grand Lake, Ark., gave way on April 16, the water running through a 200-foot gap. A great deal of live stock has been drowned.

The prohibition party in Georgia have opened the campaign. Rev. Sam W. Small arrived April 16, and made the formal opening. Rev. Sam Jones is to arrive on the seventeenth to assist.

Ex-Senator Roscoe Conkling, of New York, who had been ill for some time, died April 17.

FOREIGN.

The Berlin Post says that all fear of Prince Bismarck's resigning has disappeared, and that the idea of the betrothal of Princess Victoria to Prince Alexander of Battenberg has been abandoned.

The National Zeitung says that this statement goes too far; that the Emperor, in compliance with Prince Bismarck's wishes, has postponed the visit of Prince Alexander, but that the Empress still desires to hasten the affair.

Prof. John Tyndall says that Mr. Gladstone, with his capacity for verbiage, fails to conceal his lack of wisdom. The liberals know it, yet follow him in a course of deadly peril to the nation—a course resolved upon without reflection, or counsel or control from the liberal party.

The Belgian government's extraordinary expenditure for 1888 is estimated at $1,000,000. This is mainly for new forts, military roads and artillery. The amount will be covered by a loan.

The Moscow Gazette says: Prince Bismarck exaggerates the importance of the Battenburg incident, and in so doing he commits an error, as Russia's whole attention is being directed westward, not eastward.

All of the guests at a leading hotel at Tours departed to-day on the proprietor refusing to expel M. Wilson, ex-President Grevy's son-in-law, who had gone to Tours as a member of the council general.

A bill is being prepared for introduction in the lower house of the Prussian diet authorizing the issue of a loan of 34,000,000 marks for the purpose of assisting sufferers by the floods and repairing dykes, river banks and railways.

Advices from Massowah say that King John of Abyssinia will hold a council soon to consider the subject of a fresh allotment of the governments of the provinces.

Queen Victoria has invited the King and Queen of Italy to visit Windsor Castle in June, and they have accepted the invitation, provided the situation of affairs at the time will permit.

The branch office at Queenstown of the American Exchange in Europe has failed to honor a number of drafts, including one United States government draft which was presented by the consul.

Mr. William O'Brien, M. P., was arrested on arriving at Kingston, April 14, in consequence of his speech at the meeting at Loughrea, April 8. He was taken to the Loughrea jail.

In the election for the department of Nord Gen. Boulanger received 173,372 votes—an estimated majority of over 96,000.

It is stated that Emperor Frederick wanted to extend amnesty to all socialists and to recall those who had been banished, but that Prince Bismarck dissuaded him from doing so.

A band of Bulgarian refugees, which left Salonica for Dede, provided with Russian passports, intending to foment a revolution in Bulgaria, has been arrested by the Turkish authorities.

A dispatch from Calcutta says that the damage caused at Dacla by the recent tornado amounts to 100,000 rupees, that 112 bodies have been recovered from the ruins, and that over 10,000 persons, more or less injured, are in the hospitals.

Mr. Matthew Arnold, the noted poet, scholar, critic and theologian, whose recent article on "Civilization in the United States" attracted marked attention, died suddenly April 16, in Liverpool, of heart disease.

Emperor Frederick was attacked on the sixteenth instant with inflammation of the lungs. Dr. Mackenzie expresses fear of fatal results.

East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia.

This old favorite (so well known as Kennesaw Route) is making the fastest time made in the South. Only forty hours from New Orleans to Washington City, and forty-seven hours to New York. One day saved over other lines.

J. C. ANDREWS,
Gen'l South'n Agent, 22 Carondelet st., N. O.

It is to be feared there is a good deal of vagueness of sentiment on this subject. We believe in Jesus Christ. We are sure without faith in his work we can do no work. But is it not just as true that we can do none without faith in the power of the Holy Ghost? There were some in the days of the apostles who said they had not so much as heard whether there was any Holy Ghost. And the meaning of that was not that they were ignorant that there was such a being, but they were ignorant of his special relation to the church. They did not know his power; might we not with truth say it in this day? We do not know the power of the Holy Ghost. We do not know it because we do not believe in it, and wait for it. What the church needs is a revival of faith in the Holy Spirit. With that will come the old power which men will not be able to resist. Then thousands shall again be born in a day. Why should we not seek it?—Interior.

Arrangements are being made to introduce street-cars into Damascus, the ancient city founded by Abraham, 1,900 years before the Christian era.

A TRANSLATION.

s come as the bird from the swaying limb,
back from its grassy nest,
th blended song of the seraphim,
the welcomings of the blest.

s come as the sunset beams e'er fade,
the shadows of dewy eves,
ur hearts are sad, but, "He not afraid."
the message the Master leaves.

s come as the rainbow's gorgeous dyes,
the drops of the falling rain;
s come, but the tears of our weeping eyes
ched by, "To die is gain."

s come as the tender organ's tone, through groined roof above,
wondering look whence they act flown;
they never come back, dear love?

s come as the stars at the opening day,
bright of a bright eclipse;
s still shine, but the yet distant day s come to thy silent lips.

s come as the sighing of sobbing waves the roll of the rolling sea, ands that lie to unseen caves;
you never come back to me?

s come, and we follow the beckoning sweep the trembling hand upraised;
s gone, and we miss thee and can but weep,
we say, May the Lord me paised!

—Methodist Recorder.

Letter from Nashville.

BY W. M. LEFTWICH, D. D.

My heart was made very sad the death of my old friend, ge Foster. How soon he owed his wife! "Lovely and asant in their lives, and in th they were not divided," ept only by four days. What appy ordering of Providence! w near the parting and the eting! A loving circle will e the good woman and long influenced by the ministry of pure and noble life. But church, far and wide, will e the grand man whose heart hand were in every good k. The Seashore Camp eting, his last and noblest k, will be a fitting monument the murmuring sea, to keep en his memory and put the piration of his consecrated and exalted character into coming thousands who will ship where his hands have ught. How he loved chil- and labored for them; and sands of them have already eted him within "the beauti- gates." We shall not soon k upon his like again.

"LANDS OF THE ORIENT."

f you want to be charmed, ructed and edified by the st book of travels on the ori- al countries and peoples that ever come from the South- Methodist press, send $1 50 the Publishing House, at hville, and get "Lands of the ent," by Rev. M. B. Chap- n. He made the tour of the ld last year, and wrote letters corresponding editor of the Louis Christian Advocate. se letters, after careful re- on, and with much valuable ter added, have been pub- ed in good style by the Pub- ing House, in a book of 500 es, good paper, good type, handsomely bound. The hor is scholarly, painstaking, losophical and versatile. His e is chaste, sprightly and tic, affording marvelous de- scriptive powers by which the reader is furnished with the writer's eyes, and the scenery of the Orient passes vividly before the mind as the fascinating pages are read. But the chief value of the book is in the prodigious amount of valuable information gathered and grouped in small compass; information for the geographer, the mineralogist, the geologist, the ethnologist, the historian, the scientist, the archeologist, the political economist, the statesman, the diplomat, the architect, the artist, the man of letters, and the Christian—above all, the church and missions in foreign lands. How he could find time to gather so much reliable information and write so much, while hurrying through those oriental lands, passes understanding. This book contains the fullest, the freshest and the most thrilling statistics and statement of the work of foreign missions in all the countries visited, and of all the churches there at work, anywhere to be found. It has charmed away the tedium of many weary railroad rides, and quickened, more than ever, the desire for foreign travel.

"SUMMERS' SYSTEMATIC THEOLOGY."

Notice of this great work has been so frequently made through the church press of late that it would seem presumption to say more, at least, until the second volume is out. But the pleasure and profit afforded by the careful reading of the first volume must be my apology for this notice. Dr. Summers was a great man, and, as is the case with the greatest of men, he was not appreciated at his full value while he lived. Fortunately for the church, he left in MSS. the product of his long and scholarly study of Arminian theology by the Wesleyan standards matured in the form of lectures on "Systematic Theology" during the seven years that he occupied that chair in Vanderbilt University. It was also fortunate for the church that these lectures were placed in the hands of Prof. J. J. Tigert, of Vanderbilt University, who was a student and an enthusiastic admirer of Dr. Summers. The admirable arrangement of the book upon the best plan for study, with annotations, foot notes, etc., marks the Professor as the master of this most difficult work. Many students of Wesleyan Arminian theology have long felt the need of a work that would translate the doctrinal statements of Wesley, Watson, Fletcher and Clarke into the more modern forms of speech, and make the "Twenty-five Articles" the basis and order of discussion. This is just what Dr. Summers has done, making this work the very best for the Methodist student, and especially the Southern Methodist student. The lectures are full of the individuality of the learned Doctor, and they are not altogether free from his brusque dogmatism. His keen, and sometimes humorous, thrusts at the different phases of modern skepticism, as they were called up now and then in his argument, can be fully enjoyed only by those who knew the most intimately his peculiarities. This work, the consummation of all his life-long study, is a fitting memorial of one of the ablest and most laborious of the great men produced by American Methodism. Should the second volume equal the first, the work will easily take its place in the "course of study" for undergraduates in the ministry, and become the standard authority on all questions of Arminian theology. This is not the place for a review article, and it will be sufficient to add that "Summers' Systematic Theology" is fresher and better for the Methodist student and preacher than either Watson, Pope, or any other standard work on the system of Arminian divinity. The Publishing House has done its finest work in the mechanical and artistic make-up of this great work.

THE MAY MEETINGS.

Nashville Methodists are making preparations for the May meetings of the College of Bishops, Board of Missions, Book Committee, Woman's Board, Educational Convention, etc. Speaking of these May meetings reminds me that the Missionary Treasurer reports that the increase in missionary collections for the fiscal year just closed, over last year, will reach the handsome sum of $74,000, in round numbers, making the total collections for the year $234,363 95. This is the largest sum ever raised by the church in one year for missions. Let us make it $500,000 next year.

The Prayer Meeting.

BY REV. B. CARRADINE.

Let there be four or five brief, earnest, unctuous prayers. If you ask me one of the main causes for the slim attendance on many prayer meetings, I would say, too many long-winded, spiritless prayers. Understand me not as saying that real prayer, no matter how long, will thin out a meeting, but the shadow and semblance and form of prayer, from which the grace and spirit have fled. Nothing is more wearing to nerve and patience than mere volubility. It is never a rush of words that enchains, but invariably the thought in words. And it is possible to have the one and not the other. Volubility is neither wit nor wisdom, necessarily, nor eloquence or thought. And, being stripped of these attributes, it simply becomes intolerable. A friend of mine, once complaining of a person who pitched his voice in a certain key, and then quietly flowed on with a shallow, but never-ending stream of words, nothing but words, said that he felt that his flesh was peeling from his bones, and coming off of him even as a man takes off his shirt.

At the close of a certain District Conference, in the heated spell, the last sermon was to be preached by a brother who flung his voice into his nose, and, mounting one note, held to it steadily, while there trickled from his olfactories a string of words strung on a spider thread of thought. The whole performance was at first nerve-exasperating, and then acted as a narcotic. The audience thought of Gray's elegy—

"Save where the beetle wheels his droning flight,
And drowsy tinklings lull the distant fold."

At the end of thirty minutes the preacher paused and thanked the audience for their patient attention. The secret of the silence was, that two-thirds were asleep; and then he entered on the other half-hour, or home stretch, of the discourse. As regards the long-winded sermon, the people have the advantage of hymn books, fans, and varying positions in the pews, by which they can endure; but what can you do on your knees, with your head in the bottom of the bench under a long-winded prayer? The brother, maybe, is a quarter-racer; prays fifteen minutes always. Hot flushes pass over the listener's body; the knee feels like it is coming not only through the flesh, but through the pants; heads of perspiration stand thick; you don't feel fraternal to the brother. By and by, after thirteen minutes, not of prayer, but of commenting, general observation, and a great deal of information given the Savior, the praying brother has the assurance to ejaculate, "We know, Lord, that we are not heard for our much speaking!"

Words fail us right here, although they never fail the brother himself, who proceeds to take another flight just when we thought he was about to say, Amen!

These prayers deserve to be studied with the most profound interest and attention—a fearful attention, a ghastly interest; for they have done dreadful execution. How would you look upon the old-time rack, wheel and screw, by which the people were slain in the days of the Inquisition. With a like fearful interest look upon the long-winded prayer. The wheel slew its thousands, but this prayer its ten thousands! The wheel emptied here and there a home, but the long-winded supplication, without thought in it or unction in it, has emptied the prayer meeting of thousands who could not stand nor sit nor kneel before it. They fled before a supplicating Juggernaut. When the famous Massillon occupied a certain pulpit, people left offices, stores and shops to hear him. Business and pleasure were utterly forgotten. By and by a young preacher followed him. The change that took place under his ministry the young minister dryly described in these words: "The people seemed to be beside themselves to hear Massillon; they neglected their own interests to listen to him, leaving shop and store; but I set them right," he said, "for I had not preached more than once or twice before everybody went back to their shops and stores and offices, and returned to hear me no more." This is the same effect wrought out by the long-winded, thin-jointed, shallow-headed, soul-departed prayer. Through its power the people are made to stay quietly at home.

A certain minister called on a brother to pray at a special meeting of the church. The brother replied: "I had expected to give a talk, but as you say pray, I will now proceed to throw my remarks into the form of a prayer." Then followed a dissertation on his knees for a quarter of an hour, in which the Head of the church received much valuable information of which the brother thought him ignorant.

Sometimes these prayers start with Adam, take a trip by sea in the ark, move in a friendly, social way with the patriarchs, camp a few nights with the Israelites in the desert, follow them into the Babylonish captivity, take up the early history of the Christian Church, review the Reformation under Luther, and the great revival under Wesley, and so, by slow and easy stages, or by slow and easy sailing, come up with the ponderous movement of the "Great Eastern" into the port of 1888.

The prayer is disposed to be comprehensive as well. The brother prays for things celestial, things terrestrial, and things infernal, things lost and things found, things sick and things well. Nothing is omitted, and yet—strange to say—Zion languishes under that prayer. Nor must we forget the stereotyped feature of the prayer. It is the same thing over and over, and in the same language. The people know as well as the prayer himself what is coming. They employ themselves often in running ahead, taking their stand, and then watching his approach to the petition for the restoration of the Jews, and other set forms that have been worn smooth with much handling, or that have become moss-covered and hoary with age.

A certain local preacher of a neighboring State had been praying the same prayer since the stars fell. He prayed it at funerals and at weddings, at home and abroad, at church and at prayer meeting, until finally, if the family knew anything, it was that prayer. At last one of his sons was converted. The father signalized the event by calling in his son to lead devotions at the family altar. This the boy did, and when he knelt what prayer so appropriate, so familiar as the prayer upon which he had been fed, watered, clothed and, so to speak, received his theological education. He dropped into it as we have seen a wagon wheel go into an eight-inch rut; but as he approached the restoration of the Jews, he faltered, forgetful of some word or figure. Immediately the father, with the same feeling that animates the soldier when he sees the flag of the regiment about to fall during battle; the father rushed forward, so to speak, to the help of his son and to the rescue of that prayer under whose floating folds he had struggled so long, snatched it from the faltering grasp or accents of his boy, grasped it just at the restoration of the Jews, bore it aloft as he knew so well how to do, and finished it triumphantly just as he had done ten thousand times before.

I need not say to you that the prayer meeting will never be crowded with thinking, reading, intelligent people so long as this state of things prevails. The demand, if I am not profoundly mistaken, is for brief, fresh, thoughtful, spiritual prayers. If we can obtain them, we have another certain element of success.

We obtain two hints from two very different kingdoms as to what may be acceptable to God in this regard. In the temple we read that God had fresh loaves laid upon the table of shew-bread every day. In nature I am struck with the fact of variety. Every flower is a thought of God. I gather from this alone that formal repetitions are not desired by him in worship; indeed, he said as much. Let, then, my prayerful approach be marked with the freshness, the variety, the thought and the life that I behold in all his creations and kingdoms. Certainly the new blessings, morning and evening, ought to lift me out of ruts of speech and commonplaces of expression, and in the new experiences they awaken bring me new thoughts of God and his love, and furnish me with changing forms of language wherewith to clothe them. Let not an inanimate sunset, that presents us each evening a new creation or arrangement, shame us who are made in the intelligent and spiritual likeness of God.

It is true that God has blessed the dull and prosy sermon, and the dull and prosy prayer; but he blessed them not because of their dullness and prosiness, but in spite of these features. When a child clings to the same toy and book for years, a mental stop is unmistakably declared; and when a man adopts one prayer made up of repetitions and set phrases and barren commonplaces, you can conclude beyond peradventure that a spiritual halt has taken place in that life. The dead tree never renews its leaves or changes its bark.

Character of Sunday-School Teachers, and How to Obtain Them.

BY "DESLEP."

As early as the first century Christians realized the importance of competent and well-qualified teachers and instructors in the Word of God. There were "establishments in which the youth, destined to the holy ministry, received an education suitable to the solemn office they were to undertake." There were "academies of the ancient Christians erected, in which persons of riper years, especially such as aspired to be public teachers, were instructed in the different branches, both of human learning and of sacred erudition." Here we have the idea of the early Christian Church as to the character and qualification of a teacher of the Word of God. This idea is sustained by the practice and custom of secular schools in the present day. It is expected of all schools, secular and religious, that they have religious teachers, and well qualified.

The Sunday-school teacher should be sound in faith, in creed, and be fully in sympathy with the doctrines of his church. To be a teacher in a Methodist Sunday-school the teacher should be a Methodist, and teach doctrines according to Methodism. No person of another denomination, as a rule, should be allowed to teach in a Methodist Sunday-school, unless he will agree not to teach doctrines contrary to our faith. I want my children taught in a Methodist Sunday-school by a religious Methodist teacher, well qualified. "It is the religion of the Bible which characterizes the instructions of the Sabbath-school;" therefore, "if teachers have no religious experience, they ought to seek one or quit teaching." "The heathen sending for missionaries once asked for a man with a hot heart. That kind of person is in demand in Christian Sunday-schools as well as in heathen countries."

But how are we to obtain our Sunday-school teachers? I am not aware of the general custom, but the customs which I have seen I am satisfied are not the best. I speak of classes electing their own teachers. Furthermore, I do not think it safe for teachers to be selected by the whole school. It occurs to me that they might be selected by a competent committee; but this, under the present state of things, does not seem to be the best way. It seems that, with the existing methods, superintendents might best select teachers for the various classes. He has been elected by the Quarterly Conference as the principal of his school, and it seems in position to know best who to take charge of his classes.

It would be a good idea, it occurs to me, if teachers could pass through some kind of training or preparatory school before entering upon the duties of teaching. As it now is, the Sunday-school contains within itself the means of its own perpetuity. The scholars in turn become teachers, and thus supply and perpetuate the divine institution.

BUENA VISTA, Mississippi.

Memorial.

At a late session of the Sunday-school of Rayne Memorial Church the following resolutions, reported from a committee appointed to draft them, were unanimously passed by a rising vote:

Whereas, In the providence that doeth all things well, though it afflict, our late superintendent, John G. Parham, Esq., has been removed from the sphere of toil to that of reward; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this Sunday-school and religious community testify their grief at the loss which the whole church has sustained in the death of this upright man and Christian scholar, who filled well and ably every trust, both religious and civic, which fell to his lot by the suffrages of his fellow-men.

Resolved, That as superintendent of this Sunday-school for many years, he was universally beloved for his many good qualities of head and heart, and useful to a remarkable degree in winning the souls of the young, who were intrusted to his care, to his Master's service.

Resolved, That while we acquiesce in this mandate of the King of kings, we profess our determination to give fresh heed to his loving exhortations and godly example now solemnly repeated to us from the grave, and that we offer our united and heartfelt sympathy to the stricken relatives.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

ETERNAL PUNISHMENT.—The torments of the lost must not be regarded as merely an arbitrary infliction of punishment from the hand of God, but as the natural and necessary result of depraved character. We must not suppose that there is nought to prevent the sinner entering heaven but the merciless determination of an angry God not to admit him. The misery of the condemned sinner will mainly spring from within himself. There will be the unquenchable fire of self-reproach, the never-dying worm of an accusing conscience, the scorpion-stings of remorse, the bottomless pit of despair, and this intensified by the sight of those who are "unholy still, filthy still." This—this is enough to make the lot one of "weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth."—Dr. J. Hitchens.

THE GLORY OF LIFE, OR THE LIFE OF GLORY.

BY MISS LOUISA M. ALCOTT.

I live for those who love me,
For those I know are true,
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit, too;
For the human ties that bind me,
For the task by God assigned me,
For the bright hopes left behind me,
And the good that I can do.

I live to learn their story,
Who've suffered for my sake,
To emulate their glory,
And follow in their wake—
Bards, martyrs, patriots, sages,
The noblest of all ages,
Whose deeds crown history's pages,
And time's great volume make.

I live to hail the season,
By gifted minds foretold,
When men shall rule by reason,
And not alone by gold—
When man to man united,
And every wrong thing righted,
The whole world shall be lighted,
As was Eden of old.

I live to hold communion
With all that is divine,
To feel there is a union
'Twixt nature's heart and mine—
To profit by all I've learned,
Reap truth from fields of error,
Grow wise from each conviction,
And fulfill each grand design.

I live for those who love me,
For those who know me true,
For the heaven that smiles above me,
And awaits my spirit, too;
For the wrong that needs resistance,
For the cause that lacks assistance,
For the future in the distance,
And the good that I can do.

Sunday-School Lesson.—May 6.

THE JUDGMENT.

Matthew xxv. 31-46.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal.—Matt. xxv. 46.

TIME.—A. D. 30, April 4, Tuesday afternoon. PLACE.—The Mount of Olives.

INTRODUCTION.

This passage clearly teaches the following great truths: 1. That there will be a final judgment: 2. That it will come with the final appearing of the Lord at the end of the world; 3. That it will consist not of a trial, but of a public announcement of the divine judgment founded upon the trial which life affords: 4. That it will be public: 5. That it will result in a public separation of all men into two distinct classes: 6. That this separation will be based not upon our creeds, our forms, our ceremonies, but upon practical charity to our fellow-men: 7. That this is not inconsistent with the doctrine that they will be saved by faith and not by works (works are the fruit of faith): 8. That the decisions will be final, unappealable, irreversible.

31. When the Son of man shall come in his glory—His second coming. An interval is hinted at, but not asserted. The Father "gave him authority to execute judgment, because he is the Son of man" (John v. 27), and identified by personal experience and sympathy with all the interests of humanity, so that it is his alone to redeem, to save, or to judge. All the holy angels with him—They shall come with him both for state and service. They must come to call the court (1 Thessalonians iv. 16), to gather the elect (chapter 24. 31), to bundle the tares (chapter 13. 41), to be witnesses of the saints' glory (Luke xii. 8) and of sinners' misery. (Revelation xiv. 10.) Sit upon the throne of his glory—The sitting expresses "finished victory." The "throne of his glory" is that which he shares with "the ancient of Days," the throne of Jehovah, surrounded with the brightness of the Shechinah. It is represented in Revelation xx as "a great white throne," pre-eminently "great" and perfectly "white," or immaculate and pure, and, hence, pre-eminently "glorious." From it will issue, and that is the main thing, the perfection of judgment.

32. Before him shall be gathered—Whether voluntarily or involuntarily is not stated, but all submit. (Philippians ii. 10. All nations—"All angels"—"all nations." How great publicity! Shall separate—Now for the first time: the two classes having been mingled all along up to this awful moment. As a shepherd divideth . . . sheep from . . . goats—The sheep and goats are always seen together under the same shepherd and in company; yet they never trespass on the domain of each other. . . When folded together at night they may always be seen gathered in distinct groups; and so round the wells they appear instinctively to classify themselves apart as they wait for the troughs to be filled. Elsewhere the shepherd's work is the symbol of protective, self-sacrificing love, and, as such, our Lord had emphatically claimed for himself the title of the Good Shepherd.

33. Shall set the sheep on his right hand—As for sheep, they are appropriately representative of the holy. There is something in their gentleness, inoffensiveness, peacefulness and tractability that readily vindicates the symbolism. Some refer "the sheep" to the unconscious Christians among the heathen, hinted at in Romans ii. 7, 10, including the "other sheep," "not of this fold." (John x. 16.) But how unlikely that in this great picture believers should be excluded when the term "sheep" is appropriated to them so often. Goats on the left—Sheep are profitable by their wool, their milk, their offspring. Not so goats; they represent unfruitfulness of life. Nast combines uncleanness and stubbornness as the two points of comparison of the bad with the goats. The goat is especially a repulsive animal, and so a fit image for wicked men; and in Hebrew there is a single word which seems to designate the goat and a demon.

34. Then shall the king say . . . right hand—Christ himself. From this point there is no figure. It is the only time that our Lord thus calls himself, though he acknowledges the title before Pilate. Come—The same sweet word with which he had so long invited all the weary and heavy laden to come unto him for rest. Now it is addressed exclusively to such as have come and found rest. It is still "come," and to "rest," too: but to rest in a higher style and in another region. Ye blessed of my Father—Realizing at once his own peculiar relationship to the Father, and the supremacy of the Father in the mediatorial economy. Not ye that are to be blessed, but ye that have been blessed: the perfect participle is used. They are blessed because all the fruits of true love which men apparently produce are really fruits of the Spirit. Inherit the kingdom—That is, receive it as your lot. The blessings of the kingdom are ready for you in virtue of your relation to me. Ye are joint heirs with me. I am my Father's heir. By God's eternal purpose an immovable kingdom of glory has been prepared, and predestinated for all who should, by faith in Christ and obedience to him, become its heirs. The plan of redemption in Christ has been adopted with full view to this, and all who accept its terms will inherit its results.

35. For—These verses give the reason why those on the right hand are accepted. They are a New Testament exposition of Proverbs xix. 17: "He that hath pity on the poor lendeth to the Lord." Compare 1 Timothy vi. 17-19; 1 John iii. 16-18; chapter 1. And observe that every element in this description is illustrated by Scripture. I was a hungered and ye gave me meat—(See 1 Kings xvii. 10-15; Ruth ii. 11-17.) The passage furnishes six out of the list of the seven corporal works of mercy in Christian ethics, the seventh being found in the care and nurture of the fatherless. Thirsty, and ye gave me drink—(Matthew x. 40-42.) A stranger, and ye took me in—A foreigner or traveler. In the East such an one was dependent upon private hospitality, and this had the reward of paradise.

36. Naked, and ye clothed me—The word naked is to be understood as embracing in its range of popular application every ill-clad condition. Sick, and ye visited me—For illustration, see Luke vii. 2, 3; x. 30-37. The Greek word for visited is somewhat stronger than the modern meaning of the English, and includes "looking after," "caring for." The verb is formed from the same root as Episcopos, the bishop or overseer of the church. In prison, and ye came unto me—There is a climax in this enumeration. The first three are recognized duties, the last three are voluntary acts of self-forgetting love. Oriental custom required, at least, a bare hospitality. But to clothe the naked implies a liberal and loving spirit, to visit the sick is an act of spontaneous self-sacrifice, to go to the wretched outcasts in prison was, perhaps, an unheard-of act of charity in those days; it was to enter places horrible and foul beyond description.

37-39. Lord, when saw we thee, etc.—The language of modesty. The language of unconscious humility. These blessed of the Father, brethren of the Son, and heirs of the kingdom, stand amazed that the Son of man should so overwhelm their trifling services with a glorious reward. Nay, they can hardly recollect any service at all. It amazes them to find every transient item legible in the book of the Judge. Did our Lord, then, teach or imply a doctrine of salvation by works, or of merit? The very statement contradicts that supposition: for they who do such works have no thought of merit in them. They are astonished and overwhelmed at the enumeration. "Lord, when saw we thee?"

40. Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren—Primarily, his disciples (Matt. xii. 50; Heb. ii. 11); but, secondarily, any one of the great family of man. Of all it is true that he, the Lord, who took their flesh and blood, "is not ashamed to call them brethren." (Heb. ii. 11.) Ye have done it unto me—Christ lives again and perpetually in the persons of his people. As we treat them, we treat him. Christ identifies himself with his church, as in his words to Saul, "Why persecutest thou me?" Underneath all these deeds he found a principle of faith that terminated on himself. Their love followed their faith, and, in all its outgoings, vibrated toward himself.

41. Depart from me—As the reward of the saints is to be forever with the Lord (1 Thess. iv. 17), so the punishment of the wicked is everlasting exile from his presence. (II Thess. i. 9.) The language is that of intense moral aversion: and it implies the hopelessness of the doom. Ye cursed—He says not now: Ye cursed of my Father, because of all blessing the Father is the author, but each man is the origin of his own curse when he does the things that deserve the curse. Into everlasting fire—The word fire is used, of course, not literally, but metaphorically, to represent the dreadful penalty, whatever that may be, of persisting in sinfulness. The word everlasting has in it no wicket gate that we can see: certainly no wicket gate ajar, through which light from heaven is streaming in. Prepared for the devil and his angels—As if God had provided no hell for men! He had secured a Redeemer mighty enough, and a heaven capacious enough for all, and had made no other arrangements. There is no hint of any remedial scheme initiated for the recovery of the devil and his angels.

42, 43. I was a hungered, and ye gave me no meat, etc.—They were culpably destitute of faith in Christ, and hence of that love which is the fruit of faith. No wonder that they did not discover Christ in his little ones around them, and love them. The implicit and essential Christ, revealed to them and to all in the spirit of the letter, if not in the letter of the Spirit, was rejected by them or neglected. Even in the presence of the historical Christ they could so shut their eyes as to take no note of him in the conduct and character of his representees.

44, 45. When saw we thee an hungered, etc.—If we had ever really met with thee, O thou Lord of glory, in want of anything, we would assuredly have given thee freely of all that we possessed. "If we ever denied thee, we did not know that it was thou whom we denied. Did not minister unto thee—There is, as before, an unconsciousness of the greatness of the things that had been done for good or evil. It is significant that the sins here are, all of them, sins of omission. What wicked man now believes he is deserving everlasting fire? What great hurt has he done? How cruel it is, and impossible to believe, that the everlasting company of the devil and his angels is a fit destiny for him! Christ shows in the answer what is his view of the solemn matter. Ye did it not to me—He here imputes an infinite demerit to their character and conduct. Where, then, will oppressors appear that grind the faces of the poor; that quaff their tears and make music of their shrieks?

46. These shall go away into everlasting punishment—In the New Testament "eternal" is used fifty-nine times of the happiness of the righteous, of God's existence, or of the church and the Messiah's kingdom: in seven, of the future punishment of the wicked. If the former end, then the latter may. The word "punishment" expresses positive misery, not annihilation. Since the word used is the most expressive of perpetuity that the Greek affords, and since the term is used as a measurement of divine duration, we may well infer that the foundations both of the divine rewards and the divine penalties are as perpetual as the foundation of the divine government. In all Scripture usage I think, without exception, the word indicates a period of time as long as the existence of the object spoken of. The righteous into life eternal—This signifies not merely existence, which might or might not be a boon, but the highest and noblest activity of the soul, in all its God-given powers, and this eternal, that is, with no fear of decadence, infirmity, or lapse into sin. Endless and boundless life is contrasted with endless and boundless misery.

PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. The coming of Jesus as the Judge of all men will be attended with befitting pomp and ineffable glory. The angelic host will constitute his retinue.

2. "Every eye shall see him," for all nations shall be summoned to that tribunal. No single individual of all the sons of Adam will be able to evade that summons.

3. Earthly distinctions and dividing lines will fade away on that day, and only one line of division will become apparent—that which divides the righteous and the wicked.

4. The righteous will be publicly welcomed to the heavenly inheritance.

5. The merit of the righteous will be exhibited on the side of spontaneous acts of brotherly love.

6. The wicked will be publicly dismissed, in language of awful reprobation, as accursed.

7. Differences in degree of punishment are hinted at, but no difference in its duration.

HINTS TO TEACHERS.

No better preparation to teach this lesson can be made than to study it in the light of the great event itself. The teacher who sits down deliberately and faces the judgment—its absolute certainty, its universality, its awful surprises, the irrevocableness of its decisions—ponders all this till the imagination grasps its dreadful reality, will need no further hint as to how or what to teach.

The Suffering in the Atonement.

This subject has been under discussion lately by several of your correspondents whose views do not seem to harmonize. Suppose you let me try my hand at it; but I can ask the printer for space for only a brief outline sketch.

The first question is, Why the necessity for suffering and death at all? Was it of any benefit to anybody, and, if so, to whom and what? When God set himself on the enterprise of human salvation, he addressed measures to men as he found him, without in the least interfering with his constitution, condition or circumstances. The first question then was, so to speak, What is the matter with man? The answer to this question is, Disobedience. Nothing else. How is that to be cured? Obedience means affectionate obedience, not mere acts. The relation of the parties must be considered. God is absolutely infinite in all things, and man, a poor mendicant. God could fully relieve man of all danger and infirmity at a word, without suffering or death; but that alone would not even tend to make him affectionately obedient. To make man lovingly obedient—which is the great object and aim of what we call salvation—there must not only be benefaction, but benefaction bestowed so as to impress us powerfully with the knowledge that the Benefactor is largely benevolent. And—now listen—there is but one thing beneath the heavens that can cause us to believe that any being—God, angels or man—is benevolent. What is that one thing? Voluntary suffering and self-denial in relieving distress. For a rich man to throw a loaf to a starving man is a benefaction, but it is no evidence of benevolence. There was no sacrifice or self-denial in it. He would do the same thing for a dog. So the question recurs: How is God to manifest his benevolence to man? God is a spirit. Suppose we are told that God found it necessary to suffer in bestowing the benefaction. What do we understand by that? Exactly nothing! Suffering means animal suffering, or it means nothing. So the question intensifies: How is God to manifest human suffering and self-denial in bestowing benefaction on our race so as to impress us with a powerful sense of his benevolence? How can a purely spiritual Deity voluntarily suffer and deny himself and manifest such suffering to us? The thing is manifestly and palpably impossible! And yet without this salvation is impossible! So we have reached the climax. Salvation is impossible! But hold! It was said that outside and beyond human comprehension God was and is absolutely all-mighty. Do we mean that? If so, we have no small faith. Then, if God is really all-mighty, he is not shut up to any particular mode of existence. We know, without a Bible, that creatures, man included, have, at least, two entirely different modes of existence; and the Bible says we have three. In fetal life we could not live an hour in this present mode, and vice versa; and so of the last and final mode. We can not change our mode of existence at pleasure because we are not all-mighty, but God can. He can assume a dozen different modes, if need be, in a twinkling. If he chose, he could assume humanity! And this, the Bible says, he did do. Not another, not a different Deity, but the same, manifest to us in human form. Now, he can voluntarily suffer—that is, suffer human suffering and take on self-denial as any other man could, and so show to us and impress us with his immensurable benevolence in bestowing divine benefaction on human people. He can do it in the changed nature of manhood, though he could not do it in the spiritual nature of Godhood. Being now our fellow-man, he brings himself into par with us. God is man as presented to us. We hear much about the divinity of Christ; why not call it the humanity of God? This is what it is. God manifest in the flesh.

The popular misuse of the word person entangles us. There are not literally or numerically three persons in the triune Godhead. In this the Unitarians are right. Their error is in not using the term in its proper figurative sense. "Person" in this connection is not a biblical term, I believe; and I do not see but the word aspect might serve us about as well. "Person" is too personal when understood literally and numerally.

The suffering of Christ by itself considered is of no value to anyone. It was not mere suffering, just so much that was needed, but voluntary suffering and self-denial in a way and to an extent that would impress us in the highest and greatest conceivable degree with a sense of the unbounded benevolence of God. How else could we be impressed with a sense of the divine benevolence so as to move us to affectionate obedience? Suffering in the atonement was not subjective, but objective. A good way to test the value of almost anything is to suppose its absence. So suppose there was no human suffering in the divine atonement, or, what is the same thing, none visible to and appreciated by us, how could we know, and much less feel, that God is benevolent? We might see his benefactions, but could not see, much less feel, that they cost him anything. And, let it be repeated, benefactions, however great, that cost the benefactor no voluntary self-denial give no evidence of a benevolent nature. A person passing a burning house, and, seeing men, women and children almost in the flames and utterly helpless, lifts a latch, which enables the sufferers to escape without. Here is benefaction, but no benevolence. The man did not even look back to see the effect of his benefaction. It cost him nothing or next to nothing. In another case the benefactor finds its necessary to ascend a flaming staircase in order to rescue the sufferers, and rushes into the flame, subjecting himself to the like and even far greater suffering. Here is not only cold, legal benefaction, but the only evidence the nature of the case admits of to verify a benevolent nature.

And so, since we ourselves are human, nothing but human suffering can evidence to us a benevolent nature; therefore, no suffering, no atonement, and no suffering atonement, no relation between God and man that we call religion or affectionate obedience. To talk of divine suffering apart from this manifestation in humanity—that is, of suffering in the essential spirituality of God in the unchanged mode of the divine existence—is to utter words without meaning. Suffering means animal suffering, whether voluntarily undergone or not. There were no two or three contracting parties in the atonement, no commercial equivalents; God himself did it all. There was no "satisfaction rendered to justice." The personified "justice" that would demand so much suffering as are equivalent for crime or other defalcation is the equity of Shylock in exacting his pound of flesh. Without the shedding of blood—suffering even to death—there is no remission, for the reason that with our natural constitution in our helpless condition nothing else could impress us sufficiently with a sense of divine benevolence to cause us to take refuge therein and so rely upon it for safety. Atoning sacrifice is objective. Mere suffering possesses no intrinsic value.

I mark out this outline sketch to be filled up by my highly respected brothers of the North Mississippi Conference, Porter and Cameron, or any others. It is a subject of immense value to the theologian, and should be thoroughly studied. Of course, it can not be illustrated or explained because it is absolutely unique, with no points of comparison. Moreover, we should be careful and not indulge in the use of equivocal terms in speaking of it. I would like to write more, but must keep in with the printer.

R. ABBEY.

From the Work.

FANNIN CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: After much delay I embrace this opportunity to give a sketch of Fannin circuit, Mississippi Conference, and the work we are endeavoring to perform. Fannin circuit is about sixty miles in circumference, with six church-houses and seven organizations, situated in Rankin county, Miss., north and east of Brandon; has a membership of about 350, with one prayer meeting during winter, and three Sunday-schools.

To this circuit I was appointed for this year by Bishop Keener, and, having traveled a distance of 200 miles on rail and eleven by private conveyance, we reached our new home December 27, 1887; but, owing to the sickness of my wife and the almost incessant rains, together with such roads for mud as I had never seen before, I did but little in exercising the functions of my office in the month of January. But for the last two months I have been fairly at work, and am gratified to report the work, in some respects, improving. The ladies have much improved the parsonage, and the brethren have not withheld their hand, and have made some much-needed repairs on the kitchen and field-fence—all of which gives the preacher's home a live appearance, and its occupants can and do say for this year, that the "lines have fallen to us in pleasant places." Time will never be able to blot from memory's page the lavish kindnesses of these people to us. "When we were strangers they took us in; hungry, they gave us meat; sick, and they ministered, and do minister unto us."

In my first round I began work for our paper, the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and finding not exceeding ten copies on the work, I determined to make special efforts to increase its circulation, and succeeded within two months to increase its weekly visits from ten to twenty-seven, which is an increase of 170 per cent., with a fair prospect of more to follow. I would like to tell you something about our experience meetings and the signs of revival here and there, but space will not permit.

Yours in Christ,

J. N. TUCKER.

GREENVILLE DISTRICT.

MR. EDITOR: We gather from Bro. Malone's article, in the ADVOCATE, of April 12, that the Minutes are wrong and that he was correct. It seems to us that his answer is somewhat in the spirit of the man who said the horse was sixteen feet high. He sticks to his assertion that, on the subject of missions, Winona district carried off the banner. We say: "Let facts be submitted to a candid world." The Minutes show that Winona district paid twenty-four cents per member. Allowing all that Bro. Malone claims, it paid not quite twenty-nine cents. The Minutes show that Sardis district paid twenty-seven cents per member. Allowing it only $52 81 of the $719 82 in favor of the Conference on the treasurer's book and Sardis district has done as well, per member, as Winona. But giving Greenville district only what the Minutes show, has paid fifty-nine cents per member; more than twice as much as Bro. Malone claims for Winona district. Bro. Mahon says when we get older we will know more. We hope so. And among other things, we hope to learn to acknowledge our mistakes when they are pointed out and not to charge those who point them out with egotism even though he be a young man. To that charge we but say "God forbid that I should glory save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Yours in the Lord,

J. A. RANDOLPH.

CLARKSDALE, MISS., April 14, 1888.

BROOKHAVEN DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: On last Sabbath I completed my first round, and think it proper to report some items of interest in our work. Of the fifteen pastoral charges two have assessed for the pastor's support $800, and only two have assessed less than $500, and I have a hope that one of these will yet raise the salary from $[illegible] to $500. This is now my third year on the district, and I have never known the people to be so free and liberal in their support of "the institutions of the church" as they are this year. Nearly every pastor in the district has "cleared the decks" of all the collections, and the stewards are at work and expect to pay all the charges have promised for the support of the ministry.

The preachers and people are enterprising, remodeling and furnishing quite a number of houses of worship, and six new parsonages, which will give us a preacher's home on every charge in the district save one. There were forty-two accessions reported during this quarter, thirty dismissed, and fourteen unbaptized. The number and efficiency of Sunday-schools, prayer and class meetings show a gratifying increase.

We are hoping, praying and working for a successful year's work.

J. M. WEEMS, P. E.

GRENADA, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: At a Charge Conference, held in this station last night, in answer to the question, "Is the church here doing its duty for the cause of missions?" the following facts were announced: Raised by Woman's Missionary Society, $87. Raised by pastor on the regular assessments for missions, $157. Raised during week of prayer and self-denial, $61. Total, $306 75, in four months, being an average of $1 50 per member.

Fraternally,

J. E. TIDMAS.

APRIL 13, 1888.

CARROLLTON AND GREENWOOD STATION.

MR. EDITOR: Carrollton and Greenwood station raised $[illegible] during the week of prayer and self-denial for the payment of the missionary debt. Carrollton itself raised $185 75, which is $1 50 per member.

T. W. LEWIS.

Correction of Statistics.

MR. EDITOR: Bro. O. L. Sage is after the statistical secretary, and is partly right and partly wrong. In reference to the presiding elder's salary, the Minutes agree with the report furnished me. In reference to Conference fund, Bro. Savage is right, and I will have to ask the printer who set up the copy to share the blame with me.

Yours fraternally,

T. Y. RAMSEY, JR.

Morality without religion is only a kind of dead reckoning, an endeavor to find our place on a cloudy day by measuring the distance we have run, without any observation of the heavenly bodies.—Longfellow.

The Development of Time-Keeping in Greece and Rome.

Prof. Franklin. A. Seely, M. A., examiner in the United States Patent Office, read an interesting paper on this subject before the Anthropological Society, of Washington, not long ago. We reproduce a few paragraphs of special interest:

In my room in the Patent Office there hangs a Connecticut clock of ordinary pattern and quite imperfectly regulated. Its variation of, perhaps, half a minute in a day, however, gives me no concern, since, being connected by wire with the transmitting clock at the naval observatory, it is, every day at noon, set to accurate time. At the moment of 12 o'clock there comes a stroke on a little bell and, simultaneously, the three hands—hour, minute and second—whether they may have gained or lost during the preceding 24 hours, fly to their vertical position. Immediately after I hear a chorus of factory whistles, sounded in obedience to the same signal, dismissing the workmen to their midday meal. At the same moment, and controlled by the same impulse, the ball, visible on its lofty staff from all the ships in New York harbor, drops, and the seamen compare their chronometers for their coming voyage. The same signal is sent to railway offices and governs the clocks on thousands of miles of track and determines the starting and stopping and speed of their trains. It goes to the cities of the Gulf and of the Pacific as well as to those of the Atlantic coast—noted everywhere as an important element in the safe, speedy and accurate conduct of commerce; and so the work of the regulating clock of the observatory, sent out by means which note the minutest fraction of a second of time, is playing its important part in the economy of our century. I can not follow it out in detail; everyone will do so to some extent in his own mind. But if we are to divide human history into eras, according to the minuteness with which the passage of time is observed in the ordinary affairs of life, we should find ourselves to have arrived, and very lately, in what might be called the era of seconds.

At the opposite extreme is the period when the passage of day and night reveals itself to the dullest intellect. Perhaps no savage people have ever been so dull as not to have noted more than this. We can hardly conceive a state in which the brutal hunter did not take note of the declining sun and observe that the close of the day was approaching. The lengthening of his own shadow was an always present phenomenon, and men must have observed shadows almost as soon as they became capable of observing anything. But this kind of observation went on for ages without any attempt to subdivide the day, and none but the great natural periods marked off by sunrise and sunset were recognized.

There are three primitive forms of time-keeping instruments—the sun dial, the clepsydra, or water clock, and the graduated candle. The sun dial was at the beginning the only time-keeper, and man's ideas, developing into wants, led to its greater perfection, till these wants passed far beyond what, with its limitations, it could supply.

The rude utensil which the Greeks called a clepsydra had no resemblance to the perfected timepiece of this century, but nothing in history is surer than that out of it, by slow accretions, science and art, by turns mistress and handmaid, have produced the masterpiece of both.

Writers on the history of the clock (and they are not few) have generally begun by a reference to the sun dial as a Babylonian or Chaldean invention. We can trace it no further, and have no means of determining when the invention was made. We learn from the Old Testament Scriptures that it was known at Jerusalem as early as seven centuries before our era, and the manner of its mention indicates that in that city it was a novelty.

Historians have agreed in fixing the period of the introduction of the sun dial into Greece in the latter part of the sixth century B. C. Herodotus says it was derived from the Babylonians, from whom he also declares the Greeks to have derived the twelve parts of the day.

It does not appear that the sun dial was introduced to the Greeks in any perfected form. On the contrary, it was at first a mere stuff or pillar; destitute of any graduated dial which could indicate the passage of an hour or any definite fraction of a day. The length of the shadow, measured in feet, determined the time for certain regular daily duties, as a shadow six feet long indicated the hour for bathing, and one twelve feet long that for supper.

The Greeks had written language, and they had literature—Homer, Hesiod, Sappho. They had a system of weights and measures and a coinage. They were prolific in political ideas.

With her other arts, that of oratory had developed in Athens, but every orator was not a Pericles, and whatever may have been the merits or defects of their performances, the inordinate length of these was too great a tax on the tribunals. It therefore became necessary to limit and apportion the time of public speakers in the courts, and to do this equitably some practical means of indicating time was necessary. Hence rose the demand for another instrumentality whose origin and history are now to be traced.

The clepsydra, or water-clock, in its simplest form, is traced by historians no further than Greece, about 430 B. C.

I confess I have been far from satisfied with stopping at this half-way house in seeking for the origin of this instrument. I have sought further, and what I have found, if conclusive of nothing, is at least suggestive.

If, taking our lives in our hands, we could step on board a Malay proa, we should see floating in a bucket of water a cocoanut shell having a small perforation, through which the water by slow degrees finds it way into the interior. This orifice is so proportioned that the shell will fill and sink in an hour, when the man on watch calls the time and sets it afloat again. This device of a barbarous, unprogressive people, so thoroughly rude in itself, I conceive to be the rudest that search of any length can bring to light.

In northern India, we find the rude cocoanut shell developed into a copper bowl. Its operation is the same, but the attendant, who stands by and watches the moment of its sinking, now strikes the hour on the resonant metal.

I next observe the water-clock in use up to this day in China. We find the metal vessel with its minute perforation as before, but it has undergone a radical change in respect to its manner of use. It is now filled and the water flows from it in drops. Obviously enough, the flight of time might be indicated by merely observing when the vessel has emptied itself and then refilling it, which, as will presently appear, was exactly the simplest Greek and Roman clepsydra, and differs in no mechanical respect from the ordinary sand-glass.

But in the days when the Chinese were a progressive people and developed inventions for which Europe had many centuries to wait, this water-clock advanced far beyond the crude thing we have been considering. It would seem that the problem was to increase its usefulness by subdividing the unreasonably long intervals required for the complete emptying of the vessel. If this was done by marking graduations on the inside of the vessel, and so noting the decline of the level, the difference in its rate could not fail quickly to make itself manifest. The solution of this problem, not obvious at first, was found in so arranging the vessel that it should discharge into another, where the indication would be read in the rise of the surface and contriving to hold the water in the upper vessel at a constant level. This was done by employing a third source from which there was a constant flow into the first equal to its discharge. As the head in the middle vessel is thus maintained constant, the rise in the lowest is made uniform. Another radical improvement enhancing the practical utility of the device was the arrangement of a float on the surface of the water in the lowest vessel. Upon this was an indicator or hand, which, in its rise, traveled over an adjacent scale, and so gave a time indication visible at a distance.

To show what progress this structure implies in the development of the mechanical clock it is worth while to glance at moment at the essential elements of such an instrument. Reduced to its lowest terms, a clock consists of three elements only. These are, a motor, or source of power, represented in our clocks by a spring or weight; an escapement, or a means by which the stored power in the motor is let off at a measured rate; and a dial, which is but the means by which the rate at which the power is let off is made visible to the eye. In this Chinese water-clock we discover all these elements.—Evangelical Messenger.

ADDITION.

"Add to your faith, virtue; to virtue, knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity." (II Peter i, 5-7.) Add in your heart this perfect number of seven graces together, and "if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall be neither barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ."

SUBTRACTION.

"He that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins." (II Peter i, 9.)

MULTIPLICATION.

"Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord." (II Peter i, 2.) "He that ministereth seed to the sower doth minister bread for your food, and multiply your seed sown, and increase the fruits of your righteousness." (II Cor. ix, 10.)

DIVISION.

"Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." (II Cor. vi, 17, 18.)

THE CROSS OF CHRIST.—Let the cross of Christ teach us to look calmly on this suffering world. Life is full of trials, and it is a perplexing thing to look around us and see the race of men groaning under their burdens. We know but one satisfactory explanation of this strange mystery—thoroughly satisfactory—which calms all doubt. The cross of Christ is the explanation. The cross is the distinct announcement to us, of that wonderful law which fills all life—that "through much tribulation we must enter into the kingdom of Heaven." Perfection through suffering—that is the doctrine of the cross. There is love in that law.—F. W. Robertson.

Out of Tune.

Did you ever hear a near neighbor playing on an instrument out of tune? If so, did you ever remark, "Why don't Mrs. Music get her piano tuned?" A very natural inquiry. But you are in bad health, and allow a more valuable instrument, the body which is your companion not only in hours of leisure in the parlor, but in all sleeping as well as waking hours, to remain out of tune, and continue to jar on the feelings of all who come into sight of you or within the sound of your voice. Why don't you get it tuned? It is surely of as deep interest to you as your neighbor's rattling piano; and when you can do the tuning yourself, in a pleasant manner, it is well worth while to be in tune, and that without delay. One patient writes:

"Before I had used it a week I began to notice a marked change. That faint, tired feeling which I had for so long began to disappear, and I began to gain life and animation. I also began to notice an improvement in my digestion, and I can now eat without the pain and distress which have been so troublesome for nearly a year."

A very interesting work containing other testimonials of like character, with names, entitled "Compound Oxygen—Its Mode of Action and Results," will be mailed to you free on application to Drs. Starkey & Palen, 1529 Arch street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Briefs.

The way to "rest in the Lord" is to keep hand and feet, heart and tongue busy in right ways and pursuing right things. The Christian man must not halt in doing his duty.

Be not swift to vindicate yourself if you believe that the Lord God is a sun and a shield. You will be safe though you should be battered and abandoned. The Good Samaritan will surely at the best time pass by and bind your wounds and shelter you from your foes.

He who has redeemed and washed us, and who daily subjects us to trials, is patiently waiting for the struggling soul to come to him with his burdens and heartaches. Brother, how much longer shall the Savior wait for you to bring him your troubles?

Jacob led his flock, and God leads his, besides the still waters; but some shepherds set the dogs on the flock and, beat them with rods, and, by hoarse vociferations, seek to drive them into green pastures, and then wonder that the poor frightened sheep wont browse on the fragrant, tempting grass.

The place God puts us in is the place of honor, because we are in trust with great opportunities to magnify that place; and a holy life magnifies any place. No place is dishonorable in God's eyes unless it is the place of sin; and none will be in ours if we keep eternity in view.

Our times are in God's hand. The weeping-time came from God, the working-time and the time of prayer; the time of deep solicitude and sweet triumph; the time of penitence and holy desire, too. The hours should make us reverential. We know nothing of their final significance nor their present duration more than this: "The will of God is your sanctification."

The cry of the burdened, of the tempted and of the suffering soul is for the "Rock that is higher than I." When the colossal verities of accountability, of dissolution and of eternity, like great icebergs, come floating towards us, the outcry of everyone is for the great refuge—the shadow of a great Rock in a weary land. In all solitary and quiet moments of the honest, earnest heart there is a longing for the strong and constant which is only answered by the manifestation of God.

David said, "Thy gentleness hath made me great." The divine mercies came softly as the dew upon the grass, as the warm sunbeam on the frozen buds; and so he was moved by loving kindness to do his best. He was encouraged to hold fast to the dreary, exhausting toil which was making thought vigorous and skillful; he was provoked to perseverance and patience until growth became conscious to himself and manifest to others; and promotion came as naturally as the sigh to the burdened or a shout from the joyful heart.

It is a curious and interesting fact that over fifty Presbyterian ministers in the United States and Canada were at one time Roman Catholic priests. Quite a number of converted priests are now Methodist ministers and members of the Protestant Episcopal Church. We have no doubt that in the Baptist ministry also there are converted Roman Catholics.

Romish Church and American Politics.

A general indisposition on the part of Protestant denominations in this country to obtrude themselves upon political parties, or demand concessions from our State or national governments, have made them strangely unsuspicious of Romish encroachments. Familiar from childhood with the unquestioned necessity of a complete separation of civil and ecclesiastical power, and the genius of our Protestantism thoroughly sympathizing with the doctrine of a free church in a free State, we have hardly yet waked up to the fact that the last thirty years has brought an immense influx of foreigners with theories, traditions and habits as remote from our own as it was possible to be, and that they have brought into politics an immense volume of ecclesiastical influence.

The papal organ in this city, in a recent number, calls attention to two events whose anniversaries were celebrated by the Pope on March 2 and 3—the anniversary of his birth and the anniversary of his coronation as Pope, and reminds its readers that on each occasion his papal majesty lamented his desolate position. Those who imagine the consolidation of Italy under Humbert quieted the princely pretensions of the Pope are under a sweet delusion. It simply released him from the fear of political chastisement, while it intensified his lust of territory and gave both greater opportunity and influence to his political chicanery. The strife between the two parties in Rome proceeds yet with great vigor. Though the King of Italy feels abundantly able to maintain his authority, he acts with great promptness and rigor whenever his authority is in the least threatened. Recently he dismissed from the highest civil post in his capital an official belonging to one of the richest, largest and most influential of Roman families for professing on occasion of the Jubilee his homage to Leo XIII.; and the syndics of several cities were treated in like manner for expressing a hope of his restoration to civil power. The cunning effort to create a sympathy for his political desolation under the disguise of congratulations of his saintly and vigorous old age deceived nobody in Rome where the Pope's religious offices are the most obscure and unfamiliar. In Germany any event that does not bear traces of his touch is considered fortunate. The Franco-Prussian War was the result of his intrigues to weaken the Protestant and re-enforce the Catholic power. The conflict between his papal majesty and Bismarck everyone now understands was for political ascendency; and, so far from having terminated, is probably more alive to-day than the marriage of Prince Alexander and Victoria. Bismarck's latest triumph in the Reichstag was secured by a composition with the Pope. The Vatican is one of the diplomatic centers of Europe, and Queen Victoria has withdrawn from India one of her ablest envoys to occupy that post. His "Holiness" finds himself an arbitrator in England's problem of home rule, and is, doubtless, astonished to hear the head of the English Church express a wish that "the Catholic religion might be permitted to prosper more and more throughout the vast British empire."

With the daily announcements in our secular papers of this wily busybody's interference in the state affairs of every court in Europe it is hard to realize that so many people are innocent of his tricks in our own civil affairs, and imagine his "Holiness" is occupied with masses for the dead, indulgences for the living, and saintly efforts to evangelize the Pagans. How these astute prelates must chuckle in their parsonages as they discuss our stupidity, airing itself in the garb of magnanimity! Very good naturedly we have been enjoying our siesta, and wake up to find that these oily tricksters have found places for two Romanists in the United States Treasury—Mr. Rosencrauz as Registrar, and Mr. McCue as Solicitor. Without misappropriating any public funds, they will find abundant opportunities to advance the finances of their church, and on a scale unimagined and unexampled heretofore. If they do not take advantage of them, it will be only because they have learned more of the American Constitution than of their catechism. The discovery that the Attorney General of the Department of the Interior, Mr. Montgomery, is a Catholic was made through the contracts by which the Romanists, comprising one-tenth of the population, have gotten 55½ per cent. of all the money distributed among the Indian schools. We may rest assured that every other interest represented by the Interior Department has been administered in the same way by the father confessor in charge of the public functionary. It is not difficult to understand the policy of having another Catholic, Mr. Sparks, as Commissioner of the General Land Office, with all the public domain in the great West under his control, when we learn from the Rev. Josiah Strong that, while little less than one-eighth of our whole population is Catholic, their ratio is more than one-third in the territories. "Not including Arizona and New Mexico, which have a large native Catholic population, the six remaining territories had, in 1880, four times as many Romanists as there were members in all Protestant denominations collectively; and, including Arizona and New Mexico, Rome had eighteen times as many as all Protestant bodies." Can we disguise the fact that with characteristic sagacity the Pope has discovered the ultimate ascendency of the West, and, with a view to his dominion over the whole country, is colonizing that section and pre-empting its measureless wealth? Can we be blind to the fact that our great cities have been made not simply the highway, but the prison of the Catholic immigrants through the political intrigues of Catholic bishops? Just what may be in hand it is hard to say, but it is not without an important purpose that Mr. Knott is Assistant Postmaster General.

When Mr. Blair was moving in our National Legislature for a constitutional amendment forbidding the use of public funds in support of sectarian schools, the opposition disclosed the presence of nine Jesuits upon the floor of the Representatives log-rolling against the measure. The plunder of the States' treasuries is too small and the extra risk of detection too great; but, with Catholic officials over a fund whose amount few know and fewer watch, some very neat little bills might be railroaded through a dissolving Congress.

It was a curious spectacle, and full of suggestion: Grover Cleveland in the papal palace, making a dainty speech to His Holiness and presenting a dainty copy of the Constitution of the United States, and, sotto voce, begging that, as an acknowledgment of this grace, the Pope would order his American minions to return him to the White House another term. This unprecedented pantomime of an American President is duly explained by the fact that General Sheridan, probably the next standard-bearer of the Republican party, is a Roman Catholic. Only a few weeks ago Congress adjourned its labors on Good Friday in deference to the views of our Catholic citizens; and the superintendent of the New Orleans public schools sends the children home for a holiday on Holy Thursday. Of course, all this came out of the spontaneous charity and devotion of simple-hearted politicians, and there were no priests or bishops modestly suggesting or imperiously demanding all these novelties in public affairs. And we all, of course, admit it was merely a coincidence that in this city directly after the war, at one time, every member of our City Council was a Roman Catholic. The holy Catholic clergy are not politicians, and never vote because their personal hopes are in heaven and their official duties are with purgatory.

It is beyond the credulity of even an Irish Catholic to imagine that the magnificent university in Washington City, now in progress, issues from a regard for the uninstructed Catholic youths in and contiguous to that "See." Assembling annually the dignitaries of that church from all lands, and requiring the presence of the chief officers of a politically unscrupulous propaganda, its influence through the women and children of corrupt politicians upon national policies and legislation can only be as vicious as it is Jesuitical. It follows naturally the appointment of Cardinal Gibbons as one of the princes of the church, whose office introduces him to the confidence and requires of him the most cordial co-operation with the policy of his master, the Pope. He must indeed be an "innocent abroad" who imagines the Catholic Church to be less than a vast political machine. The right of political control is among the most openly and frequently promulged claims of the papal See. The possession of territory and the substantial evidences of kingly authority do not in anywise affect either his pretensions or power. He claims to have the right to control all governments and to release all subjects from obligations of loyalty to their civil rulers: Every member of his church in this country is, first a Catholic, and then an American citizen. His first allegiance is due to the church; and if a conflict exists between his civil magistrate and the Pope, the authority of the Pope supercedes that of the magistrate. The most of the Catholic priesthood in this country are unnaturalized foreigners, whose civil and ecclesiastical fealty, first, last and always, has been pledged to the pontiff. Though they honestly decline the suffrage of an American citizen because they choose to be the political subjects of the Roman pontiff, yet they treasonably conspire on our soil to advance the pretensions of a foreign despot. In no questions arising in our municipal, State or national affairs which even remotely bear upon the prospective supremacy of the hierarchy are they other than most active instruments of a foreign will. The secret of the opposition to the American public school system is not its want of religion, but the Democratic principle at its base, and the teaching its pupils receive that the authority of the ruler emanates from the people, and the responsibility of the citizen's conscience is directly to God instead of to any human representative. Never has the world been more persistently hounded by a senseless and selfish oligarchy than it is now by the factions and remorseless priesthood of the Catholic Church; never has there been a more false and impudent profession of political rights than they are continually claiming under the sanctions of divine authority, and teaching both in their pulpits and parochial schools. We are allowing millions of foreigners on our soil under the training of men who speak our language imperfectly, if at all, and who under the cloak of religion teach doctrines subversive of our free Democratic institutions. We are self-conceited enough to think that all this is being offset by ordinary social contact of these people with those loyal to the principles and devoted to the success of Democratic government.

Seashore Camp Ground.

The annual meeting of the Board of Trustees was held at the usual time on the camp ground. After a reorganization was affected, committees were appointed to look after the various interests and prepare for the approaching meeting (second Wednesday in July), which they resolved to hold from seven to ten days. In view of the fact that all of the largest camp meetings in the country charge ministers half fare, and very many of those preachers who habitually attend the Seashore Meeting have expressed a desire for the same plan there, the trustees resolved for their gratification to charge preachers seventy-five cents a day at restaurant, and lodge them without cost as heretofore. The Committee on Public Worship resolved on a plan for services that will prove eminently satisfactory and, they hope, very effective. The names of J. H. Keller, J. G. Grant and W. B. Thompson were added to the Board of Trustees, and they were present and useful. W. J. Hearin, of Mobile, was elected president, J. H. Keller, vice-president; E. P. Mackie, financial secretary; J. G. Grant, recording secretary, and P. Werlein, treasurer. Resolutions, memorial and consolatory, concerning their late president, Hon. W. H. Foster, were adopted and ordered engrossed. It was said the meeting was the most pleasant ever held, and we trust the grand encampment for which it provided will be equally so.

Romish Schools.

Joseph Cook, in the prelude to one of his recent lectures, made the following points against Romish parochial schools:

1. It is historically true and notorious that Roman priests when they had their way never yet gave in their parochial primary schools sufficient instruction to fit a population for the responsibilities of free government. 2. Roman Catholic parochial schools are avowedly intended to destroy the American public school system. 3. The instruction given in them is always sectarian, generally mutilated, and sometimes thoroughly misleading. Examples were given from one or two Romish text-books. Bismarck declares that the saddest sight he ever saw was that of the mutilated text-books used in the French schools. Mr. Froude found this systematic mutilation both in America and Europe. 4. Roman Catholic authorities wholly deny to the civil government the right to conduct the secular education of the people. 5. The church denies to the parent the right of private judgment in the matter of education. Refusal to send children to the priest's school is followed by a denial of the rites of the church.

Dr. John Hall and Sam Jones, two men at the opposite poles of pulpit power, sat at Dr. Vincent's table in the Hotel Athenæum, at Chautauqua, for some days in the summer of 1886. The contrast between the tall, dignified graduate of Dublin University and the small, wiry, quick-witted Southerner was marked and amusing. The conversation was characterized by finished sentences from Dr. Hall, interrupted by bold rhetoric from the Rev. Sam. At one time the conversation turned on the custom of pastors exchanging pulpits. Dr. Hall said: "It seems to me advisable for the truth to be presented occasionally from a new standpoint, with the hope that another side of the listener will be developed, and new depths of character revealed." "Yes," said Sam, facetiously, "change of grass is always good." Prof. Drummond was delighted with Sam Jones last year, and heard him both times that he spoke. We see that the Southern preacher is announced for July 14 and 15 at Chautauqua this season, and that his fellow-laborer, Sam Small, will be present two weeks later.

Notes.

The establishment of the Methodist mission in France, which has [illegible] ninety-five preaching stations, [illegible] turned on the giving away of a single tract to a workingman in the Belleville quarter of Paris.

Our Nashville editor calls attention to the fact that our Publishing House not only does as good work as any in the land, but is absolutely scaling the prices of the most enterprising and [illegible] them who work on a legitimate basis. Dr. Summers' Systematic Theology compared with Raymond's System of Theology and Pope's Theology, published by Northern Methodist publishing houses; with Dr. Hodges' great work and Van Oosterzee's Dogmatics by Scribner's Sons; and in case of every book but the first our Publishing House is the cheapest. Let us hear less complaint about high prices and recognize the excellency and superiority of our present management at Nashville.

The scale upon which the domestic missionary work of English Wesleyanism in London has been projected is something new and startling to our humdrum habits. We must go east for missionary enterprise, for certainly the magnificence and vigor with which they have taken hold of home destitution and perils is enterprising as well as compassionate. The rural districts and smaller towns of Mississippi and Louisiana are as much interested on problems of city heathenism, socialism, and neglect of religion as the same elements in England, and a decidedly aggressive movement must be inaugurated. Besides the usual domestic missionary collections for Conference use, our city congregations are spending this year sixteen hundred dollars on city evangelization. This is less than one-third of what we need.

The Liverpool "City Race Record" (!) gives ample space, of course, to racing clubs, music halls and public houses or saloons, but in a recent number it astonished everybody by announcements that these places which are the resorts of gamblers, courtesans and drunkards would furnish sacred concerts on Good Friday and Easter. It was not proposed to suspend the use of liquor on those days. You call it sacrilege! atheism! covetousness! and shiver with disgust or burn with indignation. It is simply the music on these occasions is greatly superior to that given in our churches. It is simply the devil running in competition with the church for the masses and using devotional music, offering greater attractions than our fine churches. Come, wake up, brother, to the measureless possibilities of the forces you so carelessly and sluggishly use. Burn awhile with religious enthusiasm and strain your invention to save souls as you do to make a dollar.

Now that for the first time since the war we are to have a Louisiana Legislature whose personnel represents the intelligence and virtue of the vigorous middle classes, we trust among other items to which they will give heed will be the enforcement of our Sunday laws and the control of the saloons. We commend to them the following remarks of Mr. Husted, in the Assembly of New York, on the bill to legalize the opening of saloons on Sunday:

Mr. Speaker: I think this bill is repugnant to the moral sense of the whole community. This Legislature can not afford either to pass such a bill, nor can they afford to refuse to adopt the adverse report made by the committee. I appeal to the intelligent moral sense of this House. The American Sunday is deep-down in the heart and soul of every American citizen. The European Sunday, thank God, has not been adopted in the United States, and, although I am no professor of religion and although I am not a professional temperance man, I do take pride in the fact that the American Sunday has been handed down for 250 years, as I trust it will be hallowed for 250 years to come. I trust, sir, that the adverse report of the committee will be agreed to, and I hope, without a dissentient vote.

As a contribution to the solution of the problem of saving our young people to the church, we ask the attention of our people to the following clipped from our Methodist Young People:

Rev. A. B. Kendig, D. D., pastor of Hanson Place Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., has organized the children of his congregation into a church army. Its officers consist of a commander (the pastor), brigadier general, majors, and adjutants. Each company with its captain is seated in the gallery of the church every Sunday morning. They are supplied with copies of the Psalms and church hymn book and those of the children take active part in the services. Dr. Kendig gives his text without any preface, viz., John iii, 17, repeating it several times so the army can carry it home. Sometimes in the midst of his regular discourse he gives an object sermon to the army, asking questions of the boys and girls. Perhaps a curious shell with a moral lesson attached will be the children's sermon. Dr. Kendig is trying to solve the problem of securing the attendance of children at church. Surely there is need of reform all over the land in this respect, and if it can be gained by giving children some part in the service, let us have more of it.

Personals.

Rev. S. S. Keener disclaims the authorship of the editorial in the Arcadia Sentinel.

Rev. J. B. A. Ahrens, D. D., returned Monday from a visit to Plaquemine, where he received seventeen German members into our church.

Bishop W. W. Duncan, returning home from his arduous labors in Texas, paid us a very pleasant visit this week.

Rev. H. S. Johns writes that he is just recovering from a severe attack of chicken-pox. On his work self-denial week was observed with good results.

Rev. J. E. Riddle, at Waterproof, had excellent results from week of self-denial.

Rev. Walter Dunstan reports $5 collected at Simsport circuit during week of self-denial.

Rev. C. R. Godfrey gave us a call this week and reports his charge in a flourishing condition.

Rev. Charles E. McLean, pastor of our church in Algiers, died this week at his home in Mississippi. He was gifted and pure, and will be greatly missed.

Rev. B. F. Crary, D. D., editor of the California Christian Advocate, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and brother of our correspondent, Mrs. L. Crary Sadler, halting for a day or two on his way to the General Conference in New York, paid us a short visit.

Dr. Robert R. Doherty, assistant editor of the New York Christian Advocate, is preparing a volume of sketches of the members of the coming General Conference, to be issued by Phillips & Hunt, about May 1.

George I. Seney is very much displeased with the trustees of the Wesleyan University for having deposed Dr. J. W. Beach from the presidency last spring. Last week he sent a pointed letter to the New York East Conference, arraigning the Board and resigning his trusteeship. The Conference appointed a committee consisting of Drs. Buckley, Mains and Rice to reply to the letter, and to select a successor to Mr. Seney.

Mayor Hewitt, of New York, writes a message to the Common Council on the flag question, stating that the Irish-born population numbers 16.45 per cent.; but that 27 per cent. of the aldermen are Irish. He tells these Irish malcontents that modesty would become them, inasmuch as they already have more than their share of favors.

Dr. J. M. Buckley, of New York, once began a lecture in the great Chautauqua amphitheater in a low tone of voice. Many of those in the upper tiers were unable to hear, and one bold auditor roared out an emphatic "louder." "If that individual," replied the doctor with some asperity, and in a higher key, "will listen the full length of his ears, he will hear well enough." The good doctor is a little inclined to be severe upon his opponents in debate. The versatility of his genius, and the wonderful control which he has over his knowledge, together with his rapid, daring incisive mode of delivery, make him one of the most popular lecturers at Chautauqua. We see that he is announced this year for a sermon, a lecture and a question drawer.

Dr. Dorchester, whose reputation as a statistician is unimpeachable, says: "Probably, since 1850, more money has been raised by the Protestant churches of Christendom for purely evangelizing purposes, aside from current church expenses and local charities, than was raised for the same object in all the previous eighteen centuries."—Exchange.

Mr. Ingersoll must be mistaken, then, about Christianity dying out. Some preachers also, who have taken a pessimistic view of the church's spirituality, must have failed to estimate the grace of liberality among the tests of a holy life.

Special Notices.

VICKSBURG DISTRICT CONFERENCE.

The Vicksburg District Conference will convene in Natchez, on April 26 (Thursday). The opening sermon will be preached by Rev. B. M. Drake.

B. N. HARMON.

MANSFIELD FEMALE COLLEGE.

The Board of Managers of this institution, at their annual meeting on May 24, will elect a president for ensuing year.

Last year the Church of England raised half a million sterling for church extension, restoration, endowment of benefices, provision of burial grounds, and erection of parsonages. The annual average of confirmations for the nine years ending with 1883 was 166,000, while that for the succeeding three years was nearly 204,000—a growth of over twenty-two per cent. The confirmations for 1886 reached 213,638.

Superannuates' Fund.

The collection which goes by this name is the most popular among preachers and congregations of all the list, and yet its results are the cause of as much humiliation as the most unpopular. The desideratum is more "four-square" honesty and a thorough business basis for our efforts. Rev. J. T. Shaw, of Illinois Conference, proposes a general fund whose interest shall meet the demands to be raised, viz:

1. The preachers themselves paying into it while in the active work—say, at the rate of $10 per year. 2. The laity supplementing this by their own gifts and donations. 3. The whole to be regulated on the principles of annuity, and the payments made in proportion to years of service and amounts paid in by the beneficiaries, the more distressing cases to be helped from necessitous funds. This is the principle that lies at the foundation of the most successful co-operative and profit-sharing companies now in France, Germany, England and America.

In addition to this he proposes a special contribution from as many congregations, Sunday-schools and individuals as can be enlisted in the organization.

Items of Interest.

The city mission work in Berlin makes use of twenty halls, and employs forty-two missionaries.

Southwest Kansas Conference is to have a home for its worn-out preachers and the widows of deceased preachers. Eighteen lots have been bought adjoining the college site in Winfield, and as fast as the income of the association admits, suitable cottages will be built and assigned to the beneficiaries.

The Centenary Fund instituted by the Presbyterian General Assembly for the relief of worn-out ministers is likely to prove a success. It is sometimes spoken of as the Million Dollar Fund, the proposition being to raise one million dollars, and the churches are asked to give not less than $1 50 for each member. Of course, some large subscriptions are expected. Two of $10,000 each and three of $5,000 each have been already received, and a considerable number of subscriptions from $1,000 to $25 have been made.

In the capital of Madagascar the Protestant school has 2,387 pupils. The queen recently attended the opening services of two Christian churches at Ambokimanga. In fourteen years 700 Protestant chapels have been built in Madagascar, making the number now 1,200. There are 8,000 Protestant communicants, and all the churches are self-supporting. In the Protestant school at Antananarivo 2,387 children are in attendance.

A Louisville, Ky., telegram of recent date mentions that a young German, twenty-eight years of age, was recently found by a jury of the circuit court in that city to be of unsound mind, and that his mental malady, according to the testimony of Drs. J. M. Kinn and Charles Sauter, was caused by excessive cigarette-smoking.

Paper "window glass" is now said to be an assured fact, as described: "A window pane is made of white paper, manufactured from cotton or linen and modified by chemical action. Afterward the paper is dipped in a preparation of camphor and alcohol which makes it like parchment. From this point it can be molded and cut into remarkably tough sheets entirely transparent, and it can be dyed with almost the whole of the aniline colors, the result being a transparent sheet showing far more vivid hues than the best glass exhibits."

The General Conference of the Methodist Protestant Church meets at Adrian, Michigan, May 18. It consists of equal numbers of ministerial and lay delegates elected from forty-seven Annual Conferences. The largest Conferences are the West Virginia and North Carolina, each of which sends fourteen delegates; the next in order are the Muskingum and Indiana. There are no questions of striking importance to come before this session of the Conference.

There is a large factory in Bridgeport, near Chicago, employing one hundred workers, in which waste animal blood is converted into buttons. From 8,000 to 10,000 gallons of fresh beef blood are used daily for this purpose. It is prepared in thin sheets by evaporation and chemical processes, and afterwards worked up into various useful articles. Not only buttons, but tons of car-rings, combs, belt clasps, and trinkets are annually made in this manner from blood.

The Interior Department has recently disposed of a pension claim that for years has been a veritable cause celebre. It was the claim of Cyphert P. Gillette, of What Cheer, Keokuk county, Iowa, for total blindness. It has been pending since 1873, and had been repeatedly rejected by different pension commissioners. It finally came up on appeal before Assistant Secretary Hawkins, who decided in Gillette's favor. The amount which Mr. Gillette will receive is about $16,000 in arrears, as well as a monthly pension in future of $72. This is said to be the largest sum ever paid to a private soldier as a pension.

Paper bedclothes are made at a factory in New Jersey. They are doubled sheets of manilla paper, strengthened with twine and valuable by reason of the peculiar properties of paper as a non-conductor of heat. They have a warmth-preserving power far out of proportion to their thickness and weight.

Bishop Paret, in a sermon on a recent Sunday, said, while speaking of the importance of the work among colored people, that there are only thirty-nine Episcopal churches for the eight million colored people of this country. Baltimore has one and Washington two.

It is said that Mr. N. H. D. Wilson, Jr., a son of Rev. Dr. N. H. D. Wilson, and now a student at Vanderbilt University, is leading all his classes at that great institution.

Southern Methodism in Arkansas has doubled itself in the last ten years and now numbers 70,000 members.

The East Texas Conference paid sixty-two active preachers an average salary of $461 each.

Chase, the director of the Booth and Barrett combination, says the net weekly receipts of the actors average $15,000; for the year, $780,000. Of that sum, it is estimated that Christian people pay $500,000, while doling a mere pittance to charity and church work.

The Board of Missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will meet in annual session at Nashville, Tenn., May 4, 1888.

Captain Force and Guy Norton returned last Tuesday evening from their Southern trip, after making purchases at Crowley, La. Mr. Norton purchased a fine farm near the town, and Capt. Force secured a small tract in the city and will engage in fruit raising and fancy gardening. They expect to return in a few months to make it their permanent home.—St. Paul (Neb.) Phonograph.

Books and Periodicals.

THE PROBLEM OF METHODISM. By Rev. J. M. Boland, A. M. Published by J. D. Barbee, agent Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. 12 mo.; 331 pages. $1.

This book is an attempt to give us a clearer statement of the doctrine of Christian perfection, and, in doing so, it reviews the residue theory of regeneration and the second-change theory of sanctification. He calls attention to the fact that Mr. Wesley's later views were in contrast with his former ones, and that he supposed himself freed from any responsibility for his earlier views contessedly "exceedingly complex" by his subsequent contradiction of them. Bro. Boland's work is to us a clear evangelical statement which will be indorsed by our preachers and people generally, and which we commend to that class of sanctificationists whose main contrast with simply regenerate Christians is in the fact of "testifying."

LIGHT IN DARKNESS; OR, MISSIONS AND MISSIONARY HEROES. By Rev. J. E. Godbey, B. D., and A. H. Godbey, A. M. Publishers, Holloway & Co., St. Louis and San Francisco. Pages, 767. Sold only by subscription.

The book that the church has so much needed has at last come. It is an illustrated history of the missionary work now carried on by all Protestant denominations in heathen lands, and deals principally with the work in India, Burmah, Siam, China, Japan, Polynesia, Egypt, Syria, Armenia, Africa, South America, Mexico. While dealing with the work of evangelization, side-lights are thrown on the history of these countries, enabling the reader to form a general idea of their social and political condition as they affect or are affected by the missionary's work. What the church owes to this noble band of forerunners, whose heroism dares everything to save souls, only eternity can tell. The history reads like a romance. It is profusely and beautifully illustrated, and is printed in large, clear type on beautiful paper. Don't miss the opportunity to buy this book.

THE PICTORIAL HISTORY OF THE BIBLE FROM THE CREATION OF THE WORLD TO THE CLOSE OF THE APOSTOLIC ERA. By Dr. William Smith.

This book is not, as one might suppose, the history of individual books composing the Bible, nor the manner of the being brought together, nor their struggles for acceptance by the world, but it is an attempt to illuminate the Bible narratives by supplying the history of men, events and places associated with the record and necessary to its comprehension. The author has also written the Dictionary of the Bible and edited various Students' Histories, than whom probably no one living is more competent. The book contains 1,100 pages, and about equal spaces are given to the Old and New Testaments. It is of great value to Sunday-school teachers and Bible classes, and will be found of thrilling interest to the general reader.

PERIODICALS.

—The Forum, for April, is, as usual, rich in contribution on subjects of current popular interest by brainy, nervy, enthusiastic writers and are as follows: Civil Government and the Papacy, Prof. Laveleye; Hysteria of Sectional Agitation, H. Watterson; What Shall Public Schools Teach, Dr. Austin Flint; The Union of English-Speaking Peoples, Cerebral Localization, Dr. C. E. Brown Sequard; The Dawn of Electricity, Park Benjamin; Creed, Craft and Cure, Dr. Meredith Clymer; The Tenement House Problem, A. W. Rollins; Socialism and the Catholic Church, T. S. Preston; The Element of Life in Fiction, E. P. Roe; Could Mr. Blaine Carry New York? John Foord.

—The Cosmopolitan, for March, is an exceedingly light piece of fugitive literature, which needs the colored illustrations to make it attractive.

—The Century Illustrated Monthly Magazine maintains its high standard of entertaining and instructive literature. How can any family get along without it? One hundred and fifty pages of choice, clean, valuable information, twelve times a year, for four dollars is a marvel of publishing. Century Publishing Company, Union Square, New York.

—St. Nicholas, for April, is published by the Century Publishing Company, New York. The children never fail to read this magazine; whether the school books are studied or not, and parents will not regret the fascination of these pages.

—The Eclectic, for April, is on our table. It opens with a paper by Prof. Huxley on, The Struggle for Existence. Among other papers are Islam and Christianity, The Evolution of Humor, Slave Evils in Egypt, The Ascent of Mind, Higher Education of Women, The Education of the Emotions. This excellent review needs no praise. E. R. Felton, publisher, 25 Bond street, New York.

—Woman, a monthly magazine, published by the Woman Publishing Company; New York, is a new periodical; this being number 5, volume 1. It impresses us favorably as an effort to please and to improve the condition of the gentler sex.

—Wide-Awake, for April, published by D. Lothrop Company, Boston, is indeed a wide-awake magazine for youths—finely illustrated.

—Good Housekeeping, for April 14, published by Clark W. Bryan and Co., 239 Broadway, New York. The article on Domestic Remedies is worth the year's subscription price. (It is published fortnightly; $2 50 per annum.) Every housekeeper needs it.

—The Magazine of Art—April, 1888—Cassell & Co., publishers; 101 Fourth avenue, New York, is full of valuable discussions of art and illustrated with wonderful expressions of the engraver's art. It represents the study and enjoyment of a week's nights, and suggests as beautiful a picture as any it contains.

—Homiletic Magazine, for April, published by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York, contains Expository Homiletical Sections, besides a department of more thorough discussions in Theology and another on Practical Homiletics. This number is inviting to the thoughtful preacher, and offers a good "square meal" to a hungry student.

—The Pulpit Treasury, for April, is before us, published by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York. $2 a year. It contains a fine wood cut of Dr. I. S. Hopkins, president of Emory College, Oxford, Ga., and will be specially interesting to our preachers for the space devoted to Bishop Pierce's favorite educational enterprise.

A Great Remedy

For coughs, colds, consumption, is Dr A. B. Wilbor's Cod-liver Oil. Contrary to the usual impression, it is pleasant to take. Those who use it like it and find it contains wonderful healing qualities. Besides it will give flesh and strength to the wasted and broken-down body. Remember, always ask for Dr. A. B. Wilbor's Pure Cod-liver Oil. All druggists keep it. If you will address Dr A. B. Wilbor, Chemist, Boston, Mass., he will promptly reply, sending you free an illustrated circular.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

From the Thirteenth Street Union, edited by Rev. Enoch Stubbs, we clip the following encouraging incident: "An old preacher held a meeting for four weeks, and only one tow-headed boy was converted. The meeting was thought to be a failure. But that boy became one of the great men of the church. Ask your friends to tell you of him—his name was Matthew (Bishop) Simpson."

Tramp (piteously): "Please help a poor old cripple." Kind old gent (handing him some money): "Bless me, why of course. How are you crippled, my poor fellow?" Tramp (pocketing the money): "Financially crippled, sir."

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

Wife (looking over the bill): "Do you remember, my dear, how many trout you caught?" Husband: "There were just 12 of 'em, all beauties! Why?" Wife: "The fish-dealer has made a mistake; he charges for only half a dozen."

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

Teacher (to Tommy, whose father is a milkman): "Tommy, how many pints make a quart?" Tommy: "A quart of what?" "Anything. Milk, for instance." "Two pints; one pint of water and one pint of milk."

We would again call the attention of subscribers and agents that, in making remittances, to make them payable to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Please keep this in remembrance.

EDUCATIONAL.

Mansfield Female College.
1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the college, and Prof. D. F. Hindle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 288 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

THE KAISER AND THE LITTLE MAID.
(A True Incident.)

BY M. ANNIE THAPNELL.

A hush in the school-room prevailed,
Each heart with expectancy burned,
For the Kaiser was coming that day;
And all eyes to the portals were turned.

And now he has entered the room,
Lo, that Kaiser, so stately and proud,
He has gazed on each sunny head there
That before him in reverence is bowed.

And now every heart gives a throb,
As before him is stationed a class,
And the Kaiser, so great and so tall,
Thus questions a bright little lass:

"To which kingdom belongeth this rose?"
Taking one from the vase by his side;
Her blue eyes were lifted to his,
"To the vegetable," quick she replied,

"Right, right little maiden; and this?"
And forth from his pocket he drew
A fair jeweled watch, with its chain,
And then held it up to her view.

Not a doubt to her blue eyes arose,
As she stood 'neath the Kaiser's proud gaze,
But clear came her answer again,
"To the mineral, sire, if you please."

With a smile at her answer, so quaint,
Said the Kaiser, so mighty and high,
"And now little maid, can you tell
Of which kingdom a member am I?"

Ah! poor little maid, 'twas indeed,
A specimen strange to her eyes.
She gazed at the Kaiser, so tall,
But mute were her lips with surprise.

A specimen rare—that wise little maid
That question had never heard before,
Of the Kingdoms three, to which he belonged
That Kaiser—it puzzled her sore.

The elephant great she had seen,
And the spotted tigers as well,
And the lions, too, with pristling mane,
And their kingdom she quickly could tell.

But a Kaiser! ah, never before
Had she seen one so stately and grand;
Sure, he'll wilt the rose on the watch,
Or the elephant huge, could he stand.

A sweet puzzled look filled her eyes,
And she stood in a wondering maze,
On the stately form and the kingly brow
Of the Kaiser she fixed her gaze.

But now springs a light in her eyes,
As, placing his hand on her head,
"To which kingdom?" he questions again.
"To the kingdom of heaven," she said.

Ah! wise little maid, may thy words
A prophecy true yet unfold,
And when thou shalt enter the kingdom above,
Thou may'st then the Kaiser behold.

MR. EDITOR: As papa is a subscriber to your valuable paper, I thought I would write a few lines to the little cousins. I love to read the ADVOCATE, especially the children's department. I love the church—I love our preachers. I live on a farm; am going to help papa work some this year. The waters have been very high this spring. There is a large creek running through papa's farm. I did not see the water at its highest, as papa was sick and he was afraid for me to go with the negroes to the creek. I will ask the little cousins a question: Where can this passage of Scripture be found: "Mercy and truth are met together; righteousness and peace have kissed each other?" If this, my first effort, don't reach that wonderful waste-basket, I may be encouraged to write again.

FRANK L. HARRIS.

MAYFIELD, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl ten years old. I thought I would write you a short letter as I never see anything from the little folks about Harrisville. Pa and ma take your paper. I like to read the little folks' column. Will some of the little folks tell me where the word "gratitude" is found in the Bible? Rev. L. P. Meador is our preacher. We like him very much. I will close for fear of the waste-basket. I remain,

Your little friend,

HARRISVILLE, Mississippi.

Two Ways of "Taking It Easy."

"You do nothing but sit in your chair and take it easy, while I have to work and maintain the family," said a boy of nine years to his mother, when reminded that the wood-box needed attention.

"That isn't a very pretty way for boys to talk to mothers," she quietly replied.

"I don't care; it's the truth," persisted the little urchin.

Waiving the subject of parental deference for the time, the mother concluded to fight it out on that line with such weapons as the boy could appreciate, so she said: "Who gets Eddie's dinner?"

"That's nothing, after I've brought in the wood and kindlings, and everything is in the pantry ready to cook," was the earnest reply.

"Then it won't be anything if my little boy starts the fire for me while I am mending his jacket—everything is so handy?"

"Now, mother, I call that real mean! I'd rather wear my jacket without mending."

"But, Eddie, I can not allow that; it is my place to keep your clothes looking as well as possible. You can not mend, but you can build a fire."

"Oh, dear! have I got to? I know I can't make it burn, and I hope it won't. It is too bad to make a little boy like me build a fire!" And he whined and slammed and scolded, but the fire burned.

"Now Eddie," said his mother, "I shall find more things for you to do till you can do what I tell you to cheerfully. You may fill the teakettle next."

"It will spill over on the stove and floor—there, I told you so!"

"It will soon dry on the stove, and you can get an old cloth and wipe it from the floor, then try again."

Eddie scolded worse than ever at this, but shouted exultantly: "There's nothing else you can make me do, anyway!"

"You can wash the potatoes," replied the mother, knowing well that her work would grow harder for everything of the kind the boy would do, but feeling that he needed the discipline.

"Now, mother, you, ain't a-going to put me into that!" he began; but, bethinking himself of his mother's unfailing resources, he hesitated, rolled up his sleeves, and did the best he could; then offered to "set" the table for dinner, and finally received his furlough, to the great relief of his mother as well as himself.

I can not say that Eddie was always cheerful, after this, when required to leave his play for some light task, but the plan of having him do something more, whenever he grumbled at being called upon, worked well in his case, and finally broke up the foolish habit.

Two years later, we find him telling his mother that "the Smith boys don't amount to anything, anyway. Now, there's Harry—his mother tells him she wants a pail of water, and he says, 'Let Joe get it.' Joe says 'I don't want to. You told Harry.' So she waits awhile, and then gets it herself. I've seen her go after wood, too, and split it, and the boys loafing around. I'm glad you didn't bring me up so."

Eddie isn't quite "brought up" yet, but he has had a good start.—A. L. H., in Watchman.

Short Sermons for Boys.

Most boys and girls do not like sermons—they say they are too long for their highnesses. Perhaps they may like these short sermons. They will give food to think over, and must not be read too hastily.

A Swedish boy fell out of the window and was badly hurt, but, with clenched lips, he kept back the cry of pain. The king, Gustavus Adolphus, who saw him fall, prophesied that that boy would make a man for an emergency. And so he did, for he became the famous Gen. Bauer.

A boy used to crush the flowers to get their color, and painted the white side of his father's cottage in Tyrol with all sorts of pictures, which the mountaineers gazed at as wonderful. He was the great artist Titian.

A German boy was reading a blood-and-thunder novel. Right in the midst of it he said to himself: "Now, this will never do. I get too much excited over it. I can't study so well after it. So here it goes!" and he flung the book out into the river. He was Fichte, the great German philosopher.

Do you know what these little sermons mean? Why, simply this, that in boyhood and girlhood are shown the traits for good or evil which make the man or woman good or not.

The Chinese Primrose.

If you wish for an abundance of winter flowers, do not fail to sow one or two packets of primrose seed this spring, thereby laying a foundation for many pleasant hours during "the long and dreary winter," when you can count your blossoms by the hundred, instead of hunting diligently all over your window in the forlorn hope of discovering an adventurous flower somewhere, and finding "nothing but leaves."

Unless one purchases a packet of each variety of seed it is well to confine experiments to mixed seeds alone, for they are, as a rule, very satisfactory, producing so many and such diverse varieties, each of which has a charm pertaining only to itself, some peculiarity of color or marking, or, perhaps a difference of form or tint in the foliage, enhancing its beauty and effectually preventing monotony, which may exist even in the floral kingdom. The seed, if sown in March or April, the young plants pricked out into small pots as soon as they have put forth a few leaves, and transferred again after an interval of a few weeks into jars of larger size, should make strong specimens in autumn, and be ready for the winter's campaign, especially if grown in a good strong light—not sunshine—which produces stocky plants. The chief desire of a primrose's life seems to be, judging from appearances, to crawl out of the jar in which it is growing. This can be easily remedied by changing the abode of the delinquent, taking it out of the pot which it is trying to get away from and putting it into a deeper receptacle, removing, if necessary, a portion of the old earth from the roots, in order to admit of their being set so far down into the new jar that earth may be tilled in until it reaches the base of the leaf-stalks and yet leave the requisite vacancy at the top of the pot for water.—Vicks' Monthly.

SOURCES OF PAINTS.—Materials for the painter's colors—animal, vegetable and mineral—come from many lands. The cochineal insects furnish the gorgeous carmines, and crimson, scarlet and purple lakes; sepia is the inky fluid by which the cuttlefish conceals itself; ivory black and bone black are made from ivory chips; and Prussian blue results from the fusion of impure potassium carbonate with such animal refuse as horses' hoofs. The vegetable lakes are derived from roots, barks and gums; blue black is from vine charcoal; lamp black is resinous soot; turkey red is made from the madder plant of Hindostan; gamboge, from the yellow sap of a Siamese tree; Indian ink, a Chinese secret, is probably made from camphor; mastic is from a tree of the Grecian archipelago; bister is the soot of wood-ashes. A natural earth from Sienna, Italy, furnishes raw and burnt sienna; and raw and burnt umber are from an earth of Umbria. Real ultramarine is obtained from the precious lapis lazuli; Chinese white is from zinc; scarlet is iodide of mercury, and cinnabar, or native vermilion, is from quicksilver ore.

DAPHNE INDICA. Notwithstanding the fact that this is one of the sweetest-scented flowers, it is seldom met with in good condition. It is naturally somewhat sparse of foliage, and being also a scant rooter, it usually thrives best when confined to small, well-drained pots, in a compost of fibry peat and light loam in equal parts, liberally mixed with sand. It is also impatient of free watering. Its value when in bloom in the conservatory can scarcely be overestimated, where its delicate odor and pretty white flowers are always appreciated.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

Nothing Like It!

Every day swells the volume of proof that as a specific for all Blood diseases, nothing equals Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Remember, this is an old established remedy with a record! It has been weighed in the balance and found fulfilling every claim! It has been tested many years in thousands of cases with flattering success! For Throat and Lung troubles, Catarrh, Kidney diseases, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache and all disorders resulting from impoverished blood, there is nothing like Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—world-renowned and ever growing in favor!

"My daughter, twelve years of age, has suffered for the past year from General Debility.

A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet L. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, Sergt., Mohuncus, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, after using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, Pastor Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

Nervous Prostration,

with lame back and headache, and have been much benefited by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I am now 80 years of age, and am satisfied that my present health and prolonged life are due, in the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—Lucy Mann, Killingly, Conn.

Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 70 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

SMITH—Died in Jackson, La., November 23, 1887, MRS. TULLIA RICHARDSON SMITH, aged fifty years and six months. Thus, while the nation's heart was throbbing with gratitude and thanksgiving, her pure spirit bore its own tribute to her home beyond the skies. Of a large circle of relatives and friends, few will see this sad announcement without the tribute of a sigh. By all who have known her from childhood there is no fear that the simple truth will be taken for obituary panegyric. They all know that seldom in life is seen so much of the good, the beautiful and true combined. In youth she possessed rare personal charms—indeed, her beauty became proverbial, and in the lovely casket there was a surpassing intellectual endowment. To-day could be gathered from her extensive correspondence gems of thought and flights of fancy to fill a volume, rich and rare. Though so highly gifted, there was no self-consciousness of such superiority. It may be truly said, She "counted all but dross" compared to the inward adornment of those Christian graces which bring the soul into union with its God. As years rolled on religion became her native element. In 1861 she married John Scott Smith, a prominent citizen and planter, in West Feliciana parish, and in the course of time four children came to gladden their home. In 1880 she was left a widow with life's stern realities and burdens, which she bravely and successfully bore to its close.

The care of her household jewels and beloved aged mother was her life-work. Few mothers so deeply realized the responsibility of training her children, the development of their minds and the care of their souls. Amid the faithful discharge of her mission, ere the shadow of life's eve had gathered, or the brightness of its day had paled, the angel of death came with the summons, "Come up higher." There was little preparation to make, for she had worn the beautiful "robe of righteousness" since life's early morning.

Another in Israel has left us for one of the many mansions in her father's house, and hearts are left with the aching void that time can never fill; but there is comfort in the thought of how much better the world is for her having lived in it, and it is a sweet privilege to anticipate the time when those who sleep and those who weep shall be reunited to part no more.

PRITT—BRO. JAMES M. PRITT was born March 8, 1836, and married Martha I. Barnes, November 30, 1858, and departed this life, February 23, 1888. Bro. James M. Pruitt was confined to his bed about three weeks, suffering much. He had all the attention that affection and skill could bestow; but God saw that it was best to take him from suffering to rest with him above. The writer visited him daily and found him ever patient and resigned to the will of God. He asked me to call in the family and have prayers, and after prayers he said he felt better and said he was not afraid to die. He believed that the gospel was the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. Valiantly he fought the battle, and, no doubt, for him the victory was complete. As a man, he was scrupulously honest and obliging; as a Christian, he was firm and devoted, never hasty in his conclusions, but always ready to do his work and to do it earnestly. He was a noble man, possessing many excellent traits of character. Since his conversion he has always maintained his integrity; was always in his place in the church. The church has lost a noble steward, the people around him a faithful friend, his wife a gracious and good husband, and the children a loving father.

J. H. EVANS.

SHAW—JESSE SHAW was born in North Carolina, August 8, 1798; moved with his family to Henderson county, Tenn., in early childhood; moved to Mississippi and settled in Marshall county in 1850, and departed this life March 19, 1888, in the ninetieth year of his age, near Laws Hill, Miss. He had been a member of the Methodist Church for more than fifty years. The writer visited him more than once during his last days upon earth. We always found him ready and waiting for the call of his Master. We asked him if all were well with him. He said: "There has been nothing wrong with me for over forty years." He leaves a wife of over three-score years, five children, thirty-two grandchildren, and eleven great-grandchildren. God help all these to meet their loved one in heaven!

SELBY—Died at Newton, Miss., January 21, 1888, MISS MINNIE SELBY, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. N. Selby. The deceased was born October 5, 1868, and had just reached her twentieth year. As a child of religious parents, she was early taught to love the Sabbath-school and the church of God. She delighted in Sabbath-school work, especially in promoting singing among the children, and her voice was always heard leading the praises of God in the Sabbath-school and in the sanctuary. She presided at the organ with ease and skill, and attracted around her those that loved to unite their voices in the melody of sacred music. She was converted and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in her eleventh year, and lived thereafter a devoted Christian life, gaining larger ideas of faith as her life advanced. She was gentle, amiable and kind in disposition, retiring and sympathetic in her nature, and ardently attached to parents, kindred and home.

Three years ago she entered East Mississippi Female College as a student. She at once distinguished herself as a faithful student, correct in deportment, consistent in her Christian life and ever mindful of her duty. She progressed rapidly in her studies and was well advanced in her senior year, when failing health compelled her to relinquish all hope of graduation. She had while at college disclosed unusual talent for instrumental music, and soon stood among the first in the music department. She had a soul for music and she lived in the region of melody. She could pass from the performance of difficult secular music to the sweet strains of Zion that her well-taught fingers could call forth from the organ, enjoying far more, as akin to the refined impulses of her religious nature, the sacred melody of the latter than the exquisite skill of the former.

In the progress of the disease there were intervals of release from suffering which promised returning health. These afforded her some opportunities in which to still cultivate the beautiful art in which she was eager to perfect herself. Then her hands became too feeble to strike the familiar keys, and lingering illness checked her in the midst of her promising career. Not in vain were all her efforts to reach up into the heights of melody and song, for her blood-washed and tuneful soul has been only translated to the pure heaven of melody, where she can continue to perfection the melodious Christian life so well begun below. The flower has grown in earthly soil just to bud and blossom and to commence to shed its perfume on earthly air, only to have the joy of early transplanting in the garden of paradise above. A short, but useful and beautiful life leaves a memory worthy to be cherished by father, mother, sisters, brothers, kindred and friends, teaching us that she did not live in vain. The Lord needed her and took her to himself. Let us rejoice in her triumph.

A. D. M'VOY.

FAULTLESS THEN.—Here in this world none of us are "blameless;" but when the pierced hand has brought us into the presence of his glory, he will "present us faultless." The cleansing blood will then leave us without blemish. Acquitted for the past through Jesus, and perfected for the future! With united breath we shall ascribe all our conquests to the Lamb: and one of the joyful surprises of heaven will be to look back and see how close we often came to dizzy dangers and disgraceful discomfitures, and were only held back by the unseen hand! We shall then adore the grace that kept us from falling ten thousand times over. Paul will wonder at the grace that made such a saint out of such a sinner. John Calvin and John Wesley will join in singing, "None but Christ." There will be no discords in that grateful hallelujah-burst of praise: "Now unto him who kept us from falling, and has presented us without blemish before the presence of his glory, to the only wise God, our Savior, be the majesty, the glory, dominion and power, both now and forever!"—New York Evangelist.

"If a woman is pretty,
To me 'tis no matter.
Be she blonde or brunette,
So she lets me look at her."

An unhealthy women is rarely, if ever, beautiful. The peculiar diseases to which so many of the sex are subject are prolific causes of pale, sallow faces, blotched with unsightly pimples, dull lustreless eyes and emaciated forms. Women so afflicted can be permanently cured by using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; and with the restoration of health comes that beauty which, combined with good qualities of head and heart, makes women angels of loveliness. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

The great mistake of my life has been that I have tried to be moral without faith in Christ; but I have learned that true morality can only keep pace with trust in Christ as the only Savior.—Gerrit Smith.

In dyspepsia and indigestion the use of Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier strengthens the exhausted coats of the stomach, promotes a healthy flow of gastric juice, which is the solvent of the food, and impels the organs which secrete it, to perform their functions vigorously and with regularity.

Scientific.

A MECHANICAL GIANT.—What is believed to be the most powerful and efficient tool yet made is the gigantic hydraulic forging press of the Athis Works at Sheffield, of which Krupp, of Essen, has ordered a duplicate. It exerts a nominal force of 4,000 tons, though its actual maximum power is considerably greater. The work is made ready for the great machine by three furnaces, each capable of heating an ingot of 100 tons, and two traveling cranes, each easily lifting 150 tons, convey and manipulate the forgings. One man operates four valves to raise, lower, advance, retire, move sideways or rotate the forging, and another man regulates the strokes of the press with the utmost delicacy and accuracy.

HOW TO RAISE CREAM QUICKLY.—Deep setting of milk to extract the cream is easily done, provided the operator follows directions, to wit: Strain into tin cans not exceeding 8½ inches in diameter and 20 inches deep, with close covers. Before the milk has materially cooled, place the same in cold water not warmer than 50 degrees, and not allowed to get warmer during the time named, as deep as the milk. The cans should remain at rest 12 to 24 hours, when it will be found that all the cream of material value has come to the top and can be removed.—Prairie Farmer.

A great deal of careful experiment has shown that in freezing water largely expels its coarser visible contaminations, and also that a large proportion of the visible bacteria which it contains may be destroyed, even as many as 90 per cent. But still large numbers may remain alive, for many species are quite invulnerable to the action of cold. It has been found that in ice formed from water containing many bacteria, such as water with sewage contamination, the snow-ice almost invariably contains many more living bacteria than the more solid, transparent part; so that the snow layer should be especially avoided in ice obtained from questionable sources.

The Colossus of the flower kingdom is the Rafflesia Arnoldi. It is found in Sumatra. "The five magnificent petals that spring from the center of the calyx, upon a dark violet ground, raise a huge pistil, looking like a blaze in a bowl of water. This prodigious flower is a yard wide. The petals are a foot in length, and stand at a distance of nearly a foot from each other. The nectarine, or honey-cup, looks large enough to hold a dozen pints. The weight of the flower is fifteen pounds."

In cases of alcoholic poisoning—the comatose condition of intoxication—the promptest recovery of consciousness will follow the subcutaneous injection of a mixture of one part of ammonia with two to six parts of water. Police surgeons, who deal with cases of unconsciousness will find this a convenient method of determining whether a given case is due to whisky, compression of the brain or nervous disorder.—Chicago News.

How's Your Liver?

The old lady who replied, when asked how her liver was, "God bless me, I never heard that there was such a thing in the house," was noted for her audability. Prometheus, when chained to a rock, might as well have pretended to be happy, as the man who is chained to a diseased liver. For poor Prometheus there was no escape, but by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets the disagreeable feelings, irritable temper, constipation, indigestion, dizziness and sick headache, which are caused by a diseased liver, promptly disappear.

Mrs. Oliphant asks: "Is there any shock, any pang that life can give, equal to that of suddenly perceiving a touch of baseness, a failure of honor, a lower level of moral feeling, in those who are most dear to us?" When "the prepossessions of affection" are thus driven away, only the heart knows or can know its bitterness. Oh, do not wing this barbed arrow at the bosom of love!

When the stomach lacks vigor and regularity there will be dizziness, heartburn, nausea, sick-headache, nervousness. Use Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier, to give tone and regularity to the stomach.

The perfection I teach is perfect love.—John Wesley.

A shattered frame may be reinvigorated by that wonderful tonic, Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier. It enriches the blood, and vitalizes and strengthens the whole body.

A CHINESE HOSPITAL.—In one of the most crowded thoroughfares of the Chinese quarter of Shanghai, there has stood for forty years a free native hospital, mainly supported by the European community. Very strange its wards look at first to English visitors. The patients bring their own bedding, consisting of a bamboo mat and a wadded quilt. Those who can move about are the only regular attendants of those who can not. The house surgeon and dispenser is a Christian Chinaman, for thirty years connected with the hospital, and one of the first converts of a mission school. Yearly about 800 patients pass through the wards, and the proportion of deaths is small. Last year there were 56, and in the dispensary more than 22,000 cases were treated. From very far distances many of the poor suffering creatures come, and back to their far-off homes many a healed one has carried a blessing greater than bodily healing; for we believe that nowhere, at home or abroad, could better proof be found than in the Shanghai hospital, of the benefit of combining medical and gospel work. Daily the waiting-room, seated for 300, is crowded with men, women and children, long before the dispensing hour, and daily an English missionary, as conversant with their language as his own, sets before this waiting multitude the Word of Life. "I believe," writes a Christian physician, who for some years had the oversight of this work, "that the Chinese undergo more suffering for the want of medical knowledge than any other nation in the world. In an institution like this, almost daily under a good surgeon may the blind receive sight, the deaf hear, the lame walk. * * * I have known in one year, among those cured in our hospital, thirty men and women received into the Christian church."—The Quiver.

A good appetite is essential to good health, and loss of appetite indicates something wrong. Hood's Sarsaparilla creates and sharpens the appetite, assists the digestive organs and regulates the kidneys and liver. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla this season. Sold by druggists.

A BRIGHT ADDITION.—Speaking of George Washington always reminds me of that good story of how Mr. Evarts told Lord Coleridge, when they were at Mount Vernon, the legend of Washington throwing a dollar across the Rappahannock. "But," objected Coleridge, "the Rappahannock's a broad stream." "Yes," retorted Mr. Evarts, "but you must remember that a dollar went further in those days." At a dinner party, not long ago, Mr. Evarts was chaffed a little about the many stories attributed to him by the newspapers, and incidentally this one was praised as his best. "O," said Mr. Evarts, modestly, "I don't say all the good things that are credited to me. Every now and then some anonymous newspaper paragraph says a wittier thing than any of us. Now, what I might have said to Lord Coleridge was that it was not so strange that George Washington threw a dollar across a river since he threw a sovereign across the sea."—Philadelphia Record.

Chronic Coughs and Colds,
And all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, can be cured by the use of Scott's Emulsion, as it contains the healing virtues of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites in their fullest form. Is a beautiful creamy Emulsion, palatable as milk, easily digested, and can be taken by the most delicate. Please read: "I consider Scott's Emulsion the remedy par-excellence in Tuberculous and Strumous Affections, to say nothing of ordinary colds and throat troubles." —W. R. S. CONNELL, M. D., Manchester, O.

Anxiety! How much of it there is in the world! It is the bane of life to multitudes. They are saying: "What shall we eat, and what shall we drink, and wherewithal shall we be clothed?" Anxious, oppressed, saddened hearts, hear the precious words of Jesus. What unspeakable comfort they bring when properly received: "Behold the fowls of the air; for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?" Anxious hearts, no longer repine, and go bowed down, moaning life away! Look up, and see a Father's hand open to supply all thy necessities, and rejoice that he who feeds the "fowls of the air" will feed and take care of you.—Zion's Herald.

NATURE usually makes a gallant fight against disease, and when helped by Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier will eradicate it from the system.

All unholy anger is incipient murder.—Whedon.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study, and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book, than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

"Honest" John Sherman, in a speech in the Senate, on April 18, attacked the Southern people for their "inhuman" treatment of the negroes.

The House committee on public buildings and grounds has reported favorably the Senate bill introduced by Mr. Enstis, appropriating $1,200,000 for a new postoffice at New Orleans.

Great excitement prevails in Scott county, Ark., over the discovery of rich petroleum fields.

The returns of the election in this State and city, on April 17, give Gen. Nicholls, the Democratic nominee, the State by a large majority; and in the municipal contest the Young Mens' party defeated the regulars, or "ring," by a majority of 7,000.

Col. J. D. Hamilton, who had been on trial in Brandon, Miss., for the murder of R. D. Gambrell, was acquitted on April 19. The jury returned a verdict of "not guilty."

The Postoffice Department has at last determined to establish daily mail tap service over the East Louisiana railroad from New Orleans to Covington, St. Tammany parish, La. The action is exceptional and contrary to the established custom of the service and it creates the largest tap service in the United States.

General W. T. Sherman has sent invitations to the banquet to celebrate the birthday anniversary of General Grant (April 27) to seven of the most prominent surviving officers of the Confederate Army. These are: Generals Longstreet, John B. Gordon, Simon B. Buckner, Fitzhugh Lee, William Mahone, John S. Mosby, Joseph E. Johnston.

On April 21 the greater portion of the business houses in Winona, Miss., was destroyed by fire. No residences were burned. The loss aggregates about $250,000.

At a conference of the Young Men's Democratic Clubs in New York City, on the twenty-first instant, it was resolved to form a national league of Democratic clubs. A convention will be held in Baltimore on July 4, next.

The Central Labor Union, of New York City, on April 22, resolved to organize a vigilance committee in each of the twenty-four assembly districts to carry on the boycott against poor beer.

The strike of the bakers in Chicago was successful.

Senator Walthall's bill to withdraw the public lands of the United States in the State of Mississippi from the sale of ordinary private entry and to restrict disposals thereof to homestead settlers was passed by the Senate, April 23.

Mayor Shakspeare and the new City Council were inducted into office, in this city, on April 23.

FOREIGN.

Lord Hartington, recounting the arguments against the Gladstone policy, said he was unable to predict the result of the Irish struggle, but he was confident that the problem would not be solved by the compromise of 1886. Ireland could not be dealt with as a colony. The decision rested with the democracy. If they were weak and weary of the struggle, Ireland might obtain her independence.

The Pope, owing to protests of Catholic Poles, has ceased to negotiate for the establishment of an entente with Russia.

The sentence of Rev. Father McFadden, in Ireland, who was condemned to three months' imprisonment for holding anti-landlord and anti-police meetings, on his appeal was increased to six months. He will be treated as a first-class prisoner.

The Chamber of Deputies reconvened on April 19. General Boulanger, who arrived in an open carriage, was cheered by the immense crowd that was assembled outside of the parliament building. The lobbies were thronged and much excitement prevailed.

The greatest excitement reigns in Cuba owing to the fact that Captain General Marin has issued a proclamation declaring the provinces of Havana, Matanzas, Santa Clara and Pinar del Rey in a state of siege.

Mr. Pendleton, the American minister, while traveling to Frankfort, was stricken with apoplexy. He was taken to the hospital at Wiesbaden, where he now lies.

Le Voltaire, a Paris newspaper, denounces the "American gang" that has been providing General Boulanger with funds with the view of bringing about a war between France and Germany, which would result in a demand for American grain and tinned meats and the removal of prohibitive duties.

Among the projects under consideration by Berlin, Frankfort and Vienna financial houses is a gigantic canal scheme to link the Danube with the Neckar, Elbe, Odor and Vistola, thus piercing the continent from the Mediterranean and Black seas to the Baltic and North seas.

There was a renewal of the conflict between the students and Boulangerists in Paris on April 21. The police charged on the rioters, and in the scuffle that ensued many persons were injured, a number seriously.

Mr. O'Brien spoke at Farmoy, and Mr. John Dillon addressed a meeting at Kellystown, in Ireland, on April 22. No disturbance occurred at either place, and there was no interference by the police.

The New York Catholic News has received the following cable dispatch: The Vatican has issued a decree condemning boycotting and the plan of campaign. The decree distinguishes the national movement from those revolutionary means. It condemns only the latter.

Herr Krupp declines the honor of baron conferred upon him by the Emperor.

General Boulanger has adopted a red carnation as an emblem. It is proposed that his followers wear the flower.

WILBOR'S COMPOUND OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND PHOSPHATES OF LIME, SODA, IRON.

The truly wonderful effect produced by Dr. Alexander B. Wilbor's Compound of Pure Cod Liver Oil and Phosphates renders it beyond doubt the most perfect preparation of its kind known to day.

Consumption, coughs, colds, asthma, debility, wasting diseases and all scrofulous humors disappear under its influence. It is almost as palatable as cream. It can be taken with pleasure by delicate persons and children, who, after using it, become very fond of it. It assimilates with the food, increases the flesh and appetite, builds up the nervous system, restores energy to mind and body, creates new, rich and pure blood in fact, rejuvenates the whole system, flesh, blood nerve, brain. This preparation is far superior to all other preparations of cod liver oil; it has many imitators, but no equals. The results following its use are its best recommendations. Be sure as you value your health, and get the genuine. Manufactured only by DR. ALEXANDER B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, Mass.

FORGIVENESS.

BY J. EDMONSTON.

When on the fragrant sandal tree
The woodman's axe descends,
And she who blossomed so beauteously,
Beneath the weapon bends;
Upon the edge that wrought her death,
Lo! she breathes her sweetest breath,
As token in her fall,
Peace to her foes and love to all.

Ne'er hardly man this lesson learns:
To smile and bless the hand that spurns,
To see the blow, to feel the pain,
And render only love again:
One had it, but he came from heaven;
Reviled, rejected and betrayed.
No curse he breathed, no plaint he made;
In calm in death's dark pang he sighed,
Prayed for his murderers, and died.

Take off the Assessments.

BY W. W. WADSWORTH, D. D.

The time for the meeting of the General Board of Missions is rapidly approaching. The presence of Dr. Allen, after a brilliant and stirring canvass of the entire church, will itself constitute an event, and awaken enthusiasm. Many hearts are looking anxiously forward to the result of the session. Will its large and inspiring plans mark a new era in the work of our church for the salvation of men? The student of the civil, ecclesiastical and religious condition of the world can doubt that Christianity has reached a crisis in its history, by the preaching of the Gospel, by educational and medical work, and the providential influence of commercial contact, every pagan and savage nation has been opened to successful missionary effort. Not only have millions been converted and a multitude of barriers removed, but rapid changes in heathen governments give promise that the near future a Christian civilization may be planted throughout the world. Who that truly loves the Lord Jesus can contemplate such glorious possibilities without a new thrill of aspiration? Who can stand in the presence of such a condition of affairs and not tremble at the fearful responsibility which it brings to the church of God? Will our Southern Methodism do her part in meeting the demand of this great crisis? The statement will hardly be controverted, that what we have done is in no way a proper measure of our present obligation. In the language of one of our Bishops, we have come to the parting of the ways—there must be a positive advance." But can we make such a positive advance under our present assessment plan? If we should do even as well as our Northern Methodist brethren, it would be necessary to double our present assessments, I suppose but few would consider it wise to take such a step. The missionary sentiment is not strong enough to stand the final demand for such a tribute. Can we shut our eyes to the fact that our present results are accomplished in the face of much friction? Our machinery pulls heavily. In the rural sections many of our best and most liberal men complain at the constantly increasing assessments. In some places it cuts down the pastor's salary. It is not enough to say that they do not understand the question. This may be true, and yet the objection incessantly talked among the people is a burden to be carried. It stands in the way of a normal growth and healthy development.

A considerable loss is also sustained by the inequality of assessments on districts. One strong charge has frequently an assessment much smaller than that put upon another of equal strength. Much of our recent gain has come from churches which have gone beyond the sum fixed by the "Boards." In such a case the "assessment" is either ignored or fought out of the way, and is clearly a hindrance. Take off the assessments, and every element of friction and inequality is eliminated.

That the church will never meet the great need until her conscience is mightily stirred will be universally admitted. But how are we to get the need and the conscience of the church together under the assessment plan? Our present method locates the conscience in a sum confessedly far below the need. The prevalent idea is, that the General Board, composed of wise, representative men, looking over the whole field, assess what can intelligently be expected; and that when such intelligent expectation is met conscience ought to be satisfied. It is but just to say that, admitting the major premise—the right of the Board to fix a sum that involves conscience—the logic is unanswerable. If any heroic, apostolic soul ventures out into "the regions beyond," it is because his faith in the power of the cause goes farther than the "intelligent expectation" of his brethren who plan the work. We shall never be able to reach the conscience of the church until the great need of the world, without limitation, is pressed directly upon it.

The measure of success will be largely determined by the conscience of the preachers. How are we to enlist them more profoundly and earnestly in the salvation of the heathen world? The piety, consecration and spirituality of these men is beyond question. If we can not trust them, to whom will we turn in this great emergency? Our conviction is clear and strong, that if the Board will do away with the assessments and put this matter of raising money for the conversion of the world directly on the conscience of our preachers, there will be born, almost at once, a new view of the spiritual destitution of the heathen, and a new baptism of power in urging it upon the church. It will usher in an epochal day of extended reading, of profound thought, of earnest prayer, of powerful appeal for the coming of our Lord among the nations.

Is it practical to work without an "assessment?" As the presiding elder of a district of "all sorts"—from one of the strongest churches in the connection down to the lowest grade of circuit—I see no difficulty whatever. Of course, we would have to do away with fossil presiding elders, who neither read nor preach upon the subject of missions. The Bishops might ascertain this by a question in open Conference as the districts are called.

The thought of this article has been burning within me for several months. Profoundly convinced that we have reached a crisis in our missionary affairs, and that the time has come for a decisive forward movement, for conscience sake I give it to the church. It seems to me that our great lack at this time is faith. If the prayer of the disciples was intended as a proper formula for the church, let us all pray, "Lord, increase our faith!"

"The Problem of Methodism."

BY "GILDEMOY."

"The Problem of Methodism," by the Rev. J. M. Boland, A. M., has been read with pleasure and with great profit. This is a timely and an important book which should have a wide circulation among our people everywhere, and it should be carefully studied by all our preachers, both old and young. Bro. Boland has, in this book of 331 pages, done a great work in clearing up and rescuing from the entanglements of many conflicting and confounding theories the scriptural and fundamental doctrine of sanctification and Christian perfection. I have read many thousands of pages, pro and con, on this subject; but no other book, of a controversial character, has been so satisfactory to my mind. There has been much confusion and, apparently, much conflict among our own people and preachers on this question. We have differed, not so much about things as about the modes and manners of things; the time of sanctification, whether it was bound up in the same bundle with regeneration, or was a second and subsequent change wrought in the heart by the Holy Ghost. This book deals with these questions in a manner at once so lucid and strong as to carry conviction to all who are yet open to conviction. The diligent student will rise from the perusal of this book thoroughly satisfied that the "residue theory of regeneration," or the doctrine of "indwelling sin in believers," is not the doctrine of the Methodist Church. He will see, too, as plain as the nose on a man's face, that the "second change" theory of sanctification grows out of the "residue theory of regeneration." The work of regeneration is minified, or shortened back, in order to magnify, or make room, for this "second change."

This book shows to a demonstration, as far as such matters are demonstrable, that Mr. Wesley, towards the close of his long and useful life, fully and freely recalled his sermon on "Sin in Believers" by restating the change wrought in regeneration, and by cutting out of our Article of Faith the "residue theory" found in the Article of the Church of England. Again, Bro. Boland shows clearly that "sanctification" and "Christian perfection" are not synonymous terms in the terminology of our Methodism. They are distinct terms, referring to different and separate things. When God "regenerates" a man he also "sanctifies" him, and the work of "Christian perfection" begins from that moment of time. This book is very lucid and strong on this point.

Bro. Boland shows plainly that the tendency of the "residue theory of regeneration" and the "second change theory of sanctification" has always been towards separation among our people. Those who imbibe this Calvinistic and Antinomian view, so contrary to Wesleyan Arminianism, must rule or ruin the church of God. Those who do not agree with them on "sin in believers," and in a "second change," or "sanctification," are opposed to holiness in toto. This leads to a "church within the church," or to separation from the church.

It was so in the case of George Bell and Thomas Maxfield, in the days of Mr. Wesley, and, doubtless, will be so to the end of time, or as long as there are persons in the church who hold that the great body of her members and ministers are "full of sin," while we and our class have been made free from sin by a second and superior change. I have yet to see a Methodist preacher who does not believe and teach, publicly and privately, the doctrine of sanctification and Christian perfection; and I have known but few who were not, manifestly, going on to perfection, were not striving to "perfect holiness in the fear of God." I have yet to see a member of the Methodist Church, who had been born again and had not fallen from grace, who was not striving with greater or less urgency to be "made perfect in love in this life." We have not all agreed as to "the when" and "the how" of sanctification, but we have agreed, uniformly, that men must be sanctified, must go on to perfection. Methodists have been of one heart and one mind on this subject from the first.

The danger that lurks in the spirit and animus of "second blessing" theorists is clearly portrayed and exposed in this book. Let the book have a wide circulation among our people everywhere. It is published by the Publishing House of our church.

SENATOBIA, MISS., April 17, 1888.

Letter from Dr. J. B. Cottrell.

I've nothing to do for a few days down here in Florida, but to think and talk and write. Summoned to the marriage of my son, Z. Jennings Cottrell, and Miss Addine Green, both of this lake region, I came, bringing with me the bridegroom's little six-year-old, Florie; and last Tuesday evening, in the church at Yalaha, under benediction of the benevolent look of a crowded assembly, with floral decorations so tasteful and abundant as to attest the genuineness of the interest of the community in the parties to the nuptial covenant, I pronounced the words of the beautiful ritual of our church. Under an arch of flowers, sixteen feet wide and eight feet high, and a canopy blending a variety surprising to a Kentuckian, we stood in consummating the marital engagement. Receptions at various homes have been occasions of much delight. Seated here on the verandah, at the home of my son, whose marriage is occasion of my returning to him, after three years, his little daughter, memory reaches back over the years—the eventful years—and the gem of a lake three hundred yards to the front from where I sit, a half of a mile long and a quarter wide, softens and sweetens the woodland view most favorably to pleasing meditations.

At two weeks of age the mother of my son left him to my care, and in his turn he has had a similar experience. The lovely woman that comes now into control is more like the one I buried at Tuskegee, Ala., in 1853, than I've ever known, and it all seems to my experience as a restoration.

Last Sunday I stopped over at Pensacola, where was my first pastorate in 1854 and 1855, and I led my little granddaughter out on the wharf, and showed her the points along the beach where her papa and his little brother used to rejoice as the waves rolled in and passed back—their little plump forms gleaming in the waters. Memories of my preacher comrades of the olden time came up—Walter C. Harris, Thomas S. Abernethy, Jr., and Charles W. Thomas. Harris was the Jeremy Taylor, and Abernethy the Sidney Smith, of the young preachers of the old Alabama Conference. They have slept through the days and nights of the years now, but here I am feeling them as freshly upon my soul as when they spoke and laughed and listened amid the enchantments of the seaside, or as they preached and prayed and sung with me when the glamour of youth was upon us. To have known truth, fairness and friendship in men, with no discount whatever, is a royal source whence streams of kindliness toward the brotherhood flow. Heart-memories of Harris and Abernethy are affectional luxuries. Charles W. Thomas is yet living. That my own Charles Thomas bears his name is evidence of the love felt for him in my home.

The Sunday at Pensacola was most grateful. The congregations were large—that at night overrunning the church. Oh, the greeting of the sermon! A walk through the cemetery early in the morning, among the graves of those I received into the church, and of many others I knew and loved, was preparation for the pulpit hour.

My four sons live here amid these wondrous beauties of the semi-tropical realm, and I rest for a few days where are the lakes, bordered by moss-covered pines and oaks; where orange orchards and where gardens flourish, and where I catch the notes of birds that would enchant the soul of Maurice Thomson. Wonderful it is that all of life may blend itself with these scenes, and that quivering waters and festooned forests and birds and flowers and soft winds and deep skies should come upon one freighted with loves incident to relations whereof the names mother, sister, brother, son, daughter are predicated! But so it is! The faces came up from the past, and I sit out here under a baptism. The attraction heaves my soul as the tides move obedient to the moon.

YALAHA, FLA., April 14, 1888.

P. S.—Since writing the above I've preached at Yalaha, and at Leesburg I lectured to a large audience on "Ingersollism." I'm here at Ocala now, and am to lecture to-night; then, via Jacksonville, back to Kentucky, lecturing, perhaps, at different points along the way. In writing for the ADVOCATE I have in mind many of the friends of former days whom I write in respect of—preachers and others; and how the sacredness of life is felt to be enhanced because of my knowledge of them! Many are getting old, but growing younger; for such as grow have perpetual youth. If each one who reads this, who has known me, will just consider it as to him or to her, I'll be thankful.

"Character of Sunday-School Teachers."

MR. EDITOR: Allow me to second "Heslep's" "Character of Sunday-school Teachers," published in your last issue. Next to the importance of the ministry comes the Sunday-school superintendent; next to the superintendent comes the Sunday-school teacher. The pastor is first head, the superintendent is second head, and the teacher is third head. All three in one—a veritable union of the three, for their work is identical, though one occupies a higher plane in the mind of the church than the other.

Too often superintendents are chosen for their social, financial, or literary position. If a superintendent, because of these qualifications, is chosen, you will find his teachers are of the same plane. He should stand side by side with the pastor in his love for God and the salvation of souls. Sunday-school teachers should be selected for their religious force and ability to teach. Often have we seen good people trying to teach or lead the children, but were failures because they could not present the ideas and truths of the lessons. On the other hand, we have seen teachers hold their classes spell-bound, as it were, simply by force of mental power, direct thought and application, who were far from catching the inspiration of the power of salvation. Which teacher does the most good? Neither. One disgusts the eager boys and girls with his or her sluggish ways; the other panders to their imagination or fancy, and not to their hearts. He feasts the mind, but starves the soul.

Now, let us take the true teacher, the one who is full of the love of God, and wants everybody else to love him; the one who carries his class to the throne of grace, morning and evening; the one who feels that he is responsible for the souls of his class; the one who by precept and example will lead the children into the beautiful way; the one who will visit his sick members and pray with them. Just follow such a teacher into the school-room; although he is early, yet you will see his class there anxiously waiting for him. After the bell taps for closing exercises, watch that class, teacher and all, as they bend over to their work; the one eager to teach, the others eager to learn. Why, sir, I can walk through a Sunday-school room for the first time and pick out the good teachers.

Too often this important work is left for our bean-catching and bean-loving daughters, who think more of their personal appearance, their new bonnet or hat, new dress, than of their work; or to our sons, who are more careful of looking nice and handsome, and having the admiration of the "girls" than of their lesson or class. I do love to see young people engaged in this work; but, with few exceptions, are they the proper ones to perform the work? Ah, sir, it is a responsible work. Every teacher and every officer of the Sunday-school must give an account of his or her work before God. Do they ever stop to think of the responsibility of the position they have accepted?

My whole heart is in the Sunday-school work. For years I have done my best to be a faithful secretary; an office in which I have no souls immediately under my charge, but I feel that I must, in the end, answer if my work was faithfully done.

A. S. S. SECRETARY.

Woman's Missionary Society.

The next session of the Woman's Missionary Society, of the North Mississippi Conference, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will be held in Holly Springs, Miss., June 28 to July 1, inclusive.

The society will convene on Thursday, at 8 P. M., for the purpose of hearing the addresses usual with us on such occasions, and the regular call of business will be taken up on Friday morning. The annual sermon will be preached on Sunday, July 1, at 11 A. M.

Every auxiliary is urged to send a delegate and all necessary reports. Let us offer earnest prayer for the blessing of our Father upon our meeting, and let us go up to it in the spirit of the Master.

We sincerely desire the presence of such of our brethren of the ministry as can attend; and we assure them of a cordial greeting and hearty welcome.

MRS. C. N. TERRY,
President.

MEN OUT OF THEIR ELEMENT.—Even so did Pitt hold up his hands in consternation after a talk with Wolfe, the hero of Quebec. Even so did a secretary of state declare that Nelson was the greatest fool he ever talked with. You must take a man upon his proper ground, you must measure his strength where his strength lies. The Duke of Wellington was not an impulsive soul who could get up from the dinner table, draw his sword and swagger about the room, bragging that he was to surpass all the soldiers of antiquity, as Wolfe did in Pitt's presence. We wonder not that the minister held up his hands on Wolfe's departure with words to the effect, "Must we trust our army to that idiot?" Yet the great Duke, long after Waterloo, paid a large sum to get back a letter written by him on the evening of the battle, which letter he instantly burned, saying that when he wrote it he was the greatest ass in Europe. I fancy that had we seen the letter we should, in so far, have agreed with the great, but by no means exemplary Duke.

There is the streak of the fool in the wisest of men. It was very apparent in Solomon. There is the streak of incapacity in the most capable man. And it grows most conspicuous when he strays beyond his proper measure. What more graceful than a swan in the water? What more awkward than the swan waddling on shore?—Longman's Magazine.

OF THE METRE.

BY SPENSER, CONSTRUCTION.

I kneel before Thine altar, Lord, and take a gift would fit me.

But all I have is worthless and unfit for offering—
A foolish toil, a foolish dream, a foolish, fruitless pain—
Such are my all. O Love of love, do not the gift disdain.

And even as earthly monarchs do, who take the tribute given,
And quick restore, for loyal grace increased to seven times seven.
So take, O Lord, my offering, and vouchsafe me presently
For emptiness, thy fullness; for my hunger, thy supply.

I lay my heart down at thy feet, that tired heart and cold.
Whose wistful throb has grown so faint, whose youthful fire so cold!
Heart of the world's heart, Lord of joy, and mighty Lord of pain,
Take thou the chill, and quicken it, and give it back again.

My foolish dreams, so dear, so prized, baptized in many tears,
Lovell even as sickly children are, the more for doubts and fears,
O Lord, whose world is faithfulness eternal to endure,
Take it: and give me in its stead the hope that standeth sure.

The pain, that half was bathed with, which could not bear to die,
And, stilled by day, would stir by night, and wake me with its cry,
That pain so close, so intimate, that death could scarce destroy,
I leave it, Lord, before thy feet: give me instead thy joy.

All empty-handed came I in, full-handed forth I go;
Go thou beside me, Lord of grace, and keep me ever so;
Thanks are poor things for such wide good, but all my life is thine—
Thou who hast turned my stones to bread, my water into wine.

Vincent and Holway's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

Sunday-School Lesson.—May 13.

THE LORD'S SUPPER.

Matthew xxvi. 17-30.

GOLDEN TEXT.—For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us.—1 Cor. v. 7.

TIME.—A. D. 29, Thursday evening, April 6 (14th of Nisan).

PLACE.—Jerusalem.

PARALLEL NARRATIVES.—Mark xiv. 12-26; Luke xxii. 7-38; 1 Cor. xi. 23-26.

INTRODUCTION.

Our Lord on this occasion founded a permanent ordinance in the Christian church: a sacrament, pointing to his death in the past, to his life in the present, to his coming in the future, of which it is a Christian duty to partake, and a sin to partake unworthily: it being a communion of believers as members of the same body of Christ. (1 Corinthians x. 16, 17.)

17. The first day of the feast of unleavened bread—The 14th of Nisan (Thursday), when the heaven was removed and the paschal lamb was slain (as Mark and Luke add for Gentile readers). In the evening of this day, after the fifteenth had begun, the Passover was eaten. The feast lasted seven days, or, counting in the fourteenth, eight days. We must always keep in mind that the Jews counted the days from sunset to sunset. Disciples came—The movement for the observance of the Passover originated, therefore, with them. The directions were given to two of them only, Peter and John. (Luke xxii, 7-13.) Where ... eat the passover—Jewish custom required that the Passover be celebrated, if not within the city walls, at least within the distance of a Sabbath day's journey—that is, about three-quarters of a mile.

18. Go ... to such a man—The Greek word is that used when the writer knows, but does not care to mention, the name of the man referred to. Farrar states that some identify him with Joseph of Arimathea; others, with John Mark. Hospitality was a common virtue at these festivals toward strangers from a distance. Alford regards this direction as given under supernatural foresight. My time is at hand—For the disciples the "time" may have seemed the long-expected season of his manifesting himself as king, and the memory of such words as those of John vii. 8 ("My time is not yet full come") may have seemed to strengthen the impression. We read, as it were, between the lines, and see that it was the "time" of the suffering and death which were the conditions of his true glory. (John xii. 23.) Keep the passover ... with my disciples—The Savior acted as the head of a domestic establishment. His disciples and himself became, as it were, a family circle.

19. Disciples did—It was a blind sort of an errand upon which they were to go, and it was undertaken in full faith that it should turn out right. Made ready the passover—It may be well to bring together the facts which these few words imply. The two disciples, seeing that the room was "furnished," the tables arranged, probably in the form of a Roman triclinium; and the benches covered with cushions, would have to purchase the lamb, the unleavened bread, and the bitter herbs, together with the wine and the conserve of sweet fruits which later practice had added to the older ritual. The paschal victim would have to be slain in the courts of the temple by one of the officiating priests. The lamb so slain would then be roasted, the bitter herbs prepared, and the table set out: and then, as sunset drew near, all would be ready for the Master and his disciples.

20. When even was come—Probably about six P. M. He sat down—Literally, Reclined. The supper appears to have been originally taken standing. The reclining posture had been borrowed from other nations long prior to Christ's time. In taking their places, John reclined next to Christ on one side; thus he might easily rest his head on the Master's bosom. Judas sat near Christ (John xiii, 25), probably on the other side, for Christ reached to him a sop or morsel. (John xiii, 26). Our Lord and the twelve were a full paschal company—ten persons were the minimum number. With the twelve—What strange emotions would be in the traitor's breast! How peculiarly solemn the emotions of him who looked into the breast of the traitor!

21. As they did eat—The four evangelists are entirely independent in their accounts of the last supper. One of you shall betray me—The words would seem to have been intentionally vague, as if to rouse some of those who heard them to self-questioning. They had not, it is true, shared in the very guilt of the traitor, but they had yielded to tendencies which they had in common with him, and which were dragging them down to his level. They had joined him in his murmuring (verse 8), they had been quarreling, and were about to renew their quarrel about precedence. (Mark ix, 31; Luke xxii, 24). It was well that the abyss should be laid bare before their eyes, and that each should ask himself whether he were indeed on the point of falling into it.

22. They were exceeding sorrowful—St. John (xiii, 22) has the graphic words, "Then the disciples looked one another, doubting of whom he spake." They would feel stunned and bewildered. "One of you," did he say? "One of us?" Began ... to say ... Lord, is it I—Their language expresses in the original a much stronger negation than in our version. Surely not I, Lord? Compare their strong assertion that they will not deny him. (Verse 35). To their questioning Christ makes no response. John then asks more quietly, "Who is it?" (John xiii, 23-25). Better always that question than "Is it he?" The very horror that breathed through their question, the very trustfulness which prompted it, involved their acquittal.

23. He that dippeth his hand with me in the dish—The act had just passed by one near him. There were probably a number of dishes, or bowls, distributed along the table, containing the broth called charoseth, prepared of dates, figs, and other fruits. Even this statement may not have definitely pointed out Judas to the others. There is a pathetic tenderness in the language. In this expression our Lord seems to have aggravated the crime of the traitor by suggesting the language of the Psalmist: "He that did eat my bread hath lifted up his heel against me." (Psalm xli, 9). But our Lord did not leave the traitor without a third and still more special detection. John tells us (xiii, 24-26) that at Peter's request he himself, as reclining nearest his Lord's bosom, inquired of Jesus in an undertone, "Lord, who is it?" Our Lord replied, doubtless in the same sub-tone, "He it is to whom I shall give a sop." He then gave the sop to Judas, by which the two disciples knew the man for certainty.

24. Son of man goeth—He marches with unfaltering step in the way to the scene of death as marked out by the divine prophecies. Yet that does not exculpate the authors of his death. As it is written—In such passages as Psalm xxii and Isaiah liii. The words are remarkable as the first direct reference of the coming passion and death to the Scriptures which prophesied of the Messiah. Woe unto that man by whom ... betrayed—The most affecting and melting lamentation of love, which feels the woe as much as holiness requires or will admit. Our Lord seems to forget his own woes in pity for this man. There is wailing in the woe, though, no doubt, an element of indignation too, and of denunciation also. Alas! for that man! Good ... if he had not been born—A familiar phrase in the Rabbinical schools, used here with awful depth of certainty. So it is impossible that he can ever be restored to divine favor.

25. Judas, which betrayed him—John, who was next to our Lord (John xiii, 23), gives a more detailed account of what he saw and heard; which probably took place before the question of Judas, after the giving of the sop. The hypocrisy or reckless defiance of that question at such a time is an indication that, "after the sop Satan entered into him." This expression, who betrayed him, is the defining clause that served to distinguish the Judas referred to from the other apostolic Judas or Jude. Master, is it I—He had remained silent in the defiant hardness of contempt or the sullen gloom of guilt; but now—stung, it may be, by some sense of the shuddering horror with which the mere possibility of his guilt was regarded—he nerved himself for the shameful and shameless question—not asking, as the rest had asked, in the loving reverence, "Lord, is it?" but with the cold, formal title, "Rabbi, is it I?" Thou hast said—This is a formula of assent both in Hebrew and Greek, and is still used in Palestine in that sense. These words seem also to have been spoken in a low voice, inaudible to the rest. Not until after Judas departs does Jesus open his heart to the disciples in the discourse preserved by John.

26. As they were eating—This clearly indicates that the Lord's Supper was instituted during the progress of the paschal supper, not as a separate ordinance at its close. Nor is it inconsistent with the statement in Luke that he took the cup "after supper," for the third and fourth cup of the Passover were taken at the close of supper. Jesus took bread—The unleavened cakes used on these occasions, easily broken. Paul clearly intimates that the breaking symbolized the violence by which our Lord's body was put to death. (1 Cor. xi, 24.) Blessed—As was the custom. The word "eucharist" ("thanksgiving") is a common name of the Lord's Supper, as a feast of thanksgiving. Our Lord probably did not himself partake. Brake ... gave it—The administration of the Lord's Supper was subsequently termed the "breaking of bread." (Acts ii, 42; 1 Cor. x, 16.) Take, eat; this is my body—That is, represents my body—a common way of using the symbol for the thing signified. For instance: "That rock was Christ" (1 Cor. x, 4); "the three branches are three days" (Gen. xl, 12); "for this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia." (Gal. iv, 25.) From this formula, interpreted too literally, sprang the two heresies of transubstantiation and consubstantiation—the one insisting that the elements of bread and wine are, contrary to the testimony of the senses, changed into the veritable body and blood of Christ; the other maintaining that while the elements themselves remain unchanged, the literal body and blood of Christ are invisibly received with the elements by the communicant. Luke and Paul add: "This do in remembrance of me." The Lord's Supper is, therefore, whatever else it may be, a commemoration of the atoning death of Christ, a perpetual and omnipresent witness of our Lord's death.

27. Took the cup—After supper. (Luke xxii, 20; 1 Cor. xi, 25.) It was, therefore, the third or fourth cup at the close of the supper, and after the bitter herbs, the unleavened bread, and the lamb had been eaten. Wine did not form part of the original institution, but it had been superadded. Gave thanks—The communion should be an occasion, as the sacrifice of Christ should be for us an inspiration, of thanksgiving. Drink ye all of it—And yet the Pope has not been deterred from changing and violating this fixed law of the Lord, for he has prohibited all the laity from the use of the cup.

28. This is my blood of the new testament—The wine, poured out, is a symbol of the blood of Christ shed for us. As Moses (Exodus xxiv, 8) sprinkled blood upon the people, and said, "Behold the blood of the covenant," our Lord points directly to the shedding of his blood on the cross as "the blood of the covenant." Shed for many—It was on the point of being shed for many; not for a few. For the remission of sins—Our Lord here declares, with reference to his own death, that it was an actual dying for others, to the end that their sins might be pardoned. This remission—is not, indeed, the end of ends contemplated in the shedding of the blood of the Savior. Destruction of sinfulness is an end beyond. Restoration to moral godlikeness is still farther beyond. And yet farther on and up is everlasting fellowship with God in his own ineffable bliss. But the great difficulty in moral government, and the difficulty that was barreading the way of access to upward and onward progression, is surmounted when remission of sins becomes realizable.

29. Will not drink henceforth—The ordinance now receives its prophetic meaning. Compare 1 Cor xi, 26: "till he come." He will never drink it in its sacrificial, but in its eucharistic sense. Hence he does not say that he will drink the blood, but "this fruit of the vine." It is the life part, not the death part of the symbol, of which he speaks. Until ... I drink it new with you in my Father's kingdom—Not drink new wine, but drink it anew. The new heavens and the new earth shall have a new memorial of God's love in Christ. There will be feasting then even as now: but it will be on a higher plane. It will be, as it were, glorified feasting. The Passover supper, already sublimed into the Lord's Supper, will be still further sublimed and glorified into the marriage supper of the Lamb. It will be a new kind of supper. Hence the wine that will be used will be new, a new kind of wine, inexpressibly superior to all that is now called wine.

30. When they had sung a hymn—Psalms cxiii-cxvi were ordinarily chanted at the Jewish Passover, the first two during the last two at the close of the service. These were probably the psalms now chanted. This is the only time our Lord is described as sanctioning by his example the exercise of singing. Before this closing exercise our Lord uttered the discourses and offered the prayer recorded in John xv-xvii. Went out into the Mount of Olives—They would go first into the mount, passing over the brook Kedron, and then they would dive into some one or other of the hollowed and sequestered spots.

Rev. Dr. Abbey.

REPLY OF REV. J. A. PARKER TO DR. ABBEY'S OPEN LETTER.

Venerable and Dear Sir and Brother:

Fully appreciating, as I trust, the courteous manner and kindly spirit of your letter published in the ADVOCATE, for March 15, I, nevertheless, feel called upon to make this reply not only in defense of my views on the question raised by your letter, but also for the sake of consistency. It is needless to say that your criticisms were surprising to me, as I could not recall a single expression in my review of Dr. Fitzgerald's editorial which even tacitly assented to the correctness of the dogma to which you object. The history of this case, as you remember, is this: A correspondent asked Dr. Fitzgerald to answer a certain question. The Doctor assumed that the question was a proper one, and proceeded to give an answer. That answer, given to the public, was not such as accorded with my views on the particular line of thought followed out by the Doctor touching the etymological aspects of the question. It was no part of my business to answer the original question, nor to inquire into its legitimacy. It was the answer to that question which concerned himself. If A asks B what kind of government Cromwell established in Alaska, and B proceeds to answer, "An imperial form of government," and then he labors himself to prove that the government of Alaska is imperial in form, the question is then changed from, "What sort of government did Cromwell establish in Alaska?" to, "Is the government of Alaska imperial in form?" True, it might be said that Cromwell did not establish any form of government in Alaska, but that particular geographical section of the world constitutes one of the territories of the United States; but such an answer would not contradict the assertion that Alaska was under an imperial government.

Somebody asked Dr. Fitzgerald if the church was built on the Apostle Peter. The Doctor answered, "Yes," and undertook to prove it. Two letters—NO—would have answered the question satisfactorily to my mind, and so would your opinion of the impropriety of the question. However, since the question was accepted as a proper one, and the answer sent out to some 50,000 readers for consideration, favorable or unfavorable, that answer is in no sense a personal matter as the original question was. Now, since the answer has been put on trial, and the original question goes—as the lawyers would say—to the res gista, you very properly brought it to bear on the merits of the case. Now, my dear Doctor, as you charge me with a fault of which I feel that I was never guilty—that of assenting, tacitly or otherwise, that anybody has formed a church on anything (in this primary sense) at any time within the last 4,000 years—I may state that immediately after the appearance of my criticism of Dr. Fitzgerald a brother—Rev. J. A. Scruggs, of Shreveport, La.—wrote to me, calling my attention to an elaborate paper on that subject in the Review (Bledsoe's), for April, 1876. At once, and before I had any knowledge of the existence of your letter to me, I wrote Bro. Scruggs that the paper to which he had called my attention was very objectionable on account of its author's endorsement of the common error that Christ established a new church when he came to earth, and, by consequence, ruled Abraham, Moses, David and the rest out of the church. Referring to my paper, which you review, I fail to find any admission, as above stated, of the fact that Christ ever formed or projected during his sojourn on earth any church on anybody or anything. Dr. F. affirmed that the church was built on Peter. That raised the question, Was the church built on Peter? I took the negative, and tried to answer it conclusively—the church was not built on Peter. Just this, and nothing more. The fact that I insisted that the church was built on Christ, our Rock, certainly does not argue that this was done in A. D. 32 or 33. "The verb to build" was not under discussion between Dr. F. and myself. He had assumed a certain meaning, and, without defining it, assumed that whatever it expressed—whatever process it implied—was consummated "upon" Peter.

Permit me to suggest that while your definition of build is well sustained by your arguments and examples, it fails to remove any of the manifold perplexities which have grown up around the passage of Scripture in question. No matter what the word build means, if Petros and Petra be the same or stand for the same, whatever the Lord proposed was predicated of Peter. But since we know, just as well as words can tell, that the object spoken to and the object spoken of are separate and distinct objects—distinct in degree, if not in kind—we know the thing done, whatever that may be, had no more connection with Peter than the mere association of ideas. You ask, "What does that expression mean anyhow?" I understand it to mean simply this: Our Rock—Psalms xviii, 2; Ephesians ii, 20; II Samuel xxii, 2, 47; I Corinthians iii, 11—is the foundation of the church of God. Whether that foundation was laid in A. M. 1 or A. D. 1 was not material to the question which I had under discussion. There was no building, establishing, protecting, founding, nor perpetrating of the church done on Peter. Whatever was done was done on or "upon" our Rock. This same Peter tells us, just as plainly as words can express facts, that the church existed at least fifteen hundred years before he was born. (See Acts vii, 38.) The only question which it seems to me to be necessary to settle, in order to determine that no act whatever was performed "upon" Peter, is this: Did any change take place in the nature of the church after the events recorded in Matthew xvi, 18? The apostle records two periods to the upbuilding of the church—the prophetic period and the apostolic period: "Built upon the foundation of the prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." Now, Doctor, apply your definition of built to this passage, and let the Master tell of the antiquity of this "corner-stone"—"Before Abraham was, I am"—and let John add his testimony, that this same Rock—this incarnate Word—was "in the beginning with God." Here is the "foundation, even Jesus Christ"—the only foundation which any man can lay—laid in the "beginning." If you refer to "the church" (chapter vi), you will see that I have held and taught (and do now hold and teach) that the church of God was established more than 1,500 years before Christ began his ministry on the earth. You will there see that "the church in the wilderness" had all the constituent elements of the church of to-day, and, pursuing the subject into the seventh and eighth chapters, you will see that not only the elements of the church as it now exists, but the doctrines as well, were present in the church during all the ages prior to the incarnation. It is perfectly clear that the nature of the church has undergone no change "through the ages all along."

I pray you, my dear friend and brother, do not send it down to posterity not only that I ever thought, or said, or wrote that our Lord ever made, or caused, or permitted to be made any new church after he came upon earth, but not even that I ever tacitly assented to such doctrine. While I trust it may never come to pass that Ross' telescope or anybody's telescope may have to be turned upon my feeble utterances in order to see what I mean, I beg of you, my dear Doctor, to use such glasses as will bring me into a proper focus so I may not seem to be so far from where I really stand. In the hope that I have preserved the same spirit of courtesy in this answer which you manifested in your letter, and begging your forbearance for what may not seem to be so, I am, dear friend and brother,

Yours in Christian love,

J. A. PARKER.

From the Work.

OAK GROVE CHURCH, ADA CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: We have two fine ministers to labor with us this year, and it seems that they have started out to do a good year's work. Their names are Bros. J. I. Hoffpauir and Bruce. A great many of the members of our church have been raised up under the Catholic belief, and at the last appointment we were requested by Bro. Bruce to fast and pray on Good Friday, and the request was complied with by fasting and having a glorious prayer meeting. Nearly all of our members pray in public, when a year ago it seemed to be the hardest matter to get anyone to assist the preacher in carrying on services—only one that I know of, that is old Bro. Sayes, who has been in the field about forty years or more; but to-day our church has some as hearty praying members as I ever heard pray. We have good meetings every time we meet, and I am of the opinion that if the members of every church would go to work right, and try to keep themselves warmed up, and not depend so much on the preachers, we would have better times, and the preachers would not be so hard run to keep the churches alive; but, thank God, salvation flows from the hearts and lives of our preachers like sweet waters from a heavenly stream. It is like seed sown in good ground. You can judge from last year's work. They labored with us last year. Our membership here last year was about twenty, but to-day we are about seventy-five. I am one of the young members myself, and, for fear I start off too brisk and make a blunder, I will close, hoping this will not reach the waste-basket, and asking the prayers of all the praying people who take this precious paper.

Yours respectfully,

D. B. M'CANN.

BROOKHAVEN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We are now in the midst of a gracious revival of religion in Brookhaven. The indications at this time encourage us to look for a large ingathering of souls into the fold of Christ. Nearly all of the young ladies of Whitworth College are profoundly affected. Many of them are aglow with love and zeal, and others are earnestly seeking the pearl of great price.

The Rev. Dr. C. O. Andrews, of Jackson, Miss., was with us last week. His effective preaching and judicious methods in the conduct of the services have been graciously blessed of God, and we all feel deeply indebted to him.

The Rev. W. B. Lewis, of Canton, Miss., arrived last night, and the meeting will continue under his direction. Bro. Watkins, the pastor of the church, has been earnestly praying and working for a revival here, and we all rejoice with him in the prospect of a glorious realization of his hopes. This has been a year of gratifying prosperity in Whitworth College. I doubt if pupils were ever more faithful and successful in their work, in any institution, and now to have the close of the session crowned with an outpouring of the Spirit of God, is, indeed, an occasion of great joy. Our approaching commencement promises to be a most attractive event in the history of the college. Bishop Hargrove will preach the commencement sermon June 17, and the Rev. R. G. Porter, of the North Mississippi Conference, will preach the sermon before the Y. L. C. A. The Hon. J. R. G. Pitkin, of New Orleans, will deliver the annual address, and the Hon. H. S. Van Eaton will deliver the address before the Alumnæ Association.

W. B. MURRAH.

TIBBEE CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I send to Dr. Kelley to-day $20, as a result of the week of prayer and self-denial. I also send $30 on our assessment for foreign missions and have a little more than the balance of the assessment in good subscription. Besides this, we have a Woman's Missionary Society and a Young Folks' Missionary Society, both of which are doing very well. And I am glad to say that in other departments of church work we have reasons to be encouraged. The pastor is not forgotten. Sunday-school and prayer meeting interest growing better. Mine are good people, ready to aid and encourage their pastor by co-operating with him in his work. We are praying for and expecting a gracious revival.

W. C. HARRIS, P. C.

M'TOMB CITY, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I was in Summit Sunday, April 15, at the close of services of the District Conference. In the morning Bro. Holman gave a very interesting lecture to the Sunday-school children. At eleven o'clock the Bishop preached an interesting sermon. At four o'clock we had a glorious love-feast, conducted by Bro. J. T. Nicholson, and I can say that the spirit of God was with the people on that occasion. I felt greatly renewed in my Christian life, and I felt that the love of God was renewed in the hearts of a great many who were present at the love-feast. The citizens of Summit were very kind to prepare homes for the people who came from a distance, and I tender my thanks to them for their kindness. I hope that this letter will find a place in the ADVOCATE.

Yours truly,

J. T. NEATHERLAND.

WESSON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Wesson and Beauregard contributed $76 as the result of the week of prayer and self-denial. Twenty-two accessions to date.

A Correction.

MR. EDITOR: In a previous issue of the ADVOCATE appeared a letter from me which I fear has given some offense. In the letter I enumerated the different denominations on my circuit and then said: "But Campbellism is more destructive to pure Christianity than all the rest." Some have construed this to mean that all were destructive to pure Christianity, but Campbellism more than the others. I confess my language was unfortunate, ambiguous and calculated to make such an impression, but I assure my friends of other denominations that I did not mean such a thing. My meaning was that Campbellism is a great hindrance to Methodism than all the balance. There are many good Christian people here of the other denominations who live with me with the greatest kindness, and I am truly sorry I have given them any offense. As above stated, I did not mean the least offense to anyone, and, if I have wronged anyone, I beg his pardon and hereby make a public apology for it.

Why People of Sense Act Like Fools.

Meditating on the fact that many a person who is not a fool is nevertheless found on occasion to act like one, I am led to inquire into the causes of this phenomenon. These appear to group themselves under certain heads, which I will herewith set forth in order, as old-fashioned preachers did their hour-long discourses.

And, first, I need only briefly note one of the commonest causes of foolish action and speech, since it is so well known and so simple of apprehension as to call for little comment. Anger being a short madness, it follows that the subject thereof does not see things or persons as they really are. He has lost for a time that power of god-like reason which distinguishes man from the brute.

Secondly, a less obvious cause of folly is the lack in man or woman of what I comprehensively term sensibility, by which I mean the capacity for the more generous emotions of the soul. I shall best illustrate my meaning by an example. Let us imagine a man, A, to be thrown into pretty close relation with another, B; and let us suppose that in this relation the latter displays towards the former an affection and kindness testified to by word and deed. Later on, clouds come over their intercourse, chiefly caused by A's self-regarding consciousness, and inability to comprehend B's disinterested attitude towards himself. Feeling in his own colder nature no glow of regard answering to that bestowed by B, he also experiences not a slight emotion of gratitude for the same; he fails to interpret magnanimously B's words, misjudges his conduct, ungenerously repels his efforts at explanation, and throws away the friendship of a man worth himself ten times over. Can any folly be more self-retributive than to refuse such a jewel when offered?

Thirdly, impulsiveness is the cause of many an unwise speech and action, sadly regretted, perhaps, when reflection follows; and with some persons reflection is apt to come close upon the heels of impulse. If only the impetuous person could have put the curb upon himself, and for one little half-hour taken time to think! This is commonly supposed to belong to youth, but it is in truth more a question of temperament than of years, and there are men and women who retain the fresh force of impulse to the last of life.

Fourthly, a fertile cause of blundering is the habit of being guided by popular formulas and wise saws, instead of trusting to one's own reason and to the unbiased instincts of the heart. This is a sort of folly which alone would furnish matter for lengthy discourse, and is vividly and abundantly illustrated in the world of every day. People will follow words, words; and if once they begin doing so, as it has been said, they never can tell where they will end. "The eyes, the sympathies, even the appetites, know a thing or two" that have never been put into syllogism nor into those phrases of convention and sage maxims whose "narrow truth is but broad falsity." Never to think and to judge for one's self is to give away one's birthright for nothing, and the fatal result thereof to make a man into a fool, when nature did not intend him to be one.

Fifthly, a form of foolishness which some very acute persons are guilty of is the striving too hard for certain things they want, or grasping to get too much of them, whereby they fail to secure any. The unscrupulous selfishness that wastes energy in overreaching its mark is so analogous to another species of folly that the two may come under the same head. If a man is a fool who plays the rogue more actively than is necessary, he is a fool of like quality who sets out to be a knave, and can not decide to be a thorough-paced one. Who wills the end must will the means; he must not lack what may be called immoral courage.

Sixthly, a sagacious person will sometimes behave like a fool by being irritated into arguing with one.

Seventhly, and lastly, people, otherwise sensible enough, but wanting in the sense of humor, may be guilty of any absurdity at any moment of the twenty-four hours. They will put ideas together without a suspicion of their incongruity, gravely place themselves and other people in ridiculous situations, and never be aware that they have done anything amiss.—Atlantic Monthly.

American Bible Society.

The stated meeting of the Board of Managers was held at the Bible House, on Thursday, April 5, 1888, the Hon. E. L. Fancher, president, in the chair.

Religious services were conducted by Secretary Gilman.

The death of the Hon. C. G. Memminger, of Charleston, S. C., was announced, and a committee was appointed to prepare a commemorative minute.

A specimen copy was presented of the complete Bible in Japanese, just printed at Yokahama, with a letter from Mr. Loomis, saying that there is a large demand especially for the Old Testament. 1,600 copies of which were called for within one month after its publication.

Grants of books were made for benevolent distribution at home and in foreign lands, of the aggregate value of about $10,000.

Appropriations of funds were also made for publishing and distributing the Scriptures in foreign countries, to the amount of $17,450, provision being thus made for Bible work during the ensuing year in India, Italy and Siberia, and in the Society's agencies in Persia and Brazil.

Numerous letters from foreign lands were laid before the Board, containing in some cases the summary reports of the distribution of the Scriptures during 1887. Dr. Gulick reported the distribution of 252,915 copies in China and Siam, a larger number than ever before. The Levant agency reported a circulation of 51,000, the Japan agency, 72,926, and the La Plata agency, 18,344, while the distribution in Russia and Siberia was 39,771 copies. Mr. Prince announced that it is yet a matter of suspense whether the sale of Bibles in Esthonia by this Society is to be interfered with by the Russian government.

Seven Bible societies were recognized as auxiliary: two in Kansas, three in Mississippi, and two in South Carolina.

The cash receipts in March from all sources were $69,131 66.

The total cash receipts in the year ending March 31 were $613,373 33.

The issues from the Bible House in March were 106,605 volumes. The whole number of volumes issued from the Bible House during the year, not including those issued in foreign lands, was 1,032,672.

Beginning Family Worship.

A young man of fashion, wealth and education, and high social position, at a midday prayer meeting, felt in himself the hope that maketh not ashamed, realized a Savior precious to his soul. He believed that God, for Christ's sake, had forgiven his sins, and determined that he would acknowledge and honor him everywhere.

The opportunity, the time and place, soon came. He was returning to his home in the evening. "Now," said he, "I must honor and obey God in my family. I must set up family worship."

"Oh! no," said the tempter, "not yet! Don't be in a hurry. Take time. Get a little stronger, and then you can go on better."

"I must begin to-night. I do not know what my wife and sister will say; but it is a duty, and I am resolved to do it, and trust God for the rest. I must pray in my family."

"Not to-night," said the tempter: "you don't know how to pray. You have never prayed much. You are unacquainted with the language of prayer. Wait and learn how first."

"No, no; I must pray to-night. I will pray to-night. Get thee behind me, Satan."

He passed into his dwelling, and into his library, and there, before God, his heavenly Father, and in the name of the Lord Jesus, he poured out his heart, and asked for strength and grace from on high to assist him in his duty.

When he met his wife that evening, she saw at once that a great change had taken place in him, but said nothing. At length he asked her:

"Would you have any objections of our having family worship?"

After a moment's surprise and hesitation, she said with true politeness:

"Certainly not, if it is your pleasure."

"Bring me a Bible then; please, and draw up under the gas-light, and let us read and pray."

He read a chapter, and then kneeled down, but his wife and sister sat upright in their seats, and he felt that he was alone on his knees. He lifted up his eyes to God, and cried out in the bitterness of his soul, "God be merciful to me a sinner." And gathering strength he went on in his prayer, pouring out his most earnest cries and supplications that God would have mercy on his beloved wife and sister. So earnest, so importunate was that prayer that God would show his converting power and grace on the spot, that the heart of his wife was melted and overcome, and she slipped from her seat, upon her knees beside him, and putting her arms around his neck, ere she was aware, she burst out into one agonizing cry to the Lord Jesus for mercy on her soul; and then the sister knelt down by his other side, and she, too, put her arms around him, and burst into a flood of tears.

He continued to pray; he devoted himself and those with him to God. He confessed and bewailed his and their manner of life hitherto; he pleaded the promises of God to all those that seek him, and with unspeakable joy he made mention of the amazing grace of God in the pardon of his sins, and he besought that they all might find and obtain together, peace and forgiveness through a crucified Savior.

The submission was complete; the surrender was fully made; repentance and faith sprang up together in the hearts of all the three, and as they rose from their knees, it was to acknowledge each to the other what new determinations and resolutions and consecrations they each had made during the progress of that first prayer in the family in that parlor, of all they were, and all they would be, or should be, to Christ.

Since that first prayer in the parlor, God has been daily acknowledged in the same place by the same circle.—Presbyterian Advocate.

THE STORY OF TWO NOTES.—The Rev. James Scott said, at once of Mr. Moody's meetings, in Scotland: "There was not far from here a very eloquent minister who used to preach splendid sermons—what could be called philosophical and ethical sermons, but not much of Christ in them.

One day when he was in the pulpit a little note was handed up to him. It contained these words: "Sir, we would see Jesus." The minister thought over the message and could not get it out of his mind. By and by he looked into his sermons, and he found there was not much of Jesus in them, though there was a great deal about other things. He changed his preaching and began telling his congregation all he knew about Christ. He held him up day after day; and some time after he got another little note; it ran thus: "Then were the disciples glad when they saw the Lord."

Chronic Coughs and Colds,

And all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, can be cured by the use of Scott's Emulsion, as it contains the healing virtues of Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites in their fullest form. Is a beautiful creamy Emulsion, palatable as milk; easily digested, and can be taken by the most delicate. Please read: "I consider Scott's Emulsion the remedy par-excellence in Tuberculous and Strumous Affections, to say nothing of ordinary colds and throat troubles." —W. R. S. CONNELL, M. D., Manchester, O.

The wheel of life whirls round, and we with it, expecting that the motion will some day slacken, and that then life may be ordered anew and omissions may be made good. But real wisdom consists in seizing the flying moment and in pressing upon it the seal of the eternal and the enduring: that is the great course of moral endeavor under which life receives its due form, like the block of marble under the hand of the sculptor. The eternal and the enduring here on earth consist in the morally artistic use of time.—Baron Bunsen.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

Briefs.

The best argument in favor of religion is pure, patient, unselfish, loyable, earnest and helpful living. Said a young man who had tried to be an infidel: "I could answer every argument in favor of religion to my own satisfaction, except the consistent living of my own father." The disciple who "photographs in his daily conduct the life which his Master lived" is "an epistle known and read of all men," and in thus "adorning the doctrine of God his Savior" he builds up an argument which all the forces of an unbelieving world can not break down.

An "American Society of Church History" has been recently organized with a constitution and the following officers: President, Dr. Philip Schaff, professor of church history in Union Theological Seminary; vice-presidents, Right Rev. Arthur Cleveland Coxe; Dr. George P. Fisher, of Yale; Dr. Henry M. Dexter, Congregational: Dr. Moffat, of Princeton, Presbyterian; Prof. A. H. Newman, Baptist, of Toronto; secretary, Rev. S. M. Jackson, Presbyterian, New York; and as the additional members of the Council, Dr. Daniel Dorchester, Methodist Episcopal, Boston; Prof. H. M. Scott, of Chicago Theological Seminary; Prof. Ephraim Emerton, of Harvard; and Rev. E. C. Richardson.

We commend the following note from Zion's Herald to all young and ambitious writers:

Macaulay is still the master of style in the use of the English tongue. There is a very interesting article in the same Old Testament Student showing how largely the style of Macaulay was shaped by the Scriptures. Jeffrey said, in an appreciative note to the brilliant essayist when he acknowledged the receipt of the essay on "Milton:" "The more I think, the less I can conceive where you picked up that style." In this Jeffrey shows a lamentable ignorance of the Scriptures; for Macaulay is saturated always in the language, figures and metaphors of the Bible. Indeed, he confesses his obligation in these emphatic words: "A person who professes to be a critic in the delicacies of the English language ought to have the Bible at his fingers' ends."

The Watchman has this:

In his lecture on "The Religions of India," Sir William Hunter, selecting the lieutenant governorship of Bengal as affording the most trustworthy basis of comparison, gives some very encouraging figures as to the progress of Christianity in India. In the nine years preceding 1881, while the general population of that division of India increased 10.89 per cent., the Mohammedan population at the rate of 10.96 per cent., and the Hindoo population at less than 13.64 per cent., the Christians of all races, natives excluded, increased at the rate of 40.71 per cent., and the native Christians at the rate of 64.07 per cent. These figures certainly do not indicate the past or future failure of Christianity in India, and are commended to the careful consideration of those who think, with Canon Taylor, that Mohammedanism is the only successful and conquering form of religion.

The editor returned, May 1, much improved in health and ready for the summer's work. He publishes his gratitude to God for his mercies, and to his brethren who did his work so faithfully while he was away.

The Editor Abroad.

AULD LANG SYNE.

How curious and strange are the meetings and partings in this life! We walk in company with a friend, enjoying "sweet converse together," until we come to the place where our ways part, and we never see each other again! We walk alone, busy with our own plans and thoughts, and, in turning a corner, we meet a friend whom we had not seen for years, and at that meeting all the sacred memories of auld lang syne come crowding up to render the recognition mutually pleasant! I have lately gone through an experience somewhat similar to the last. I have unexpectedly met with a companion of my early days—the companion of my earliest recollection, the boon companion of my boyhood teens. I have thought sometimes that time was "dealing lightly" with me in very many respects. It is true, the furrow has run over brow and cheek, and the silver has sprinkled head and face, but the heart, the seat of life, is as young as ever! Perhaps my readers will be surprised when I tell them that the companion of whom I have spoken shows not a single trace of change in any particular. This is so remarkable that I think it justifies me in introducing this companion to my readers. The companion of my earliest childhood whom I have accidentally met out here in Texas is

WEBSTER'S ELEMENTARY SPELLING-BOOK.

What a crowd of memories come up at the sight of this old companion! The old log school-house with its great dirt chimney and broad fire-place, with its clap-board roof and long narrow window, the shutter to which, when opened, formed the desk where we did our writing, "straight marks and pot-hooks;" and the awful master with his chair and desk in the right-hand corner, near the fire, and the girls, from six to sixteen, on the left, and tow-headed and red-headed and black-headed boys on the right! The writer is one of those wee fellows on the front bench, with his feet swinging clear of the floor, and holding in his hand a "thumb-worn and dog-eared" spelling-book. Well do I remember when I stood trembling before the teacher and for the first time read out, in that loud, solemn and halting tone of voice which is characteristic of every new beginner, the famous sentence:

"She—fed—i-h-e, the—old—hen."

That was my first triumph at learning, and I was as proud of its achievement as it is possible for anyone to be over the grandest successes. The master allowed me to linger over this reading lesson, composed of words of only three letters, until they were almost effaced by the dirt which rubbed off my fingers. My ambition now took a leap forward, and I thought if I could only go to school long enough to reach "baker." I would have gained a vantage-point where all obstacles to my progress in learning would vanish. The five pages between the first reading lesson and "baker" were gone over in much the same way as a woman reads a novel—that is, by taking an occasional peep into the back part of the book to see how the thing is to wind up. Ah, the discovery I made in the back of that spelling-book gave a fresh impetus to my zeal! Those pictures of a mastiff with a "large head and pendent ears," and a stag "bearing a noble attire of horns," and those "nimble squirrels using their paws as little boys use their hands," so completely captured my young fancy that, while I ought to have been studying out "Ann can hem my new cap," I was gloating in delight over my stealthy peeps into that forbidden region. How I envied the boy who read to me the account of the "young sauce-box up the old man's apple tree stealing apples!" It was a delightful effort of my imagination to listen to the old man trying to coax him down, first by words and then by "turfs of grass, which only made the youngster laugh;" but I was carried away with admiration when the old gentleman finally poured such a shower of stones into that tree as to make the young fellow hasten down and beg his pardon.

In due time "baker" was safely reached, and then the start was made for "botany," and thence to "aerial," and thence to "cotemporary," and thence to "materiality," and thence to "immateriality," and thence to "unintelligibility." By this time the book was read and spelled pretty well through. The reading matter consisted principally in definitions of the words spelled, so that as we went along we learned the meaning of a great many words as well as how to spell them. Some of these sentences I have never forgotten, and one of them has acted all through my life as a foil against one of the commonest superstitions. That sentence is this: "Friday is just as lucky a day as any other." That has clung to me as a truth ever since I read it first in Webster's Spelling-Book. What a time we used to have over this book when the master anuounced early in the week that we would have a spelling-match Friday evening! Every spare minute was given to studying what we considered the hard words, and trying to "catch" one another. I suppose there were but few hard words which most of the scholars could not spell readily. As for that outlandish word, "phthisic," all, from the least to the greatest, could spell that. I recollect on one occasion we had made special preparations for the match by diligent study, and, when the time came, sides were chosen and the battle began. Back and forth the teacher took us through that book, each side losing, and the spellers lessening in number until there were left three of the largest boys and one little girl. The boys' cheeks glowed with the certainty of speedy victory, but the little black eyes of the girl flashed defiance back at them. For a long time—and it was a time of breathless interest—each side held its own, but, alas! there are some things the boy-nature and the man-nature can not learn, and which the female-nature seems to know by intuition, and little Martha Cowper, true to the instincts of her sex, floored every one of those big boys on the word "millinery."

Ah, how the different masters who taught in that school-house, and the boys and girls who composed that school, crowd around me as I turn over the pages of this old book! The teachers: Brown, Russell, Finch, Mellen, Chapman, Hamilton, Dew, Harper; the children: Browns, Myers, Hays, Whites, Reddens, Nesoms, Bowmans, Hoovers, Richardsons, Kendricks, Harpers! I live over again those sunny days of boyhood, and involuntarily hum over the old song:

"Oh, would I were a boy again,
When life seemed formed of sunny years,
When all I knew of grief or pain
Was washed away in transient tears."

The image of one boy has followed me all along life's pathway. He was not much of a student, but he was the head and front in all sports and mischief. He had no fear of school-master before his eyes. He would stand and take the severest flogging without a flinch or a bat of the eye. He had, however, a mortal dread of a doctor. On one occasion, being quite sick, the doctor was sent for, and when Frank heard some one say, "Yonder comes the doctor," in terror he jumped out of bed and fled under the house, whence he was dislodged only by a succession of brickbats sent with vigor from his father's hand! I remember, too, how, on one occasion, when the master refused a respectful request for two weeks' holiday at Christmas time, the big boys waylaid him on his way home, and took him down to the creek with the intention of "ducking a holiday out of him." He held out stoutly until he was just on the point of being cast into the ice-cold water, when he yielded gracefully, and we had a glorious time of merry-making.

Oh, those childhood school-days in the old log school-house! how "painfully pleasing" are the memories of them! The masters are all gone except one, the children are nearly all gone, the days are "Gone glimmering through the dreams of things that were—

A school-boy's tale, the wonder of an hour."

My apology to my readers for the foregoing is, that it will recall to thousands the blessed memories of childhood, and if, as the poet says, "it is wise to talk with our past hours," then—"the fond recollection of youthful companions and innocent joy" which this scribble has brought to mind may be an incentive to seek again the innocence and trust which filled our youthful hearts in those glad days, and thus help us in our maturity to become "like little children that we may inherit the kingdom of Heaven."

Missionary Assessments.

In another column appears an article from a distinguished Georgia preacher, who proposes what we consider a ruinous novelty in missionary finances. His zeal for the best results is so transparent that it is a pity he should have damaged his cause by a reference to the assessments decreasing the salaries of the preachers and discouraging the people, for those facts militate not against the assessments, but the large contributions they elicit. What he objects to as a disadvantage is in reality a commendation of the present plan. The inequality of local apportionments is a matter that belongs not to the Board of Missions, but to the district stewards, and is purely local in its character. The admission also that "much of our gain has come from churches which have gone beyond the sums fixed by the Boards" concedes the limiting tendency of the assessments only on the lower line, while in the opposite direction there exists all possible freedom for the spontaneous overflowing of beneficence. We are mystified by the statement that, in view of the exigencies upon the church and the unwillingness of the people to respond to a double assessment, which would not more than meet the demands upon them made by a gracious Providence, we should abolish the assessments and work the enthusiasm of benevolence up to the point of a doubled, though invisible, assessment. This would certainly not comport with the frankness our people are accustomed to, and in the end—and that not very remote—would create a ruinous distrust in all our appeals for money. No plan can be operated without friction, because the obstruction is not an administrative one, but a spiritual. If missionary intelligence were general, and all our people had such a quality of love for the Savior as he had for them, when "though rich he became poor that they through his poverty might be made rich," there would be no friction in working with or without assessments. The proposed plan would introduce unheard-of friction, and probably would render the machinery inoperative.

We do most heartily appreciate Dr. Wadsworth's enthusiasm in this, the livest interest of Christianity, and we have a profound respect for his devotion, talent and success as a minister; but our confidence that his plan would defeat the object in view induces us to urge the following objections:

1. It will confuse the preacher, the people and the Missionary Board. The obligations of the Board, yet undischarged, rest upon collections confidently expected from experience in working assessments; and a change like this must be made after preparation. With the preacher the recollection of past expectations and failures, and the cry from the congregation for retrenchment, mingling with plaintive appeals from our missions for expansion, will perplex and disorder his plans.

2. The missionaries now in the field will inevitably suffer before the people have been brought up to the standard of to-day, for a decidence in the present volume is apparent to everyone who has observed the difficulty in getting the present amounts from our fields of labor. It is an open secret that, from either timidity or carelessness, there are many preachers who need the spur of a specific assessment and the authority of a Conference apportionment to induce even a perfunctory collection for this cause. If every preacher did his full duty, the burden would not be so heavy on the faithful ones. Then, too, many of our people give not as an act of faith, but in token of their sympathy for a good cause or a fear of endangering its success by their illiberality. With them the measure of the demands made upon them by authorities who have studied the work and have entered into financial obligations for its success is the measure of their duty.

3. It is defective in its business-like definiteness and system. Men of business habits do not, and ought not to give without reference to the amount to be raised. A variety of important calls for money compels an intelligent use of means. Now, just as soon as the total amount of our collections becomes uncertain, as it immediately will on the change proposed, we must base the employment of new missionaries, the continuance of the old and the inauguration of new enterprises upon funds actually on hand. With the present system, though we anticipate the collections in planning the year's work, our faith is not altogether planted in the air, since by experience we have learned something of the proportion between assessments and receipts.

4. This plan is an anomaly in that financial system which pervades every branch of our work. The salaries of Bishops, presiding elders, pastors, and the support of widows, orphans and superannuates are estimated in advance, and assessments are made to cover them. The same principle obtains in the field of domestic missions and church extension.

5. It is, of course, impracticable for the Board of Missions to "take off the assessments," for they are made in accordance with the requirements of the General Conference.

Emerson's receipt for reforming the world, if put in practical operation, would, we think, work a complete revolution in State and Church affairs. It is very simple, too, and can be easily tested. It is this: "The best way to reform the world is to commence with number one. Surely there would then be one less villain in the world."

The Presbyterians (North) set out last May to raise for home missions $800,000 and the secretaries of the Board report $783,527. This is about $130,000 more than was raised last year.

Notes.

THE NEW REGIME.—Probably at no time since the war have we had as good a class of men from this city in our Legislature, and in all the State and municipal offices. It remains to be seen whether they will do better six months hence than their predecessors. We are hopeful, however, and shall look for the appearance of a new element in our civil affairs—the element of conscience, acting under the "sleepless eye," and looking forward to a throne which, without respect of persons, metes out doom "according to that a man hath done." We shall expect to see morals take precedence of money, at least, in questions of universal interest and importance, and shall look for the enforcement of law, and not its defiance, by the officials. We do not look for a preacher's enthusiasm in suppression of wrong-doing, but we have a right to expect common honesty, truthfulness, courage and constancy in lines of conduct prescribed by the statutes.

The steward's work is often more laborious than need be. Some church members take no pains to have their dues ready, and require frequent calls from the stewards. Are you one of this neglectful class? The steward is not paid for this service which you make so laborious, but is sometimes blamed for his zeal. Ought you not to hunt him rather than let him hunt you. Come, brother, be fair.

The following item clipped from an exchange does not say whether the parties live in Mississippi or Louisiana. It is so beautiful an instance of liberality that it would afford us pleasure to be able to locate the parties. Will the brethren please give us information?

A man and his wife, both professing holiness, with a farm worth $4,000, clear of debt, quite well stocked, and some money ahead, paid $4 in one year for the support of the preacher.

Rev. Dr. A. S. Andrews, president of the Southern University, at Greensboro, Ala., gives the cheering news of a great revival among the students of that institution: "Of 230 matriculates there remain not more than ten who have not joined some church or are not now subjects of converting grace." Of the senior class, numbering twenty-eight, all but three are Christians, and two of the others are penitents. In view of the fact that many students halt their studies unexpectedly, is it safe for their preceptors to send them home unconverted? In too many schools what is done for the salvation of scholars must be done quickly. Professor ——, you have impressed the studies upon your class, maybe have also impressed your individuality, will you not spare a little time to impress the Savior upon their characters.

A recent decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania invests the saloon keeper with some responsibility as well as privilege in the use of the State license. He is put in the same category as the hotel keeper and made responsible for the treatment his guest receives upon his premises. This is intended to protect the drinker from cruel and vindictive assaults from employees of the saloon, and from drunken desperadoes, whose excitement and phrensy have been obtained from the saloon counter. If the saloonist in this section can be made responsible for the murders, robberies perpetrated, the arson and treason hatched and just awakened at their counters, as they ought to be, the saloon will have little disposition to ask indemnity for prohibition success, which diminishes their trade and depreciates their property. And why should he not be?

The city of Lincoln, Neb., has gotten from its forty saloons $40,000 for the use of its schools. That is to say, the saloon agrees to pay $1,000 a year to the children for the privilege of debauching and impoverishing their parents, with an occasional lad or two thrown in for good measure. The like amount is paid by the Louisiana Lottery to the Charity Hospital, for the relief of a few of the sick and poor, on the condition that it shall have unlimited opportunity to deceive, defraud and rob the people of the whole of the United States. It is a miserable comment on the lack of penetration in a people who can deliberately make a bargain by which the unfortunate must give away several millions presently, and everything eventually, to get 40,000 a year. If it is the blindest fatality which, for $40,000 a year, will charter a corporation whose necessities require it to corrupt the Legislature, subsidize the press, tyrannize over the municipal officials, deceive and bleed its poor, and whose nature it is to teach idleness, improvidence, profligacy and dishonesty to all the citizens of a struggling State. Will the new officials give the people a free ballot and a fair count when this infamous charter comes up for a new lease of life, or will the people be counted out, and the lottery counted in, as we believe was formerly done?

The Baptists are undoubtedly able to erect such a monument, and it would favorably affect all their enterprises and their denominational spirit. OUR ANNUAL MEETING.

ATTENDANCE.

The attendance was large, but not as full as last year.

Miss Lucinda B. Helm, general secretary of the Woman's Department, was with us throughout the meeting, and gave much valuable information of her work, the details of which will be found incorporated in the reports and resolutions which are to follow.

REPORTS OF OFFICERS.

The secretary of the Board and the secretary of the Woman's Department and the treasurer of the Board each submitted a lengthy annual report, the substance of which may be gathered from the following abstract of the church extension work of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1888:

Total cash paid by the church last year on all accounts	42,342 95
Increase during this year	$15,659 66

CHURCHES AND PARSONAGES HELPED.

Both Boards helped this year 295 churches, paying them	$54,381 91
Both Boards helped last year 232 churches, paying them	46,812 33
Showing an increase of 62 churches and increased payments of	4,539 58
The General Board has helped this year 6 parsonages, paying them	1,300 00
The Conference Boards helped this year 17 parsonages, paying them	828 69
Both Boards have helped this year 23 parsonages, paying them	2,128 69

WOMAN'S DEPARTMENT.

The above items relating to the parsonage work were culled from Miss Helm's report, which showed in addition as the number of parsonage societies, 214; of members of parsonage societies, 3,511; juvenile auxiliaries, 61; added to the Sabbath-schools, 171.

COMMENDATORY.

At the close of Miss Helm's report, on motion of Bishop Hendrix, seconded by Dr. O. P. Fitzgerald, the Board, by a unanimous rising vote, adopted the following:

Resolved, That the Board of Church Extension express their appreciation of the valuable work of the women of the church in behalf of the parsonage movement under the leadership of Miss Lucinda B. Helm, and we earnestly commend this valuable work to the sympathy and co-operation of all the preachers.

APPLICATIONS.

Out of the 222 applications before us we could grant only 96, leaving 126 for which we could do nothing, as the money in hand and in prospect during the year did not justify us in voting another dollar; and many worthy churches, which we would gladly have helped, were of necessity left out.

APPROPRIATIONS.

Grants were made to eighty churches: In donations, $31,000; loans, $15,000; both, $46,000. Grants were also made to sixteen parsonages: In donations absolute, $500; contingent, $1,900; loans, $1,200; all together, $3,600. These churches and parsonages are scattered through nineteen States, five territories, and the republic of Mexico.

SPECIAL COLLECTIONS FOR PARSONAGES.

Resolved, That the Bishops and secretary be, and they are hereby, authorized and requested to take collections and receive money for buying and building special parsonages, all such sums to be reported and paid to this Board and disbursed by it.

Resolved, That the collections taken up by the Bishops and secretary in behalf of the Parsonage Fund for special cases be remitted to the secretary of this Board as collected; and should the whole amount in any instance not be raised, the amount actually collected shall be paid over at the discretion of the Committee on Applications.

LARGER LOTS FOR CHURCHES.

Resolved, That, in his correspondence with persons asking aid from this Board in the erection of churches, the secretary be, and is hereby, instructed to impress upon them the importance of securing building lots of ample size, as well as convenience of location.

LARGER COLLECTIONS URGED.

Resolved, That, in view of the multiplied applications for aid to this Board, and our inability to meet many cases of a very needy and pressing character, we urge upon the church the importance of extraordinary effort to raise the full amount of assessments for church extension during the incoming year.

OUR WORK IN FOREIGN FIELDS.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this Board that, until the next General Conference, its operations be confined within the limits of the United States of America; but nothing in this resolution shall forbid it using any donations specifically made for foreign funds.

ASSESSMENT FOR NEXT YEAR.

The following are the assessments for Conference year 1888–9:

1. Alabama Conference	$ 4,000
2. Arkansas Conference	1,305

Special Notices.

EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE.

For satisfactory reasons the proposed Educational Conference, called to convene at Nashville, May 7, has been postponed for the present. This notice has been deferred to so late a date in order that consultation might be had with persons interested in the matter. The interest manifested by so many of our representative educators is suspicious of a profitable convention at a future time.

LOUISIANA W. C. T. U.

Through a misunderstanding as to the time that the Legislature was to convene, the Annual Convention of the Louisiana Woman's Christian Temperance Union was called for May 11–13. It is now thought best to postpone it until June 8, 9 and 10.

MARY R. GOODALE,
Cor. Sec., Louisiana W. C. T. U.

Captain Force and Guy Norton returned last Tuesday evening from their Southern trip, after making purchases at Crowley, La. Mr. Norton purchased a fine farm near the town, and Capt. Force secured a small tract in the city and will engage in fruit raising and fancy gardening. They expect to return in a few months to make it their permanent home.—St. Paul (Neb.) Phonograph.

Items of Interest.

The Missionary Reporter says: "After adding returns from the Baltimore Conference, which have reached this office since the close of our fiscal year—but in justice to that Conference, and its marked liberality should be included—the receipts of the year amount to $231,863 65. The largest in the history of our church; the year most nearly approximating this was the fiscal year ending April 1, 1886, amounting to $221,627 58.

The missionary work of the world now includes 100 societies—fifty American and fifty European—which report an income of $9,723,850, of which $4,120,613 came from America.

In three States—Georgia, South Carolina and Louisiana—negroes pay taxes on $48,000,000 worth of property.

The New York Herald, commenting upon the mortality of that city, points out that the present winter has been a very fatal one, the extreme cold having slain thousands of people. Take, for instance, the month of January. Out of 3,435 deaths, 1,567, or 42 per cent., were due to diseases of the respiratory organs, croup, diphtheria and consumption, more or less produced by the cold weather. In Brooklyn the mortality was even higher, the deaths being 736 in a total of 1,589.

Outside of Alaska there are now 200,000,000 acres of forest standing in the United States, which is over eight acres for each man, woman and child. The area of forest lands in some of the New England States, and under the fostering care of tree claim laws, and the interest of individual owners of land in the newer States, it is said that 100,000 square miles of almost treeless prairies have been reversed since their settlement.

The annual meeting of the Board of Church Extension was held in Louisville, April 12–15. The lack of sufficient funds to meet demands has greatly retarded its movements; but a gratifying report of increased collections and distributions was made. An example of the courtesy of conscience was given in an agreement by which all the Louisville collections were bestowed upon the Board of Missions, and the collections to be taken in Nashville in May go to the Church Extension Board.

Dr. Howard Crosby, pastor of Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, in New York, has just celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of his installation as pastor. During these years the regular congregational expenses and its charitable collections have each averaged $15,000 annually. He has in the same time received into his church 2,305 members—1,328 on profession and 977 by certificate—an average of 92 annually.

Church Extension.

To the Preachers of North Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: I am requested by the treasurer of our Board to ask you to send the money you collect for this cause to him instead of sending it directly to Louisville. Only half of it goes to the Parent Board; and when it is sent there, one part has to be sent back. So you see it causes unnecessary trouble and creates confusion in keeping the account. Sometimes the receipt from the Parent Board does not reach our treasurer until after he has submitted his annual report to the Conference. Please give attention to this, and, brethren, please push this collection. It is doing a great work for the cause of God. Churches are being built in sections through the agency of the Church Extension Board, where every previous effort has failed. Respectfully,

THOS. Y. RAMSEY,
Pres. Bd. Ch. Ex.

DERANT, Miss., April 25, 1888.

The Proudest Flag on Earth.

Is the title of a New National Song and March, by Messrs. O. O. Hall and J. Winchell Forbes, and published by the John Church Company, of Cincinnati. The flag referred to is, of course, the glorious "Stars and Stripes," and a large, colored standard adorns the title page and fills nearly all of it. The music is very catchy and bright, sparkling with enthusiasm, and is bound to become the popular song of the day. There is already a great demand for it; all the orchestras in the Theatres and Concert Halls of Cincinnati giving it prominence on their programmes. The words are easily remembered, well fitted to the music and exceedingly patriotic in tone. Price, 40 cents, sent by mail, postpaid. For sale by music dealers generally.

The Christian Index has this:

Considering a church, not as an aggregate of persons, but as an aggregate of activities and sacrifices for Christ, a church almost wholly dies sometimes in the dying of one or two members.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

Our Young People.

NESTING-TIME.

BY GEORGE COOPER.

Robin with his breast of flame
Pipes up in the apple tree;
"Dear old boughs, you're still the same,
In your arms our nest shall be!"
Robin and his gentle mate
Rustle down the small breeze;
"Nesting-time will never wait;
Work," pipes he; "then take our ease!
A wee thread here, a wee straw there,
And now a tiny feather;
And that's a nest, all snug and fair,
For any kind of weather!"

Robin, from his airy perch,
Sees the storm that gathers nigh;
Chilly winds, with eager search,
Into nooks and crannies pry.
Toss the tree-tops in delight—
All things on their way modest;
Robin sees them in their flight
Tear apart his pretty nest!
A wee thread here, a wee straw there,
And now a tiny feather;
Alas, the nest so snug and fair,
For any kind of weather!

Robin pipes unto his mate:
"Storms like this will be soon be past!
For a better day we'll wait;
Sunshine always comes at last!
Tho' our home lies scattered, dear,
Keep good heart, and do our best!
Oh, we'll finish, never fear,
Just in time our cosy nest!
A wee thread here, a wee straw there,
And now a tiny feather;
We'll have a nest, all snug and fair,
For any kind of weather!"

MR. EDITOR: I write a few lines to your paper, as my little friends will like to read something about Summit Methodist Episcopal Church, and what a good time we have had during the District Conference, with Bishop J. C. Keener, D. D., in the chair. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. H. D. Howells, on Thursday, at 7:45 P. M. On Friday, at 11 o'clock, a sermon was preached by Rev. P. A. Johnston; at 5:30 o'clock an essay was read by Rev. T. B. Holloman; at 7:45 o'clock, Rev. W. B. Lewis, of Canton, preached from II Corinthians ii, 2. Saturday, at 7:45 P. M., T. L. Mellen, of Wesson, preached from II Kings xx, 19. On Sunday morning, at ten o'clock, the Sunday-school was addressed by the Rev. T. B. Holloman, and I must say it was a good one, and very interesting to old and young. At 11 o'clock Bishop Keener preached to a large audience; at 4 o'clock we had a delightful love-feast, conducted by Rev. J. T. Nicholson; at 7:45 a delightful sermon was preached by Rev. T. B. Holloman. I think all the preachers were present except one, Rev. W. B. Hines, who was detained on account of sickness. I will close for fear I will tire my little readers.

Your little friend,

SALLIE SEAMAN.

SUMMIT, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little school boy. Mr. Belford is my Sunday-school teacher. I like him very much. Mr. J. W. Bailey is Sunday-school superintendent. Papa takes your paper; so should every member of the Methodist Episcopal Church. I will answer Pagie Hester's question: "Apple tree" is found in Songs of Solomon ii, 3; viii, 5, and Joel i, 12. I will close by asking the little folks where in the Bible is "speckle bird" found?

Your little friend,

POPE JOHNSON.

ACONA, Mississippi.

Under the Shadow.

"No," said the lawyer: "I shan't press your claim against that man, you can get some one else to take the case, or you can withdraw, just as you please."

"Think there's any money in it?"

"There would probably be some money in it, but it would come from the sale of the little house the man occupies and calls 'home;' but I don't want to meddle with the matter, anyhow."

"Got frightened out of it, eh?"

"No; I wasn't frightened."

"I suppose the old fellow begged hard to be let off."

"Well, yes, he did."

"And you caved, likely?"

"No; I didn't speak a word."

"Oh! he did all the talking, eh?"

"Yes."

"What did you do?"

"I believe I shed a few tears."

"And the old fellow begged you very hard, you say?"

"No; I didn't say so. He didn't speak a word to me."

"Well, may I inquire whom he did address in your hearing?"

"God Almighty."

"Ah! he took to praying, did he?"

"Not for my benefit in the least. You see, I found the little house easily enough, and knocked on the outer door, which stood ajar, but nobody heard me; so I stepped into the little hall, and saw through a crack of the door a cosy sitting-room; and there on a bed, with her silver head high on pillows, was an old lady who looked for all the world just as my mother did the last time I saw her on earth. Well, I was on the point of knocking, when she said: 'Come, father, now begin.' And then down on his knees by her side went an old white-headed man, still older than his wife. I should judge; and I couldn't have knocked then for the life of me. Well, he began: first, he reminded God that they were still his submissive children, mother and he, and no matter what he saw fit to bring upon them they shouldn't rebel at his will. Of course it was going to be very hard for them to go out homeless in their old age, especially with the poor mother, so sick and helpless, and, O, how different it might have been if only one of their boys had been spared to them! Then his voice broke, and a thin, white hand stole from under the coverlet and moved softly over his snowy hair; then he went on to repeat that nothing could be so sharp again as the parting with those three sons—unless mother and he should be separated; but at last he fell to comforting himself with the fact that the dear Lord knew it was through no fault of his own that mother and he were threatened with the loss of their little home, that meant beggary and the almshouse—a place they prayed to be delivered from entering if it could be consistent with God's will; and then he quoted a multitude of promises concerning the safety of those who put their trust in the Lord. In fact, it was the most thrilling plea that I ever listened to; and at last he prayed for God's blessing upon those who were about to demand justice." The lawyer continued more slowly than ever: "And—I—believe—I'd rather go to the poorhouse myself, to-night, than to stain my hands with the blood of such a prosecution as that."

"A little afraid to defeat the old man's prayer, eh?"

"Bless your soul, man, you couldn't defeat it," said the lawyer. "I tell you he left it all subject to the will of God; but he claimed that we were told to make known our desires to God; and of all the pleading I ever heard, that beat all. You see, I was taught that kind of thing myself, in childhood, and why I was sent to hear that prayer, I'm sure I don't know; but I hand the case over."

"I wish you hadn't told me about that old man's prayer," remarked the client, twisting about uneasily.

"Why so?"

"Well, because I want the money the place would bring, but I was taught the Bible straight when I was a youngster, and I'd hate to run counter to that you tell me about. I wish you hadn't heard a word of it and another time I wouldn't listen to petitions not intended for my ears."

The lawyer smiled.

"My dear fellow," he said, "you are wrong again; it was intended for my ears, and your ears, too, my friend; and it was God Almighty who intended it. My dear old mother used to sing a song about God's moving in a mysterious way, that I remember."

"Well, my dear mother used to sing it, too," said the client, and he twisted his claim papers in his fingers. "You call in the morning, if you like, and tell 'mother and him' that the claim has been met."

"'In a mysterious way,'" added the lawyer, smiling.—New York Witness.

How to Secure and Maintain Health.

When Hon. W. E. Dodge was interviewed as to his views concerning the best methods of promoting health and perpetuating life, he replied in the following plain words:

Dear Sir: You ask me to give you my views as to the best method of promoting health and perpetuating life.

You know my views as to temperance, and I can only say that fifty years' experience and observation confirm the opinion that total abstinence from the use of alcoholic drinks is best for the promotion of permanent health.

Regular, systematic employment, aided by outdoor exercise, is a great preserver of health.

A cheerful disposition, which trusts in God's kind providence, and discharges daily duty, leaving results in his hands, is another preventive influence.

A regular hour for meals, as far as possible, and an early retirement for rest, and rising generally with the sun, are also to be recommended.

Every man, by careful watching, learns what kinds of food do not agree with him, and are not easily digested; and, if he desires good health, must avoid them.

Never allow a day to pass without a regular discharge from the bowels, and have some regular hour for this duty and the system will respond to it. No one can have permanent good health who neglects this.

Watch against colds by keeping out of drafts, and never allow a cold or cough to continue without prompt attention.

Be careful to keep the feet dry and warm, and the head cool.

Above all, have the great work for eternity done and settled by repentance, faith and trust in the Lord Jesus Christ, so that the mind may be at rest, and not constantly anxious about death and its consequences.

The following, which I cut from a paper, has been repeated hundreds of times, and has been of great comfort to me, and is a good receipt for long life and health:

"Make a firm-built fence of trust
All around to-day.
Fill it up with useful work,
And within it stay.
Look not through the sheltering bars
Anxious for the morrow.
God will help, whatever comes,
Be it joy or sorrow."

HOW TO GROW TOMATOES IN PERFECTION.—Because the generous nature of the tomato yields bountifully with seemingly little care and attention, the general impression prevails that the plant requires but little attention. This is a sad mistake, for there is not a vegetable in the garden that is so gross a feeder, nor one that so readily pays for all the food and care given as the tomato. To grow it to the greatest perfection, the hills should be dug out to the depth of two and a half feet; at the bottom there should be a half bushel of well-rotted manure; above this let the soil be an equal mixture of loam and manure thoroughly mixed. The hills should be at least six feet apart. Let the situation be open, warm, airy. When the fruit begins to set mulch with clean straw or very small brush. Under these conditions six plants will furnish sufficient tomatoes for a family of twelve persons. Whatever variety may be planted in this manner, the result will show specimens for size, smoothness, and excellent properties, unknown to the variety when grown in the ordinary manner.—American Agriculturist.

P. B. Danner says in the National Stockman of a cholera remedy: I feel it my duty to give a remedy we have used six or seven years, and which we can recommend as the best we have been able to get in eighteen years. Take equal amounts of alum, resin, flour of sulphur, and Cayenne pepper, say 1 pound each; give tablespoonful to each 12 or 15 fowls in moistened wheat bran once a day for three days at a time when any symptoms appear. We seldom lose any chickens by cholera.

A Kentucky lady says: I have some pure-bred bronze gobblers, nine months old, that weigh 21 pounds. Have one 18 months old that weighs 45 pounds. Can any of your readers beat them? A pair at Paris, Kentucky, shipped to England, weighed, gobbler 52 pounds, hen 48. No State can beat old Kentucky for fine stock.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be denominated ornamental, personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stumpy mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmittou, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor, it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hanly, Delavan, Ill.

THOMPSON—SISTER N. C. THOMPSON was born June 30, 1828; was married to Benjamin Thompson, July 10, 1845, and departed this life, near old Mount Zion Church, March 5, 1888. A short time after she was married she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was happily converted. She had strong decision of character, was true to her convictions and resolute to do at all times what she thought was right. She was quiet, unassuming, consistent, cheerful. No one ever exerted a greater influence over a family than she did over hers; indeed, her chief excellence was in the domestic circle. She was a devoted mother, diligent and successful in managing the affairs of the household. Her children loved and honored her. They ministered to her wants with the most tender affection, and now she is gone they miss her counsels, the sunshine of her face, her good-night kiss, and her fervent prayers. She was a woman of deep piety. In health she enjoyed the presence of her Savior, and in sickness he was her comfort. Her faith failed her not. She loved her church and did what she could to support its institutions. She was an active member, ever working for the interest of the church. Her door was ever open to the pastor and his family. She was a pure, good woman and loved by all who knew her. Though dead, she yet speaketh. God bless the ten children she has left behind.

J. H. EVANS.

BRYANT—BRO. JOHN N. BRYANT was born in Wilkinson county, March 23, 1830, and died in the same county, March 17, 1888, of typhoid fever. In 1851 he joined the Methodist Church. The year following, at a meeting at Macedonia Church, he found peace with God. From that time he has been a consistent and zealous member of the church. Most of this time he has acted in the capacity of both steward and Sunday-school superintendent. In these offices he did all in his power to further the Master's cause. His heart was in the work. He was a warm friend to the preachers. I shall never forget the warm cordiality with which he cared for this preacher and his family for near a month, while the parsonage was being repaired. During my stay with him I do not remember to have heard him use an uncharitable expression concerning anyone. Everyone who knew him liked him. Mysterious indeed are God's providences. When, just rising to be a tower of strength and influence for good in the church, and, ere he had reached the prime of his young manhood, God sent the angel of death and removed the workman from his labor. When asked how it was with him, he replied: "All is well." Thus he finished his brief course. He leaves a wife and little girl to mourn his death. May God's sustaining grace support them in this hour of affliction and bereavement!

M. H. MOORE.

CONERLY—COL. JAMES CONERLY was born in Marion county, Miss., February 7, 1831, and died December 25, 1887, in Tyler Town, Pike county, Miss. Bro Conerly was of Methodist parentage, and was united in holy wedlock, October 20, 1853, to Miss Mary Lamkin, who was also of Methodist parentage, with whom he lived in harmony for thirty-five years. He was the father of six children, all of whom he lived to see arrive at years of maturity, save one who died in infancy. He and his wife joined our church at China Grove in 1855 or '56, and since that time have been regular attendants on church ordinances. His children are all Methodists. He was buried with Masonic honors in Tyler Town, Miss., December 26, 1887. In the death of Bro. Conerly the church sustains a great loss; but, doubtless, what is our loss is his gain. We tender our heartfelt sympathies to the bereaved wife and family.

MORTON—MATILDA WHITFIELD MORTON was born in Putnam county, Ga., in 1809. She was the daughter of Benjamin and Sarah Whitfield, and was married to John Morton, July 26, 1827. On the night of January 30, 1888, in Columbus, Miss., the silver cord was suddenly loosed, and she entered into her eternal rest. For many years she had lived in close communion with Christ. Her life was quiet, modest, beautiful; blessing the world as the flowers bless the eyes of man. Her mind was strong and practical, making her, in her long widowhood, the counselor and stay of her household. She was constantly in her place in the class meeting during the two years I was her pastor. Looking back over the ten years which have elapsed since then, the sweet tones of her voice, as with the simplicity of a child, she testified to her love for her Savior and her trust in his guiding hand, are heard again and thrill anew in the soul a desire to be like her in spirit. She had the esteem of all who knew her, and the sincere love of a large circle of friends. For over eight years she was confined within the limits of her home; but, patient and uncomplaining, she remained, as in health, a blessing to all about her. As I told her good-bye, at the close of a visit during the last Christmas, I asked if the "way was bright ahead." Her lips quivered, a heavenly light seemed suddenly to come into her face, and, with a pressure upon my hand I can feel now, she answered, "Yes, very bright." In a month more she had gone to take her place amid the blood-washed throng. May our Father comfort those who are left to mourn so great a loss!

W. W. WADSWORTH.

HOLMES—SISTER NANCY ELIZABETH HOLMES was born, December 28, 1854, in Marion county, Miss. She was the oldest daughter of John M. and Lucinda Conerly; was married to Bro. Wesley Holmes in February, 1880, and died March 27, 1888. Sister Holmes was of Methodist parentage and joined the Methodist Church at China Grove, in July, 1874, under Bro. H. T. Lewis' pastorate. She has proven herself a most zealous Christian ever since she joined the church. She leaves three of her own children between the ages of two and five years. She proved herself a loving stepmother and devoted wife. She was a patient sufferer, for more than a year, under that treacherous disease, consumption. Her mother preceded her to the kingdom only three years. It was the pastor's happy privilege to visit Sister Holmes several times during her illness. At first she seemed to have some doubts, and hated to leave her little ones; but the last time he visited her (two weeks before her death) she was perfectly reconciled, and to use her own language, "There was not a shadow between her and heaven." She asked us to sing, "I would not live alway," with the chorus, "Home, sweet home," and several others, after which Bro. Mack Conerly and pastor both prayed for the patient sufferer. After we had finished, she raised herself in bed and gave vent to shouts of thanksgiving and praise. A few moments before her death, she told her father: "I'm so happy; I am all right." Sister Lou Holmes jubilee, "You are now crossing the river." "Yes, I go slow; but darling is waiting for me." We condole with the bereaved family and friends of Sister Holmes. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

SPEECHLESS MUSIC.—But if there is no music in nature there is a prophecy and some hint and even faint articulation of it. In a favoring spot an echo often starts another echo, but an octave above, and in rare places still answering echoes not only on the same key, but always in harmony, softer and sweeter. This is almost music, and seems a call to man to liberate it from the prison of matter and suffer it to become the harmony it is striving to express—reminding one of that striking passage of Goethe's child correspondent: "When I stand all alone at night in open nature, I feel as though it were a spirit and begged redemption of me. Often have I had the sensation, as if nature, in wailing sadness, entreated something of me, so that not to understand what she longed cut through my very heart."

The child uttered the deepest philosophy and touched the very secret of creation—even this, that God is not above creation as a mechanician, but is in it by indwelling presence, one with its laws, himself the secret energy of its processes and the soul of the sentiments and thoughts lodged within it, and so coming to man for recognition. There is no fuller revelation of God in nature than is found in these laws of sound, by which he comes into the very heart of man, even to its utmost recesses of love and adoration, and it requires only a sensitive, child-like heart to interpret this speechless music locked within nature as the voice of God pleading to be let out into music and praise through the heart of man, for so only can his works praise him.—Rev. Dr. Munger.

FAULTS of digestion cause disorders of the liver, and the whole system becomes deranged. Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier perfect the process of digestion and assimilation, and thus makes pure blood.

Rev. Dr. Bell, Editor of the Mid-Continent, Kansas City, Mo., says in its issue of Oct. 1st, 1887:

It is to be believed that Dr. Shallenberger, of Rochester, Pa., has a sure remedy for Fever and Ague. A gentleman in our employ suffered greatly from Malaria, and tried many remedies to no purpose; when, seeing this antidote advertised, tried it, was immediately relieved, and finally cured. This was two years since, and he has had no return of his trouble.

Discoveries in Electricity.

Prof. Elisha Gray, a hitherto unheard-of electrician, of Highland Park, Ill., has just announced the completion of a new communicating medium which bids fair to do more toward depreciating the stock of the Bell telephone monopoly than the earnest efforts of a large and imposing array of legal talent before the United States court has been able to do. By this invention the inventor claims "you can sit down at your office in Chicago, take a pencil in your hand, write a message to me, and, as your pencil moves, a pencil here in my laboratory moves simultaneously, and forms the same letters and words in the same way. What you write in Chicago is instantly reproduced here in fac simile. You may write in any language; write in shorthand if you like; use a code or cipher; no matter, a fac simile is produced here. If you wish to draw a picture, it is the same; the picture is reproduced here. The artist of your paper can, by this device, telegraph his pictures of a railway wreck or other occurrence just as a reporter telegraphs his description in words. The two pencils move synchronously, and there is no reason why a circuit of 500 miles can not be worked as easily as one of ten miles. The telautagraph will supplant the telephone for many purposes, for it will have marked advantages over it. It will be noiseless, less affected by induction, and no misunderstanding can result.

"When one person wishes to communicate with another by the telautagraph, he pushes a button, which rings an annunciator in the exchange, or in the office of the person with whom he wishes to converse. Then the first party takes his writing-pencil from its holder—and this may be pen or pencil—and writes his message upon a roll of paper. As he writes so writes the pencil at the other end of the wire. In writing your pen or pencil is attached to two small wires, and these wires regulate the currents which control the pencil at the other end of the wire. But these wires give you no trouble. You hardly know they are there, and can write with as much facility as if they were absent. Nor is there any doubt that it can be used commercially. It will not cost more than $15 or $25, and it works much more perfectly than the telephone."

Said a railroad man one day: "I say not one in a hundred of the people who travel on railroad trains understands how the pressure of air is used to apply the brakes to a train. When the air-brake was first invented, the air was turned into the cylinder under each car when the cars were to be stopped, and the pressure was exerted to force the brakes up against the wheels. But at the present day the brakes are held against the wheels by springs, and the air is turned into the cylinders to push the brakes away from the wheels as long as the train is in motion. When it is desired to stop the train the air is let out, and then the springs apply the brakes and stop the train. This last method of using air-pressure has great advantages over the old way on the score of safety. Whenever an accident happens to a train, one of the first effects it is apt to have is to rupture the air-pipes leading from the engine to the cylinders under the cars; and that of itself stops the train instantly. It is very important for everybody to understand this matter, because a child five years old can stop a train in thirty seconds, from any car in the train, if he simply understands how. You will see, if you look for it, that there is a sort of rope projecting from the toilet-room of every car. That connects with the air-pipes under the train. If you catch hold of it, and give it a little jerk, it will stop the whole train before it has gone two hundred yards."—Chicago Evening Journal.

Lord Shaftesbury's life illustrated the vicarious law: "He saved others, himself he can not save." His self-giving to the cause of the poor and friendless was a costly one. It cost pain of body and exquisite suffering to his keen, sympathetic sensibilities, and cares and anxieties that left even on his face the pathetic lines of a visage marred by sorrow. He said he could not bear to leave this world with all its misery in it.—A. T. Pierson.

"Kindling."

Somebody, I have forgotten who, wrote a book a few years ago about "kindling." It was, no doubt, a learned treatise on the philosophy of spiritual quickening. But we don't need to philosophize elaborately. We know how to kindle fires in fireplaces, and we must kindle them in the house of God just as we do in our own. Coming home the other day I found a heap of ashes on the hearth and a pile of dry wood near by. Knowing that there were live coals in the ashes, I soon raked them out, brought them together, and laid my kindlings over them. The coals began to glow and brighten from contact with the air and each other. Their heat made the dry kindling still drier. But there was no blaze. Then I took a piece of paper from my waste-basket and threw it upon the coals. In an instant it flamed up and was gone, but it started the fire. The flames which it brought out of the coals kindled upon the wood, and soon the whole pile was aglow. And then I thought how many churches need just what was needed in my fire-place. There are hearts in them that love God and that long for his salvation. There are souls around them that are interested in the truth, but not yet kindled by it. The problem is: How to bring the piety of the church so in contact with the men and women in the congregation or the community that they shall be awakened and converted. The church is exerting some influence upon the people within its sphere, just as the coals on my hearth were gradually seasoning the wood. But this does not satisfy the true minister or the earnest Christian. He wants to see the impenitent not merely respecting religion and attending Sabbath services, but rejoicing in the hope that is full of glory. Can not the minister or Christian do just what I did just now? Can't he start a blaze? Can't he do something that shall kindle to a glow his own faith and that of his brethren? Can't he, by one earnest effort, make the latent piety of the church active—set its burning coals aflame? It did not require much to change my smoking brands to a cheerful fire—only a bit of paper. And it may be that a little thing, which you hardly think worth trying, will be blessed of God in the revival of his work. It is not necessary to appoint a series of meetings or to send for an evangelist. You have the live coals and the partially seasoned wood, and they are in contact with each other. It ought to be easy to kindle the wood. The Holy Spirit is ready to fan the flame as soon as it is kindled. He waits for us to do something in faith that he can energize for good. We are going over and over a round of duties and asking God to bless us. He does and he will. But if our work is formal, our prayers will be; and though the coals be kept alive and the wood will be slowly seasoned, we will not be as happy or as useful as if we had that living faith which sets the heart aflame.—The Occident.

A beautiful woman must be healthy, and to remain healthy and beautiful she should take Dr. J. H. McLean's Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier. It imparts tone and dash to the skin; strength, vigor and pure blood; is equally adapted for all ages, from the babe to the aged, and either sex.

SELF-DENIAL.—Years ago in London, Mr. Frederick Charrington, son of a very wealthy brewer, was converted. His father had lavished on him every indulgence, and had given him a share in the business, which was a fortune. After his conversion the young man engaged in Christian work among the neglected of the East-End in London. But it was gradually forced on him that the most potent and fruitful source of evil among the poor and wretched was the gin shops and beer houses. One night, as he passed to his work in heart by reason of the sights and sounds of woe and wickedness, his eye was drawn to a flaunting beer shop, over the door of which was the sign, "Charrington and Co.'s Entire." From that moment he determined on his course. He went to his father and told him that he could no longer be in the firm. At a later day some one casually asked him "what his blue ribbon cost him." He replied, "£14,000 a year."

DR. J. H. MCLEAN'S Strengthening Cordial and Blood Purifier, by its vitalizing properties, will brighten pale cheeks, and transform a pale, haggard, dispirited woman into one of sparkling health and beauty.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-School superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

EDUCATIONAL.

Mansfield Female College. 1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. D. F. Huddle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 288 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

The Southern Immigration Convention assembled in Hot Springs, N. C., on April 25.

The House sub-committee on appropriations have reported to the full committee the bill to give $100,000 to the Atlanta Colored National Exposition.

The Massachusetts Republican State Convention, which met in Boston on April 25, denounced the Democratic South.

Fifteen crews of the Burlington strikers have been offered positions on the Chicago, Santa Fe and California railway. The strikers have been inducing those who received the offers not to accept.

The fiftieth annual council of the Louisiana Diocese of the Protestant Episcopal Church commenced, in this city, on April 26.

A cyclone struck the city of Pratt, Kan., on April 26, demolishing several houses, killing one and seriously injuring many other persons.

In commemoration of the anniversary of the birthday of Gen. Grant banquets were held in New York and Boston on April 27.

Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, the highest in rank of the living officers of the Confederate Army, was unanimously elected an honorary member of E. D. Baker Post No. 8, G. A. R., of Philadelphia.

It is expected that 10,000 men employed in the breweries in Buffalo, N. Y., will strike on May 1, to obey the union, but no trouble is anticipated.

During a school exhibition in progress at a hall, situated in the second story of a building, in Rushsylvania, O., on April 28, the floor gave way suddenly, precipitating about 400 people a distance of twenty feet. Many were killed and about fifty seriously wounded.

Earthquake shocks were felt in California on April 28.

The committee from Marietta, Ohio, representing the centennial celebration of the establishment of the civil government in the Northwestern States, at that place, to begin July 15, 1888, have extended formal invitations to President Cleveland and Cabinet, General Phil Sheridan, and Admiral Porter, representing the army and navy, and the justices of the Supreme Court, and other distinguished persons.

The Tariff Bill will be the subject before the House during the whole of the week, if the operation of the resolution under which the House is acting is not suspended.

The druggists in Iowa have been forbidden to sell liquor.

Melville W. Fuller, of Chicago, has been nominated chief justice of the United States Supreme Court.

A peanut trust has been formed in Norfolk, Va., embracing firms engaged in the peanut trade in St. Louis, Cincinnati, New York and Norfolk, Petersburg and Smithfield, Va.

FOREIGN.

The Duke of Cambridge, commander-in-chief of the forces, was examined before a select committee of Parliament. He said that 11,000 additional men were required to place the army on a sound footing.

A riot broke out in Nancy, on April 26, a mob of Boulangerists attacking the students' clubs with stones and others missiles.

Queen Victoria left Berlin on April 26. Her departure was made amid loud cheers of the populace.

The revolutionary rising in Roumania has been renewed, this time close to the Russian frontier.

The Russian government has decided to expel the Jews from Helsingfors, except those who have served in the army.

Sir Andrew Barclay Walker, who is reported to have offered to give $1,250,000 to build a cathedral in Liverpool, denies that he will defray the sole cost of the building.

The ship Smyrna was sunk in a collision with the steamer Motto off the Isle of Wight, April 29. Thirteen persons were drowned.

Fourteen highwaymen robbed a train on the Interoceanic railroad, near Toroia, Mexico, on April 27. They went through the cars, stripped the passengers of their valuables, robbed the baggage and carried off $8,000 belonging to the company.

The condition of the Emperor of Germany is improving.

A recent decree, promulgated by the Pope, condemns the boycott and the plan of campaign in Ireland.

On the night of April 28 a crowd of Boulangerists collected outside the Students' Club, where 3,000 students were assembled. The students on hearing shouts for Boulanger, fired four shots into the crowd. Nobody was injured.

Gen. Boulanger has written a letter protesting against the warlike ideas that have been attributed to him. He wishes now to declare distinctly before France and Europe that democratic France is maligned by being credited with thoughts of aggression, to which he has ever been and still remains resolutely opposed.

A meeting, composed of Irishmen and Englishmen, held at Aldershee, condemned the Pope's advice and resolved to found a branch of the home rule organization, and to cease contributing to Peter's pence.

A Vexed Question.

The number of Corsets are legion, and ladies are often undecided which to order. "Godey's Lady's Book" gave an interesting article upon this subject. It says: "The desideratum seems to have been reached in the Duplex Corset nearer than in any other. The prominent features of the Duplex Corset are: The absence of any bones over the hip to break, and vex the wearer, and the quick and snug, but easy adjustment to the form by strap and buckle, thus saving the wearer the discomfort of breaking in. The Company has striven to produce the best dollar Corset in the world, and have attained to a standard that, notwithstanding its nominal cost, the 'Duplex' is suitable for any lady in any walk of life."

The advertisement of this Corset can be found in another column of this paper.

A WIFE'S PRAYER.—If there is anything that comes nearer to the imploration of Naomi than the subjoined we have not seen it: "Lord, bless and preserve that dear person thou hast chosen to be my husband; let his life be long and blessed, comfortable and holy; and let me, also, become a great blessing and a comfort unto him, a sharer in all his sorrows, a meet helper in all his accidents and changes in the world; make me amiable forever in his eyes and forever dear to him. Untie his heart to me in the dearest love and holiness, and mine to him in all sweetness, charity and compliance. Keep me from all ungentleness and discontentedness and unreasonableness of passion and humor; and make me humble and obedient, useful and observant that we may delight in each other according to thy blessed Word, and both of us may rejoice in thee, having our portion in the love and service of God forever. Amen!

FOLLOW ME.

To-day, to-morrow, evermore,
Through cheerless nights without a star,
Not asking whither or how far,
Unfaltering, though the way be sore,
Take up thy cross
And follow me!

Cannot profuse wealth or ease,
Fame, pleasure, length of days, esteem;
These things are valuer than they seem.
Then canst turn from all of these,
Take up thy cross
And follow me!

My yoke is easy; put it on;
My burden very light to bear.
Who shareth this, my crown shall share—
Earth the cross, in heaven the crown;
Take up thy cross
And follow me!

Peace I promise only perfect peace.
Sweet peace that lives through years of strife,
Immortal hope, immortal life,
And rest when all these wanderings cease;
Take up thy cross
And follow me!

—The Quiver.

At the Door.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

Mississippi Conference Methodists, numbering 32,435 (including 170 local preachers), in 1887 contributed $3,085 46 for the support of ten superannuated preachers, twenty-six widows and twenty-five or thirty orphans of preachers—preachers who had lived right, worked hard and faithfully, and then died in poverty. These contributions averaged less than ten cents a member, showing that nearly 25,000 church members gave nothing to this noble cause.

To get as close as possible to these 32,435 members (including 170 local preachers), I would first separate the charges whose contributions averaged ten cents a member from those charges which fell below that very small amount; and the charges named I put in the order of their respective averages, beginning with the highest in each district.

Jackson District—Yazoo City, 11 cents; Silver Creek, 36; Rayville, 33; Jackson, 33; Canton, 31; Edwards, 27; Flora, 27; Camden, 18; Madison, 16; Benton, 14; Sharon, 13; and Mt. Olivet almost reached ten cents a member, falling just ten cents short.

Brookhaven District—Brookhaven, 18 cents; Crystal Springs and Summit, each 17 cents; Gazlehurst and Terry, each 14 cents; Providence, 12; Wesson and Beauregard, 11; McComb City, 10.

Meridian District—Waynesboro and State Line, 25 cents; Hossburg, 24; Enterprise and Chunky, 17; Meridian, 16; Shubuta, 13; Paulding, 11.

Vicksburg District—Mayersville, 71 cents; Deer Creek, 31; Carrollton, 26; Jefferson Street (Natchez) and Port Gibson, each 25 cents; Vicksburg, 23; Washington, 14; Warren, 13, and Rocky Springs, 11. Fayette circuit came within 30 cents of averaging ten cents a member.

Woodville District—Percy's Creek, 36 cents; Woodville, 23; Hopkins, 21; Clinton, Jackson and Wilson, each 16 cents; Amite City, 14, and Bayou Sara just a little over 10 cents.

Seashore District—Pearlington, 37; Moss Point, 26; Flint Creek, 12; three out of fifteen charges!

Brandon District—Brandon, a little over 13 cents, and Newton just a shade beyond 10 cents a member; two out of fourteen charges!

Although the foregoing went above the general average, yet not all of them met their respective assessments. The published Minutes are defective in not giving the separate assessments. Of the fifty charges named, the highest amount, per capita, was paid by Mayersville circuit, Vicksburg district, Mark H. Moore, P. C., 51 members contributing $38, an average of 74 cents. The next highest was in Yazoo City, where 130 members, under the pastoral care of the Rev. R. S. Woodward, paid $56, an average of 38 cents. The third followed the second very closely: Percy's Creek, Woodville district, C. D. Cecil, P. C.; there, 81 members paid $29 25, an average of 37 cents.

The following charges paid less than ten cents a member:

Jackson Dist.—Spring Ridge, 138 members, paid $5 30, not quite 3 cents each; West Jackson's 74 members paid nothing to this cause. (They will do better this year!)

Brookhaven District—Franklinton, 363 members, $35—nearly 10 cents each; Adams, 495 members, $39—almost 8 cents each; Holmesville, 597 members, $40, or nearly 7 cents; Bowerton, 638 members, $40, or 6 cents a member; and Scotland, 467 members, $25, just a fraction over a nickel apiece.

Meridian District—Lauderdale's 478 members paid $42, not quite 9 cents each; Marion's 465 paid $37, almost 8 cents each; while West End, with 149, paying $11, and Binnsville, with 275, paying $20, and DeKalb, with 278, paying $20, just kept above only 7 cents; Winchester's 520, paying $30, almost reached 6 cents, while Adamsville's 175 members, paying only $5, and Clarke's 604, paying $16 45, almost averaged 3 cents a member; but Stonewall, with 257, contributed not one cent to this blessed object!

Vicksburg District—If South Warren's 75 members had given just one quarter of a dollar more, they would have averaged 10 cents; while the 238 on the Utica circuit would have had to add $3 80 to what they did pay. Wesley Chapel (Natchez), 281 members, and Martin, with 234, just did get beyond the average of a nickel apiece; but Meadville's 596 members did not average quite a nickel, and Roxie's 86 members only paid $2 to support the old preachers and the widows and orphans.

Woodville District—In paying $6 the 74 members on Springfield circuit averaged 8 cents; and East Feliciana's 481 members, in paying $32, went above 6 cents; while East Baton Rouge, with 396 members, paying $21 56, and St. Helena's 675, paying $35, went a little beyond a nickel, and improved vastly over their contributions of a few years ago. Amite circuit, with 483 members, lacked $4 15 of averaging a nickel apiece; and Livingston's 362 members did not pay so much as 3 cents each!

Seashore District—If the 221 members on the Poplarville circuit had paid $2 21 more than they did, they would have attained the ten-cents line; and if Scranton's 109 members had only paid $1 90 more, they would have been as high on the list; but Columbia's 372 members lacked $7 20 of the amount needed to place their average that high, and Seashore's 116 lacked $2 60 of measuring up to that standard; while Vancleave's 492, in paying only $26, and Hattiesburg's 293, in paying only $15, barely gave a nickel apiece; and Whittington's 507, in contributing only $25, did not attain unto the nickel average; and Mt. Carmel's 524 members, in paying $25, and Covington's 184, with only $8 50, fell below the nickel average; and Ocean Springs, with camp ground so convenient, and numbering 266 members, was content to send up $10; and Bethel, with 461 members, was satisfied with an offering of $15; and Americus, with 457, contributed only $13, averaging less than three cents a member!

Brandon District—Lake, with 435 members, paid $30, nearly 7 cents a member, and Carthage, with 265 members, paid just a little over 6 cents each; while Raleigh, with 482, averaged 5 cents each; and the 408 enrolled on the Forest and Morton circuit did not average even a nickel apiece; and Walnut Grove, with 612 members, improving considerable over past years, sends up $20, a little over 3 cents each; and Marvin's 422, and Neshoba's 551, and Trenton's 551 are apparently satisfied with an average of even less than 3 cents, particularly since Shiloh's 552 (camp ground included) and Fannin's 355, Westville's 345 and Hillsboro's 395 are seemingly content to contribute an average of one whole cent a member!

Do not these figures tell of indifference, thoughtlessness or want of knowledge on the part of thousands of our members? If indifference, what heartless cruelty! If thoughtlessness, how criminal! If for want of knowledge, how woful the ignorance! "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge."

Brethren of the Mississippi Conference, let us "turn on the light!" Let us, one and all, lend hands and brains and hearts to the work, and of our substance freely give to this noble cause. If we can not attain unto the measure of the liberality of Mayersville, let us at least reach that of Yazoo City or Percy's Creek. Let there be no more such reports as have come up from so many appointments in the Brandon, the Seashore, the Meridian, the Woodville, the Vicksburg, and even in the Brookhaven district.

The assessment is $3,500 this year. Let us double the amount, brethren of the laity and of the ministry.

(The Methodists of Mississippi ought to study the foregoing communication.—ED.)

Rev. J. C. Brogan.

IN MEMORIAM.

BY REV. B. S. RAYNER.

Rev. John Cornelius Brogan, on the morning of January 12, 1888, was called from labor to reward. He was in charge of the Paulding circuit, of the Mississippi Conference, and, with his family, occupying the parsonage at Rose Hill, in Jasper county, Miss., when his death occurred.

He was born in county Clare, Ireland, June 24, 1823. He was of a Roman Catholic family, and duly baptized into the Catholic Church. Early in life it was discovered that he possessed a strong intellect, and that he was of a serious turn of mind. It was, therefore, resolved to educate him for the priesthood. He was accordingly put in school and educated, although he never filled the office of priest in his mother church; but he did fill it in a more orthodox one, which was the result of Protestant enlightenment and of evangelical conversion. From the age of ten years to the time of his departure from Ireland, he was clerk in a Catholic Church.

On January 2, 1848, he took passage for the United States of America. After his arrival he remained in New Orleans about a year, during which time he was employed as a clerk in the custom-house. In 1849 he went to Greene county, Ala., and in 1850 settled in Fayette county, Ala. He was there employed by a Mrs. Stuart, a devout Protestant, who made the first profound religious impression upon him. She induced him to attend the Protestant Church, and to read the Bible. In getting his consent to read the Bible, he had a great and long-continued struggle with his conscience; but, when this was overcome, he eagerly read the Bible through, and diligently continued to read and study it. In April, 1853, he was soundly converted and received into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by Rev. S. H. Cox, of the Alabama Conference. In November, 1856, he was licensed to exhort, and in May, 1857, he was licensed to preach. He was admitted on trial into the Alabama Conference, at Macon, in 1858, and appointed to the Jasper circuit for the following year. The year 1860 he traveled the Columbus circuit, as junior preacher, with Rev. A. J. Colman, senior preacher. At the close of that year he located. The years 1862, '63, '64, '65, he was employed on the New Lexington colored mission. He was ordained deacon by Bishop Andrew, at Montgomery, Ala., in 1860, and was ordained elder by the same Bishop, at Tuscaloosa, in 1864. On May 17, 1854, he was happily married to Miss Mattie L. Davis, daughter of Rev. John H. Davis, of Fayette county, Ala. Sister Brogan, with eight of their ten children, survived him.

In 1866, in Enterprise, Miss., he was readmitted into the Alabama Conference. The two years following he traveled the Littlesville circuit, in which work he had over 400 accessions to the church. He traveled the Marion circuit in 1869 and 1870. In the year 1870, with a number of other members of the Alabama Conference, and with a part of the territory of that Conference, he was transferred to the Mississippi Conference. His appointments in the Mississippi Conference, for seventeen years, were confined to the following counties: Lauderdale, Neshoba, Clarke, Wayne and Jasper.

Bro. Brogan was a solid character. He was both sound in faith and practice. He was on the right side of every question. He was a well-balanced man. He had no eccentricities, and made but few mistakes. He was true to every trust, and reliable under any and all circumstances. He was a good man, and known as such wherever known at all. His great weight of influence, from his unquestioned solidity of character, rendered him a source of power in all his work. He was a diligent student. He read and studied all the books and periodicals that he could get hold of, often regretting that he did not have more. He constantly studied when alone, and without books, putting thought upon thought, and connecting link with link, and treasuring these productions for future use. His was a well-stored intellect. His habit was to preach three sermons on Sunday, and he said that he did not want more time to prepare a sermon than while riding from one appointment to another. He had his studies for the present year marked out. The first was Clarke's Commentary. His plan—in connection with his wife—was, to first read the Scripture and then read the comment, marking and studying passages as they proceeded. From his return from Conference, December 20, to January 3—the beginning of his alarming illness—though unwell all the time, he had thus read to the eighth chapter of Exodus, and was reading at night, propped in his bed, when he took the chill, precursor to the attack of pneumonia which proved fatal.

He was a hard worker. No circuit was too large for him; church duties were never too numerous. He was noted for multiplying his appointments and preaching at school-houses, at family residences, and wherever he could get even a small audience. In the last year of his ministry it was reported of him that he was "preaching wherever he could get a hitching-place for his horse." In prayer meetings, in protracted meetings, and in camp meetings, he was untiring. He was faithful to visit the sick and to comfort the sorrowing. And, with these onerous church duties, he did much temporal work with his own hands, cultivating his garden and corn patch, and building, repairing and improving parsonages. It was said of him, from the work which he did on parsonages and improvements about them, that, though deeded to the church, he had the larger claim upon them. He never missed a session of our Annual Conference of which he was a member. He preached his last sermon in Paulding, January 1, with fever on him. "Instant in season and out of season." "He ceased at once to work and live."

His interest in Sunday-schools was unbounded. He organized a Sunday-school in every neighborhood, and strove to enlist all the people, especially the children, in this important department of church work. His Sunday-school reports were invariably the best. In the DeSoto circuit he reported eleven schools and 553 scholars, and in the Clarke circuit he reported thirteen schools and 560 scholars.

He was the principal exponent of pedo-Baptist doctrines in the eastern portion of the Mississippi Conference. In debate upon the subject of baptism he was a most formidable antagonist. Well-posted and fearless, he was ready without a moment's warning. On one occasion a debater of great prominence was imported to combat him upon the subject of baptism. His opponent made the opening speech. While Bro. Brogan was replying, his antagonist, to the great chagrin of his brethren, disappeared. Once, with his "Damascus blade," he encountered a whole school of Anti-pedo theologues, and in a few minutes routed and vanquished them. The only apology with which I ever heard an opponent try to meet his arguments was to say, "He's crazy." He did not debate through egotism or self-pleasure, but as the result of a profound conviction of truth. As a rule, his presence in any part of the country produced silence on all disputed points, and gave the church rest.

After his espousal of Protestantism he was abandoned by all loved ones and Roman Catholic friends. He was not even permitted to correspond with his nearest relations. This, however, only drove him nearer to Christ in his own faith. He had no worldly aspirations. He was satisfied with the humblest place in life, and was willing to be despised and unknown among men for Christ's sake. The sentiment of his heart was:

"Go, then, earthly fame and treasure;
Come, disaster, scorn and pain;
In thy service pain is pleasure,
With thy favor loss is gain."

Delirious and unconscious of the fact that he was nearing his journey's end, he did not say anything about dying—not anything was necessary. His life was sufficient. The work of no man's life has been of a more solid character. Truly of him it may be said: "He rests from his labors, and his works do follow." "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

ENTERPRISE, Mississippi.

New Orleans Seaman's Bethel.

That was a delightful occasion which drew a crowded house to the Seaman's Bethel a few evenings ago. It was the occasion of the presentation of the portrait of Dr. James H. Carlisle, president of Wofford College, South Carolina, to his old friend and school-mate, Dr. Witherspoon, superintendent of the Seaman's Bethel. Bro. Sawyer, pastor of Felicity Street Church, made the presentation in the name of Dr. Carlisle's daughter. His remarks were as follows:

It is always a pleasant duty to speak of those whose lives have been or are useful and illustrious. In so doing we but honor ourselves, for the great and the good among men in lifting themselves lift their race with them, and the recounting of their virtues and grand deeds, of necessity, reflects credit upon those of humbler mold and adds lustre to mankind in general. That he was a man and has left behind him such a glorious record of noble actions, or that he is a man and is filling out before our eyes a career of eminent usefulness and grandeur of word and deed, tends to make our own hearts swell with a truer ambition and a real desire to emulate their example in all high living.

The beloved chaplain of this benevolent institution has asked me to speak a few words in presentation of this excellent likeness of one of the noblest of Southrons. Dr. James H. Carlisle, of Spartanburg, S. C. Dr. Witherspoon and this eminent citizen and distinguished Methodist layman were class-mates at the South Carolina College. They have ever since maintained a mutual friendship and love. It is certainly most fitting that upon the walls of this building, which sprang into existence right out of the heart and faith of Dr. Witherspoon, there should be seen the benevolent and intelligent countenance of his old friend and companion of his college days.

James H. Carlisle, LL.D., is now sixty-two, and was born in the liberty-loving and spunky State of South Carolina. He was a professor in Wofford College from its organization in 1851, and has been its president since 1875. He is one of the first scholars of the land, an elegant and finished orator, a successful and instructive lecturer, and as a church-statesman few, if any, can rank higher in ability in the councils of his church. He has always held himself above the ordinary ambitions of life, and has never been allured by the high dignities and emoluments of place and power; and withal he is thoroughly modest, and has always been true to his conscience, his God and his church. I had the pleasure and great honor of meeting him at the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, held in Richmond, Va., in May, 1886. He was not often on the floor—he spoke but seldom; but no man was more regarded than he when he chose to deliver himself upon any of the great questions which engaged the attention of that august body. I heard his lecture on "The Starry Heavens and the Moral Law," and you may be sure that such a subject in the hands of such a complete master of both astronomical and moral science, and of the best use of language, was thoroughly treated, and in a most delightfully interesting manner.

Dr. Carlisle is a large man, with a fine head, noble front, and kingly bearing—gentle and commanding. He is, indeed, a grand man in body, head, and heart, and is easily the peer of the greatest and best in our Southland, if, indeed, he be not, as some affirm, "the noblest Roman of them all."

A brainy man, vigorous in thought, word and deed; a thoroughly furnished scholar and accomplished educator; an ardent lover of youth, of truth, and of country; possessed of a moral character compact and symmetrical; and, to crown all, a pure-minded, simple-hearted, devoted, consistent, working child of God—a true man and Christian gentleman above reproach—he is just the man to be where he is and has been for years—at the head of a great college, where he can and does impress himself (which is of itself a good education) upon Southern youth, moulding and developing for future greatness and good the men of to-morrow and the coming years.

I am glad you have his picture to place in your Bethel among others you have here of earth's great and good and useful ones. Allow me to present to you, Dr. Witherspoon, this excellent likeness of your old friend and class-mate, Dr. Carlisle, president of Wofford College a choice spirit, and grand man from any point at which you view him.

CHURCH FELLOWSHIP.—Fellowship is maintained by sacrificing together. One would suppose that great love would be drawn out by seeing another make sacrifices as we stood off one side. But it never is. The church where two or three do all the sacrificing always has the most murmuring. These persons will be accused of some selfish motive, and good fellowship will be scattered to the winds. People always come into the heartiest union by sacrificing for a common cause. When Agassiz was a young man and pursuing his studies in Europe, he went to visit the renowned Euler in St. Petersburg. He and another student were shown through the vast libraries and laboratories of the great man's house. At length they were invited to tarry to dinner. As they came to the table, the scientist remarked: "Young men, in order to purchase all these works and apparatus you have seen, we are obliged to live very economically. Twice a week we have meat; other days we dine upon potatoes and salt. You happen to be here upon potato-day, but you are very welcome." And then and there sprang up a life-long fellowship between these men sacrificing in a common pursuit. More such sacrificing in the churches—more potato-day—for the sake of enlarged benevolence, where all moved together, would bring greatly enlarged fellowship.—Interior.

BEHOLD I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK.

IN EXTRA SESSION.

"I, Jesus, stand at the door and knocks.
Please let me in to fill you with light.
I [illegible] to the side for those
Who [illegible] as well with the dew of night.

Behold, He stands at the door and knocks,
While they act now in the bloom of youth;
And yet [illegible] the real day come not;
For they [illegible] in the ways of truth.

And they [illegible] the harvest lights,
While reaches the breeze that bears them on.
Take [illegible] of this one more's safe—
In the darkest night thou will see the dawn.

Behold, he knocks! and the still small voice,
O, friend, cry's to thee, now hastening on.
In midst of [illegible] scenes to-day—,
Let him in while he may be gone.

He has waited long, He knocks again.
What pleadings He uses, 'give me thine heart;'
O, think what I gave for thee, yet pleads'
Let me in this hour, and he'll never depart.

For as Gethsemane's song was his:
Behold! and the Lord of glory died!
He knocks! Let him in, or yet too late.
And he'll never [illegible] side.

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE.

Matthew xxvi. 36-46.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Though he were a son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered.—Heb. v. 8.

TIME.—A. D. 30. Thursday night, about midnight, April 7.

PLACE.—Gethsemane, an olive garden, on the western slope of the Mount of Olives.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Mark xiv. 32-42; Luke xxii. 39-46.

CONNECTING LINK.—Our Lord's prediction of his death and resurrection, and of Peter's denial: verses 31-35.

36. Then cometh Jesus—The gates of Jerusalem were allowed to stand open during the Passover. Jesus and his disciples probably left the city about midnight by the St. Stephen gate, crossed the bridge over the Kedron, and arrived at Gethsemane, a favorite resort of our Lord. Unto ... Gethsemane—The word is Hebrew, and means oil-press. Wordsworth comments on its significance as an emblem of trial, distress and agony, and refers to Isaiah lxiii. 3; Lamentations i. 15; Joel iii. 13. It was a garden—that is, an orchard, outside of Jerusalem, east of the brook Cedron, on the slope of the Mount of Olives beyond. Sit ye here—This was addressed to the eight disciples only, since he had selected three to accompany him, and one—the traitor—was at that moment organizing a band to apprehend him. While I go and pray yonder—All conflict of the holy soul is prayer: all its struggles are communion with God. In Genesis xxii. 5, when Abraham's faith was to be put to so sore a trial, he says, "I and the lad will go yonder and worship." Our Lord (almost on the same spot) unites in himself, as the priest and victim, as Stier strikingly remarks, Abraham's faith and Isaac's patience.

37. Took ... Peter and the two sons of Zebedee—They were, so to speak, the elite of the elect. In great trials we love solitude, but to have friends near. Began to be sorrowful—Sore amazed. There is, it is obvious, a mysterious contrast between the calm, triumphant serenity which had shone in the look and tone of the Son of man up to this point, and the anguish and distress that were now apparent. And very heavy—He was "in an agony"—that is, a conflict, for this is the literal meaning. Combining these accounts, we have a hint of the elements which entered into this mystical experience. There was a conflict—that is, between his dread of the impending passion and his desire to accomplish it: a bitter horror, the secret of which we may partially conjecture, it is not and can not be fully interpreted to us: a dejection produced by seeming failure of his earthly mission, the rejection of him by his nation, the dullness of spiritual vision, even in his disciples: and a sense of surprise and horror in the full and unexpected disclosure made in that hour of the burden he must bear. The sufferings of the cross were, we conceive, from the visible powers of earth: the sufferings of the bitter cup and the bloody sweat were from the invisible powers of hell.

38. My soul—The soul is the intermediate in man between body and spirit. The spirit expresses the relation to God: the body, the relation to earth: the soul, the relation to the world at large, especially the world of spirits: hence, the soul is the specific organ of spiritual experiences and emotions of pleasure and sorrow. Christ had a truly human soul, capable of all the emotions of joy and sorrow. Is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death—The woes of one struggling with death I now experience. The words of Psalm xxii. 16; xl. 13, seem to have been present to his thoughts. The Greek words intimate that he was surrounded with sorrow on every side, breaking in upon him with such violence as was ready to separate his soul from his body. Tarry ye here and watch with me—Not pray with me, for in that work the Mediator must be alone: but watch with me—just as we may compare our weakness with his as we derive comfort in the midst of a terrible storm from knowing that some are awake and with us, even though their presence is no real safeguard. How exquisitely human!

39. Went a little farther—"Was withdrawn from them about a stone's cast," says Luke, who in this description is the more precise. The paschal full moon would make deep shadow for the retirement of Jesus. Fell on his face—He would kneel at first (Luke xxii. 41), and by and by, as the intensity of his feelings increased and overwhelmed him, he would prostrate himself entirely. There are weights that crush men down so! They do not then ask what is the proper attitude in prayer—you will be told, you will be put into it, there is a force that will attitudinize you without any study on your part, a mighty terror-force that will dash you on your face! O my Father—It is the only time, so far as recorded in the gospels, when he addressed God with the personal pronoun: "My Father." If it be possible—Mark (xiv. 36): "Abba, Father, all things are possible unto thee;" Luke (xxii. 42): "If thou be willing." The bitterness of this cup was so great that he desired its removal, but even this desire was subordinated to the holy will of his Father. The possibility here meant presupposes that the solid plans of redemption must be undisturbed. In one sense, "with God all things are possible," but even the divine Omnipotence works through self-imposed laws. Let this cup pass from me—What is the "cup," or "hour," of which our Lord here prays that it may pass by? Certainly, not the mere present feebleness and prostration of the bodily frame, nor any mere section of his sufferings, but the whole—the betrayal, the cross, the grave, and all besides which our thoughts can not reach. Of this all, his soul, in humble subjection to the higher will, which was absolutely united and harmonious with the will of the Father, prays that if possible it may pass over. And this prayer was heard (see Hebrews v. 7) "in that he feared" on account of his pious resignation to the Father's will, or on the ground of it, so that it prevailed—he was strengthened from heaven. He did, indeed, drink the cup to the dregs, but he was enabled to do it, and this strengthening was the answer to his prayer. Nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou will—His own individual will was but a wish, which could not be wrong so long as it existed in complete submission to God's will ... The purpose of recording this prayer is great. It contains a profound lesson, how under affliction the sufferer may innocently writhe under the pain, may ask to be delivered, up to the point of the divine will. But at that point, however deep the agony, resignation must be absolute.

40. Cometh ... findeth them asleep—Luke says they were asleep for sorrow. It seems as if the air of that night were dense with fearful, supernatural influences, weighing them down with stupor. Saith unto Peter—Mark says "Simon." For it was Peter who pledged himself to go with him to prison and death. Could ye not watch—This indicates disappointment, if not displeasure. It is almost the only personal request he is ever recorded to have made. But it was denied him! One hour—It would be that the whole trial would last about that time. But, most likely, it is in allusion to the time of our Lord's trial, so often called by that name.

41. Watch and pray—The first word is eminently characteristic of our Lord's teaching at this time (chap. xxiv. 42; xxv. 13). It became the watchword of the early disciples. It left its mark in the history of Christendom in the new names of Gregory and Vigilius, or Vigilantius, "the watcher." Observe the double command. Some watch without praying, some pray without watching. That ye enter not into temptation—The trial of coming danger and persecution. In their present weakness that trial might prove greater than they could bear, and, therefore, they were to watch and pray, in order that they might not pass, by negligence, into too close contact with its power. Contrast James i. 2, "Count it all joy when ye fall into divers temptations." It is a joy to us to be brought involuntarily into circumstances that try our faith, and so give us new disclosures of our Savior's power and grace; it is a sorrow to us when we enter into temptation voluntarily, and so entertain it with the will. Spirit ... willing, but the flesh is weak—The reference is unmistakably to Peter's eager declaration that he was ready to suffer imprisonment and death with Christ (Luke xxii. 33). In both Christ and the disciples there is a willing spirit, in both weakness of the flesh. But in Christ the spirit conquers the flesh, and he is victor; in the disciples the flesh conquers the spirit, and they are defeated.

42. Went ... the second time and prayed—Observe the change in the prayer, which Mark and Luke do not indicate. ... At what time the angel appeared to him, strengthening him, as described in Luke xxii. 43, is uncertain. If this cup may not pass away—As though the conviction that it was not possible that the cup could pass away from him had come with fuller clearness before his mind, and he was learning to accept it. Thy will be done—There is no further prayer: this is the all-conclusive and all-culminating desire and petition. The moment you have two wills in the universe, you break up its harmony. There can be in a harmonic universe but one will, and that is God.

43. Came and found them asleep again—The motive of this return we may reverently believe to have been, as before, the craving for human sympathy in that hour of awful agony. He does not rouse them to speak to them. He looks on them sorrowfully, and they meet his gaze with bewildered and stupefied astonishment. "They wist not what to answer him." For their eyes were heavy—Drowsiness, not deep sleep, is meant. In their strong, muscular natures, the physical element had got the complete ascendency. They were not afraid of themselves spiritually, or jealous over themselves; and the immense mediatorial interests of the impending crisis were left by them lying aside from their view, and undreamed of.

44. Left them—Thrice, as if in a perfectly restless agony that allows no repose, did our Lord leave his three disciples, to go and suffer and pray alone. What a loneliness was that, amid the darkness of the memorable spot, when the Divine Man bore the sufferings of the world's sin, and wrought the reconciliation between heaven and earth! It was the central hour in human history, and he was the most wonderful spectacle, perhaps, though no human eye beheld him, that any eye, human or superhuman, ever beheld. Prayed the third time—Now full strength came to enable him to meet the sufferings before him. Once ended, the struggle was never renewed. In all the terrible scenes which ensued he never wavered, hesitated, faltered, or showed signs of fear. At the last he not only endured the cross, but despised the shame. Saying the same words—Form utters the same words from a want of feeling; earnestness repeats from abundance of feeling.

45, 46. Sleep on now, and take your rest—The precious opportunity was lost forever. Sympathy, vigilance, the hour for these was past. The priests had succeeded in their surprise, and Judas had well led them through the dark, with unerring accuracy, to the very spot where his Master knelt; and they were seen quite close: the dark figures shown in relief against the glare of the red torchlight, and every now and then the gleam glittering from the bared steel and the Roman armor. It was all over; they might sleep as they liked: their sleeping could do no injury now; their watching could do no good. And, therefore, partly in bitterness, partly in reproach, partly in a kind of earnest irony, partly in sad earnest, our Master said to his disciples: Sleep on now; there is no use in watching now; take your rest—forever, if you will; for all that watching might have done is lost. Behold, the hour is at hand—The hour of his enemies, the hour of darkness (Luke xxii. 53), but with the special reference to the approach of the betrayer. The Son of man is betrayed into the hands of sinners—This expression, "into the hands of sinners," should be noticed, as an echo of the Redeemer's anguish—it was the contact with sin, and death, the wages of sin—which all through his trial pressed heavily on his soul. Rise, let us be going—Both expressions imply haste, not necessarily terror. The conflict is over, the spirit of submission reigns. His advancing to meet his betrayer may have been to rejoin and protect the eight disciples.

Brandon District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The Brandon District Conference convened at Newton, Miss., April 26. Every pastoral charge was represented. Every pastor was present except one, who was absent because of sickness in his family. The spiritual condition of the district was reported to be progressing. A goodly number of prayer and class meetings. Family prayers neglected by a large number of our members; but a determination upon the part of the pastors to put the brethren in remembrance of their duty in this direction. Oh, for a return of our members to this means of grace! The Lord was with us in power in the preaching of the Word. God honored his Word, and his servants in preaching of it, and Christians rejoiced. At our Conference love-feast, Sunday evening, there were at least 200 persons present. It was good to be there. At least 150 of them testified that they loved God and his church. At the close a number came forward and asked God for forgiveness, and an interest in the prayers of Christians. There was some praising and general rejoicing. It was decidedly the most religious District Conference I have ever attended, and I am not alone in this statement. The ADVOCATE was looked after. There are about 300 copies taken in the district. There ought to be 1,000, at least.

We had a District Sunday-school Conference, which met Wednesday, April 25. We devoted the entire day in discussing the programme published in the ADVOCATE some time since. There were some very fine essays read, which I hope will find their way to the columns of the ADVOCATE. The pastors resolved to observe Children's Day.

Presidents Fitzhugh and McVoy were present, looking after the interests of the institutions of learning over which they preside. After them your correspondent, as the agent, presented the claims of Centenary College. There are a number of high schools in the district, and the Conference elected Montrose School as the District Conference high school. It is a co-educational school. It has about 100 students enrolled this year. We hope this school will prepare some boys for Centenary College. There is some light dawning in that direction. There are about 1,200 boys and girls attending these high schools in this district. Surely out of this number we will catch some of the boys for Centenary. We have our eyes upon them. Why not rally to Centenary, and make it the central point of education in the Southwest? It can and ought to be done. The Methodist preachers of Mississippi and Louisiana can do it. If they can, and do not—why? what reason? Centenary is not dead. It is the livest dead thing in America. Centenary is doing more for Methodism in Mississippi and Louisiana, in the way of educating preachers and preachers' sons, than any college in either State, and in that the college is doing a great work.

I could write much about the college, and, with your permission, I would like to present a plan for its endowment. I have a number of blank notes; I want them filled on this plan: in four annual installments, without interest, void in case of death. As the notes fall due, let them be paid, and the Board of Trustees invest the money as a permanent endowment fund. This plan will avoid all friction and trouble of collecting interest. How easily an endowment of $100,000 could be raised on this plan if the Methodists and friends of the college of Mississippi and Louisiana should say it shall be done. Bishop J. C. Keener started the endowment of the college on this plan, the other day, at the Brookhaven District Conference, by giving $100 in four annual installments ($25 each). As the agent, I want 1,000 notes of $100 each, in four annual installments. This will give us $100,000 at the end of four years. I want these notes in the next 100 days, so that on January 1, next, there will be in the hands of the trustees $25,000, to invest as a permanent endowment fund. Who will be the next to respond? Write to me at Forest, Miss., and I will send you the blank notes to fill up. Of course, any amount will be thankfully received, from $1 to a $1,000, $10,000, or a $100,000. Brethren and friends, we mean business. Let us say it shall be done, and it is done.

The pastors and laymen of the district resolved that they would wipe out the stain that is on the district, in regard to the collections ordered by the church; that the time had come when there should be an upheaval upon this subject, and the assessments shall be full. To the laymen of the district I would say: Dear brethren, let your pastors have a better support than they have been having. The assessments are small enough. Please say that there shall not be a deficit of one dollar.

The hospitality of Newton could scarcely be excelled. Of course, I had the best home; but I suppose every preacher and delegate would contest my claims. I suppose our secretary will inform you more minutely of the proceedings; hence I will close.

P. A. JOHNSTON.

FOREST, MISS., April 30, 1888.

The Brookhaven District Conference, of the Mississippi Annual Conference.

The District Conference of the Brookhaven district, Mississippi Annual Conference convened in Summit, Miss., April 13, at nine A. M., Bishop J. C. Keener, D. D., presiding. The opening sermon was preached by Rev. H. D. Howell, of the Scotland circuit, Thursday, April 12, at a quarter of seven P. M. At roll call (April 13, at nine A. M.) twelve out of the fifteen pastors answered to their names, and about one-third of the lay delegates. Before the close of the session every preacher was present, except one brother who was detained because of sickness, and about one-half the laymen. The session was most delightful, spiritually as well as socially, and a lasting impression has been made on the minds and hearts of this people.

Rev. B. F. Lewis was elected secretary, and Prof. R. S. Ricketts, assistant secretary—a little out of the regular order, as Prof. Ricketts has been secretary of this District Conference for several years in succession. This innovation was due, no doubt, to the fact that the Professor was unable to be with us until Saturday morning because of his duties in Whitworth College.

Bro. P. A. Johnston, presiding elder of the Brandon district, and agent of Centenary College, was present, and at ten A. M., Saturday, addressed the Conference in the interest of that institution of learning. The Conference noted the presence of Rev. J. W. McLaurin, district superintendent of the American Bible Society, and Mrs. E. D. James, our Conference secretary of the Woman's Department of Church Extension, both of whom addressed the Conference in the interest of their respective works. The presence of Rev. W. B. Lewis, our pastor at Canton station, was also noted.

The business of the Conference progressed rapidly, and was frequently interspersed with cogent talks from the Bishop on the vital points brought out in the various reports. The pastors report an almost universal and rapid and permanent growth all along the line of various church work. The salaries of the preachers within the district aggregate over seven hundred dollars more than last year. The Conference claims have, in many instances, been taken in full—in a few instances the pastors expect to realize from ten to twenty per cent. above the assessment. In every case where these collections have not been taken, the pastors are making preparation to do so immediately.

The week of prayer and self-denial has not been observed as universally, nor with as much success, as was expected, but this important department, of what we might call our special church work, is being kept before our people. The Sabbath-school interest, taken as a whole, is doing well. One alarming fact, however, in connection with this most important department of church work was brought out and discussed by the preachers, and its dangers emphasized by the Bishop, viz: The great tendency to neglect the Bible in the Sabbath-schools. Our schools universally use our literature, but the text is read from the quarterlies and lesson papers—not from the Bible. There is a missionary society in the Brookhaven Sabbath-school which has for its object the education of a girl in Japan. It is under the management of President Fitzhugh, of Whitworth College. On motion, President Fitzhugh was requested to organize all the Sabbath-schools in the district into missionary societies to be known as the Japan Workers, auxiliary to the Parent Board. Several essays were read which had been prepared for the occasion, among them one, on "Foreign Missions," by Rev. T. L. Mellen, of Wesson, which was ordered published in pamphlet form. It will be well worth the money it will cost when ready for sale.

To take a general review of the work, we will place the condition of the Brookhaven district in contrast with any district in our Conference. One brother reported a charge with between 300 and 400 members, and nearly every one converted. Another brother reported nine-tenths of his members converted. Another had a church with a prayer meeting, meeting three times a week, and with nearly every member—men, women and children—praying in public. Another has a charge where nearly every family reads the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. Class meetings are being organized and successfully operated nearly all over the district. One brother, finding the old-fashioned class meeting at present impracticable, has appointed visiting brethren to go from house to house, talking with and praying with the families in his church, thus having little class meetings in the private houses. If we could concentrate all these successes within every charge in the district, what an outpouring of the Holy Ghost we would have, and how rapidly would the few remaining barren spots within our bounds blossom as the rose! Brethren, let us work for this end.

B. F. LEWIS, Sec.

Woodville District, Mississippi Conference.

The Woodville District Conference, of the Mississippi Annual Conference, convened at Clinton, La., April 19, 1888. Bishop J. C. Keener was present, and presided. The presence of the Bishop inspired hope and confidence of an interesting and instructive meeting, and, doubtless our presiding elder has fully realized the hopes expressed in his article in the ADVOCATE, of April 19: "Fresh inspiration and new light." It would require one of experience to properly report this session of our District Conference at less than waste-basket length. Many said it was the best. Bishop Keener preached two sermons—Saturday and Sunday, at eleven o'clock A. M.—and brought forth things old and new from the Word of God, to the enlightenment and comfort of all. Rev. J. W. McLaurin, agent of American Bible Society, was present, and added to the interest of the occasion by preaching a sermon which increased the interest and love for the Master and his cause. The attendance was large, only two traveling preachers absent, and they on account of sickness. Bro. J. Wilson Brown was kept away on account of the visit of a little stranger, which will increase the necessity for quarterage and faithfulness on the part of the stewards on Amite circuit. The lay delegates were out in large force. All the interests of the church received due consideration. Reports showed that the spiritual condition of the district was hopeful and improving. The financial condition is such as to inspire hope and cause for gratitude to God. Sunday-school work received special attention. The Conference was entertained with essays by the superintendent of the Clinton Sunday-school (who, by the way, has been connected with this school for forty years, and has never known it to be in better condition than at present), young ladies, visiting brethren and Rev. L. S. Jones, pastor in charge. The occasion was one of delight. Prominence was given to religious exercises; and the attendance upon all the exercises showed how well the good people of Clinton appreciated the occasion. Our presiding elder, though a cautious man, ventured to introduce some things new in the work of the Conference, and from the general satisfaction expressed, as will show from the columns of the ADVOCATE—i. e., unless the editor sees proper to differ with us—we shall feel safe with Bro. Ellis in the lead.

Some one remarked that the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE had no one present to represent its claims and no copies on hand. This remark brought out quite a number of representatives, and much was said that would have cheered the heart of editor and publisher had they been present.

I herewith enclose a resolution, which was adopted, and requested to be published in the ADVOCATE.

Whereas, The Sunday Law of the State of Louisiana has in that portion of the State, within the bounds of this district, worked a marked change in public manners and morals, and is a just law, bearing equitably upon all classes of our people: therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the Woodville District Conference residing in the parishes of East and West Feliciana, St. Helena, Livingston, Tangipahoa and East Baton Rouge, and representing over three thousand citizens thereof, do hereby endorse the Sunday Law, and urge our Representative in the Legislature to vigorously oppose any effort to repeal, abridge or nullify the said law.

Bros. H. C. Newsom, G. T. McGehee, G. H. Packwood and John F. Cassels were elected delegates to the next Annual Conference; A. White, Frank Tucker and P. A. Richardson, alternates. Amite City was unanimously chosen as the place for holding the next District Conference.

The Conference, by a rising vote, expressed thanks to the good people of Clinton for kindness and Christian hospitality. After singing the Doxology, the Conference adjourned with the benediction by Bishop Keener.

Winona District Conference.

The Winona District Conference, of the North Mississippi Annual Conference, met at Greenwood, Miss., April 25, 1888, Bishop C. B. Galloway presiding. J. B. Streater was elected secretary, and J. D. Bingham, assistant secretary.

The afternoon of the preceding day was devoted to a Sunday-school Conference, and the reports from the different charges showed a considerable increase in this line of church work.

Every clerical member of the District Conference was present except one, and the laity was well represented. The reports of the pastors were generally encouraging. The week of self-denial and prayer was universally observed, to some extent throughout the district, and as well as we could gather from the reports, which were not in full we estimated about $600 collected.

The missionary anniversary was held on Saturday night, and $228 35 collected.

The preaching during the Conference was all of the first-class order. The Bishop was very happy in the selection of his subject for Sunday—"The Evidences of Conversion"—and captured all hearts. We are inclined to the belief that this sermon will be productive of great good.

The district high school was represented by Prof. B. P. Patterson, Whitworth College; Rev. W. B. Murrah, and Greenwood Female Institute by Rev. T. J. Newell. Rev. G. W. Bachman, our colporteur and Sunday-school agent, looked after the interests of the ADVOCATE.

The following visitors were present: Rev. J. F. Evans, Rev. J. S. Shipman, Rev. R. A. Burroughs, of the Grenada district; Rev. C. R. A. Brantley, of Holly Springs district; Dr. Woodward and son, from Yazoo City.

The following are the delegates elected to the Annual Conference, viz: J. R. Binghant, J. B. Streater, W. P. Ratcliff and G. Irving; alternates—O. Moore, J. G. Hamilton.

The Conference was well entertained by the citizens of growing town of Greenwood, which has now almost assumed the proportions of a city. Greenwood now has one of the most elegant Methodist Churches to be found in any town of its size in the State, thanks to the untiring efforts of its faithful pastor and liberality of its good citizens.

The next District Conference will be held at Pickens.

J. B. STREATER, Sec'y.

Notice.

To the Methodists of North Mississippi Conference—

DEAR BRETHREN: The undersigned were appointed commissioners at the session of our Conference before the last to solicit proposals for the establishment of one or more high schools for the education of young men and boys. There being no response to the proposition during the past year, the Conference at its last session determined to keep the matter before the public.

While we are doing something for the education of the girls, we are doing nothing towards the education of our boys. There is not an institution in the State of Mississippi for the education of boys under the care and control of our church. Is there not some community within our bounds that will take this matter into consideration and make us a proposition?

Brethren in the ministry, bring this subject before your people and urge its importance upon them. Let us no longer lie under this reproach, but let us show to the country that we do appreciate the importance of an education upon sound Christian principles. The sons of our people are now seeking an education out of the State or in the institutions controlled and supported by the State or institutions controlled by those who are not Methodists.

RUSTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I will write and tell you about our juvenile missionary society. It was organized July 1, 1887, by Miss Logan and Mrs. Fullilove, with only thirty-six members, but we have now 174. Mrs. McCormick, Mrs. Kidd and Mrs. Parker, our lady managers, meet with us every Sunday afternoon. We open with singing, and reading of the Scriptures, and besides our regular business we have two or three to read or recite. At our last meeting Mrs. Parker, wife of our beloved pastor, delivered us a beautiful and interesting address about the society and the importance of its work. She commenced by saying the society was helping to convert the world. Sin had come upon the people like some mortal disease, and we had found a remedy for their relief, while those great nations ignorant of any means of cure are calling upon us to send them the remedy for sin. "Jesus" is the only remedy. A knowledge of him will alone save those people, and we are trying to send them a knowledge of this Great Physician who has sealed us and given us life from the death of sin. She was glad that our society was so well up to the great appreciation of its duty. She told us why the week of prayer and self-denial had been appointed, and asked us to deny ourselves of something during the week, and give it in at our next (weekly) meeting, after which she asked every person in the house (and there was a large crowd) to kneel with her and repeat the Lord's Prayer. The words, "Thy kingdom come on earth as it is in heaven," was heard from back as well as front pews. The amount of $3 80 was collected on self-denial fund. We are very much encouraged at our success, and hope that it will continue.

Your little friend,
ALICE NEILSON,
Cor. Secretary.

CARROLLTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I have received $10 from Mrs. T. J. Newell, Grenada, Miss., making Mrs. S. M. Thames and Mrs. J. E. Thomas life patrons of Preachers' Wives' Loan Fund. Carrollton (Miss.) Methodist Church has paid $5, making Mrs. R. P. Mitchell a life patron. The money goes to Dr. Morton by this mail. Let other charges respond. I beseech you, dear sisters, to take this work in hand.

Yours truly,
EVA R. BINGHAM, Treas.

MINTER CITY, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We were fortunate and unfortunate in having our church blown to pieces on the fourth Sunday night in March; fortunate that it looked too unfavorable for service—hence nobody was hurt. This people know nothing of the almost universal evil effect of union churches; so this idea is hindering greatly in building a new church. We will soon be under way in building another new church at one of our "side" appointments, where we have a local preacher—Rev. D. M. Miller—at work. So where, in 1885, we found fifteen members and one unfinished union house, we hope soon to have three pastoral charges, five new churches and two parsonages. We are greatly in need of an outpouring of the Holy Spirit, to give more spirituality to the work.

As there may be many others, besides those asking me, who would like to know if there is a periodical which will aid in the study of New Testament Greek, please answer there is—viz: The Boston Academy, by A. A. Wright, D. D., 38 Bromfield street, Boston, Mass. Price only fifty cents a year.

J. L. TUTTRELL.

BAY ST. LOUIS, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: The week of prayer and self-denial was to us a season of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. As the result of the week, we have forwarded to Dr. Kelley $36 20. We have the promise of ten or twelve dollars more, which will be forwarded as soon as collected. It was our pleasure to have Bro. J. W. McLaurin, district superintendent of the American Bible Society, with us Saturday and Sunday, in the closing exercises of the week. On Sunday, at eleven A. M., he presented the Bible cause, which was a most interesting service, well suited to the occasion. The interest awakened in the congregation, in this great work, was manifested by raising $52 for the purpose of organizing a county society for the distribution of the Bible in our own midst. This work is, financially, very weak; yet we expect to get up all the Conference collections in full, and hope to have a good report all along the line. We will continue to "work and pray."

Yours, etc., P. C.

HATTIESBURG, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: We closed our meeting at Hattiesburg last night, with good results. Twenty accessions, four professed conversion, and the membership greatly revived. The communion service on Sunday was delightful; nearly one hundred communicants. Bros. Hays and Langford assisted us in the meeting, and did good work. I have received $20 as the result of the week of prayer.

W. W. SIMMONS.

FLOYD, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Was sick during the week of self-denial, but my people responded (some of them), and I can report $12 as the result. H. ARMSTRONG.

The Home vs. the Saloon.

Ours is the great and sacred cause of the home versus the saloon. Our people are bound to discover that this country can not support both institutions. One must go up into safety, the other down into outlawry. I would like to summon here into the witness-box a saloon-keeper, in an honest hour, to testify to us what it is that he does for this great, kindly compact that we call society. We want to find out what he proposes to add to the firm's capital stock—the great firm of We, Us and Company. The individual comes in as junior partner, and he must render a reason why he should be admitted. The saloon-keeper, not accustomed to look at the subject from this angle of vision, finds it a conundrum not easy to be solved. Perhaps he will say: "I am a middle man, between the brewer and distiller and the people. They take the golden grains and luscious fruits of the earth, and by their processes change them into alcoholic drinks which leap up to the brain as a panther leaps upon a deer. I do not deliberately desire to do harm, but I must keep my patronage recruited, because if I do this I am sure to become a rich man after a while. That is the reason why I am in the business. I must pay my tax on somebody's fireside, on somebody's cradle, on somebody's dearest and best. In order to succeed I must take away the little fellow from his mother's side, bait for him with cigarettes and cider, music, cards and young company, drawing him away gradually, until after a while I will change that boy's ideas so greatly that he who loved the songs of home and sanctuary shall far better love the bacchanalian ditty of the saloon; he who used to breathe God's name in prayer, shall hiss out that name in curses, and I will so change his face that his mother would not know him, and his soul that God would never recognize it."

Friends, it is because these things are true that womanhood has been aroused at last; for to protect her children is the dearest and most sacred instinct of a woman's heart. In this great, tolerant and free America, we have come forward, and are standing side by side in a grand army of the republic that is just as well known South as North. We have learned something about the weapons of the enemy. He is busy brewing beer; we are busy brewing public sentiment. He is busy distilling whisky, we are busy distilling facts and arguments. He is busy rectifying spirits; we mean to be busy rectifying the spirit that is in manhood.

I want to say to you strong, sturdy men, who have a power to carry this great issue forward beyond what we women can yet achieve, do not forget us when you drop your ballots in the sacred urn where a republic manufactures destiny.

Do you recall the splendid conduct of Conductor Bradley whose heroic story Whittier has made immortal? Rounding a curve, not a great many miles from here, Conductor Bradley saw another train, bearing down upon his own at fearful speed. Bending to the brakes with might and main, "he did his duty as a brave man should," but in the terrific collision he was crushed and mangled with those whom he had tried to save. Taken from the wreck a short time after, the hero spoke no word about himself or friends; but murmured, brokenly, in dying anguish: "Put out the signals for the other train!"

Dear friends, there is another century speeding toward us along the track of time. Don't you almost hear the rumble of the train? Can't you catch the distant whistle of that Twentieth Century Express coming along behind us at a more than lightning speed? We of the nineteenth have suffered pain and loss and almost ruin by the collision of our best beloved with the grinding engine of the liquor traffic. Our cycle is almost at an end. God grant that with devoted loyalty we may "put out the signals for the other train:" that for the twentieth century, so full of light and life, whizzing toward us so rapidly, we may wave aloft in friendly warning the electric torch of scientific temperance instruction, and turn on the glowing head light of prohibitory law!—Frances E. Willard.

That tired feeling, so subtle and yet so overpowering, is entirely overcome by Hood's Sarsaparilla, which tones and strengthens the system and gives a good appetite. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla. "100 Doses One Dollar" is true only of this peculiar medicine.

The Catholic Standard says that Protestantism is a religion entirely congenial to those who think chiefly of themselves, forgetful of others, and who unduly aspire to be "respectable," "influential," "rich." The Protestant Hospitals of Philadelphia and New York care for almost as many Catholics as Protestants, and do this without charge, and ungrudgingly. But all the thanks the Catholic journal can give for such services is to cast upon its the slur that Protestants are indifferent to the poor. What would become of the poor of the Roman Church if Protestants should become for a brief period "indifferent" to them?

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self-destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or dread, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Briefs.

This, from the Florida Christian Advocate, is good:

Different denominations may be best for the present for agreement in worship; but, in the name of religion and common sense, why can not all Christians unite to have religious schools, to put down saloons, to drive out gambling, to elect the right sort of men to office, to stop Sunday work; and to see that law is enforced? This is the unity we need, and, in comparison with the importance of this, all talk about being united in one church is as chaff to wheat.

An old chamber has been discovered in the Guildhall at Stratford-on-Avon in which several thousands of ancient documents have lain mouldering for many years. Some of them are dated 1579, and a large number range from the time of Queen Elizabeth to that of Queen Anne. The London Literary World is in hope that something may be found which will finally extinguish the Bacon-Shakespeare heresy.

The Revised Version has made some very small changes; but some of those changes open endless perspectives of beauty to the eye of the soul. In changing "the" into "my" in one sentence the revisers have lifted half the horizon of the soul's being: "Where is my guest-chamber?" The Lord's "guest-chamber" in every house, where he entertains his friends! The Lord's "guest-chamber" in every heart, where he holds loving converse with his faithful ones! Brother, sister, prepare such a chamber.

We again call the attention of our readers to the fact that an effort is to be made in the next Legislature of Louisiana to repeal or modify the existing Sunday Law. Let all the Christian people of Louisiana make a determined and united effort for its maintenance. Let memorials, signed by everybody, go up to the Legislature from all parts of the State protesting against any change. The people of Louisiana can not now afford to take a backward step in this matter. The evangelical churches of the State can control this matter. The responsibility is on them. Let them meet it with Christian courage.

The Presbyterians are ahead of us, in that the "collection" is placed in the order of worship in the directory for the American Presbyterian Church. This is as it should be, since giving of our substance for the support of the Lord's cause is a very important part of worship. In the Presbyterian order of worship, the collection comes just before the benediction. Will our General Conference rise to the true view of giving, and place the collection somewhere in our order of worship? It will be a great improvement in the matter of worship.

Missionary.

We have just received the following, which explains itself:

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 3, 1888.

REV. C. W. CARTER.

Your favor of May 1, containing New York exchange for one thousand and fifty-four dollars and ninety-five cents, received. We place to the credit of NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for expenses of new missionary to Japan. D. C. KELLEY, Treasurer.

Nashville May Meetings.

MR. EDITOR: By your request I give you an account of the annual meetings in this, the center of Southern Methodism.

The Book Committee, for the first time in the history of the church, perhaps, find an unappropriated balance in their hands, and have actually appropriated five thousand dollars to be distributed among the different Annual Conferences to supplement the support of the widows and orphans of deceased preachers. Let a note of rejoicing be sounded throughout the borders of the entire church! Our book concern is not only self-supporting, but is becoming able to carry out the original provision of the Discipline—to provide for the wants of those who have worn themselves out in the service of the church.

The Review was changed from a bi-monthly to a quarterly paper. The reasons for so doing have not transpired. Under its former arrangement it was growing very popular.

The Publishing House has been fitted up anew in its several apartments, and wears an air of neatness and thrift which is refreshing to behold.

The Bishops are all present, and, without exception, look hearty and as if they were equal to any amount of work. I enclose you the slip containing the plan of episcopal visitation, which you can publish if you wish. You will see that the time of holding one of your patronizing Conferences, the Mississippi, has been appointed two weeks earlier than usual. This will have a damaging effect upon the finances, as the cotton crop will not be sufficiently in hand to enable the people to meet the claims for the various enterprises of the church. I made an appeal for a change back to the old time, but it was too late.

The Woman's Missionary Board is holding daily sessions in McKendree Church. They have had a year of marvelous success. This is only the tenth year of their existence, yet they report that they have collected for missionary purposes during the year over $70,000. This is an increase over the collections of last year of $20,000. They report that they have about $35,000 to their credit in bank. The good sisters look radiant over the success, and Mrs. Hayes, the venerable president, beams benignantly and brightly from the rostrum. What is the use of arguing against the woman's movement? Her quiet and assured march forward to success and triumph refutes all arguments and explodes all the ridicule used to imprison her within the nursery. Dr. Young J. Allen made them a fine address on Friday night, giving them an account of the specific labors of all their representatives. Your readers will be interested to know that very high encomiums were bestowed upon the two who went from the territory patronizing the ADVOCATE, viz: Miss Gordon, of Port Gibson, and Miss Lipscomb, from Columbus. What a tribute to Christianity that these young ladies, reared in affluence and in culture, surrounded by kind friends and elegant appointments, should leave all and go out to teach Jesus to the heathen world!

The Board of Missions were all present except four, and seemed to bring up with them an increased enthusiasm for this great work of the Master. The outside world, and those especially who are disposed to complain at the sums assessed to the various churches, would be surprised to see the struggle made by the members of the Board to reconcile the world-wide demands for the gospel with a meager treasury. The immediate representative of each field makes the showing that the claim he represents is the most imperative, and the Board has to do the best it can to satisfy all according to the estimate of their necessities. "Lord, here are five loaves and a few fishes, but what are they among so many?" May the Great Master bless and multiply as the Board distributes! The whole amount of receipts for 1887-8 are shown by the treasurer's report, just furnished the Board, to be $237,584 40. This is a most admirable showing as compared with the receipts of other years, and yet it falls short of the appropriations of the Board for last year, so that many of the worthy objects provided for must go unsupplied.

Bishop Wilson and Dr. Allen have been appointed delegates to the World's Missionary Convention, to meet in London in June next. Bishop Wilson goes thence to attend our Conferences in China and Japan.

C. G. ANDREWS.

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 5, 1888.

"Gilderoy" to Dr. Abbey.

The venerable Dr. R. Abbey attempts to harmonize the apparently conflicting views of some of your correspondents on the subject of suffering in connection with the atonement. If I have read the Doctor understandingly, he will need some one to harmonize his views with the Word of God, the conscious convictions of men, and with our Wesleyan Arminian theology.

The Doctor says, "God could fully relieve man of all danger and infirmity at a word, without suffering or death." I object to this statement. It presupposes that God might have effected the salvation of man in several different ways, and that, among the many, he chose the best. It also assumes that "suffering and death," as the results of sin, grow not out of the nature of sin, but from the word, ipse dixit, of God, and that "God could, at a word, relieve man of danger and infirmity." Allowing that man's "danger and infirmity," and his liability to "suffering and death," are the natural and necessary results of sin, then Dr. Abbey's utterance is equivalent to saying: "God forgives sin by prerogative"—"at a word," without regard to the principles involved. The moral attributes of God are such that he can not look upon sin with any degree of allowance, nor can he put forth one of his natural attributes to undermine and overthrow one or more of his moral attributes. Sin is an offense against the moral nature and being of God, and, however omnipotent God may be, he can not forgive sin by sovereign power. All-mightiness can not forgive sin, can not work contradictions, and put God in one part against himself in another part. The infinite justice and holiness of God can not be sacrificed or contradicted to make room for benevolence—no, not for infinite benevolence. The suffering and death of Christ express the benevolence of God towards man, and they also express God's infinite and eternal hatred of sin. When Christ saves from "danger and infirmity" and from "suffering and death," he does it by saving from sin. The great question involved is: "How can God be just and yet justify or forgive the ungodly?" "The righteousness of God," his rectitude, was involved in this matter; hence, with profound reverence, I desire to say that God was shut up to this one way of saving man from sin. It was not a matter of God's word, only as his word is an expression of the eternal and self-existent principles of his being. Whoever is born of God hates sin. He hates it because the Spirit of God in him is in eternal opposition to sin. He can not sin and will not sin while led by the Spirit.

As Dr. Abbey says, "this is a subject of immense importance to the theologian, and should be thoroughly studied." The young student of theology will find the Wesleyan Arminian view of it fully set forth in Chapter IV of Summer's Systematic Theology. This is the only part of Dr. Abbey's "brief outline sketch" I desire to "fill up" at this time. GILDEROY.

SENATOBIA, Mississippi.

A Word to the Protestant Citizen.

We have just had elected a new Board of Councilmen in the city of New Orleans. One of the prerogatives of the councilman is the appointment of a director on the Board of Public Schools. As the City Council stands to-day, the majority is composed of Catholics. This will give, of course, a Catholic majority to the Public School Board, for we know well how members of that religious denomination act in such matters. We are not a prophet, but will venture this much in that line, and that is, that this community will not see a Catholic councilman appoint a Protestant, but, without exception, men of their own ecclesiastical faith. This is to be expected. But the point we raise is, May we not expect similar church loyalty on the part of councilmen representing the Protestants of this city? Ought they not to be wide awake just at this point? And what shall we say to a Protestant councilman appointing a Catholic as a director, as was done in the last few days!

The attitude of the Romish Church to the public school system of this country is or ought to be well known. In no single thing does its antagonism and enmity appear than in the requirement that a child shall cease to attend the public school two years before his or her first communion. Let every friend of Protestantism and our country be alive and active here. The Protestant citizen should use his influence at this point, and the Protestant councilman should bear in mind that in his appointments to the Public School Board he not simply reflects his own tastes and affinities, but is profoundly affecting for good or evil tens of thousands of the people of this city.

Our earnest desire is to see constituting that Board men both of mental and moral culture, and every way deserving the position.

Sunday-School Celebration.

On last Sunday was celebrated, in Carondelet Street Church, the forty-second anniversary of the New Orleans District Sabbath-School Union, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. This organization is now under the leadership of Philip Werlein, and the secretary is A. F. Godat. The union is doing good work, and the anniversary celebration was a success. Though the weather was stormy, the large auditorium was fairly filled. The exercises consisted in recitations and songs by the children, reading of the secretary's annual report, and a short address by Rev. Dr. Walker. The children did well in their part, and Dr. Walker paid a beautiful tribute to our deceased Sunday-school workers, W. H. Foster and John G. Parham. The secretary's report shows 1,726 scholars, 208 teachers and $547 contributed for foreign missions by the schools the past year.

It has been estimated that there are now 80,000 salesmen on the road in this country, and that their expense account alone averages $1,625 a year each. This means an outlay of $130,000,000 a year, and counting an average salary of 1,000 per year, the grand total is swelled to $210,000,000 expended by and on travelling salesmen. This immense sum is scattered throughout the entire country, and furnishes an important item of railway and hotel profit.

Christ's Agony.

Cameron, Porter and Abbey have interested the readers of the ADVOCATE on the subject of the suffering of Christ. Each has shed light thereon. Perhaps, it may not be amiss for this scribe to emphasize one element in Christ's suffering that Dr. Abbey has overlooked in his article. I allude to the suffering of the Redeemer's "soul." To my mind this is the paramount element. Dr. Abbey says, "Suffering means animal suffering, or it means nothing." We have not so learned the Bible, which speaks of a "wounded spirit." Did not the prophecy declare that the Redeemer's "soul" was to be made "an offering for sin?" And did not Jesus say, in Gethsemane: "My soul is exceeding sorrowful even unto death"? How great that sorrow was no man is prepared to tell whose agony is not forcing from his system "sweat as it were drops of blood falling to the ground!"

The "mystery" of the ages is this "agony" of the Redeemer in the garden and on the cross, "which things the angels desire to look into."

"O, Lamb of God, was ever pain,
Was ever love like thine?"

The following States have scientific educational temperance laws: Alabama, Connecticut, Iowa, Kansas, Maine, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Washington Territory. There is also a similar law for schools under Federal control in the territories. Just 207,994 persons in the United States pay the government special tax as liquor dealers, 35,870 being in New York State.

Notes.

The result of "Arbor Day" in the tree-less West is that the once barren lands now contain 700,000,000 young and thrifty trees.

Reader, how do you read the last verse of the fifteenth chapter of 1 Corinthians? We have read of a preacher who said that many Christian people had evidently revised the passage so that one phrase was changed to "Always avoiding the work of the Lord!" Is that you?

A Northern brother having asked the editor of the Christian Advocate, of New York, Dr. Buckley, to advocate a law making the use of tobacco a disciplinary offense, received this reply: "We have no sympathy with the Indian weed, neither touching it, tasting it, handling it, nor smelling it, when it can be avoided; but the person who could suggest such a thing as a condition of membership in a Christian church is as much astray in his judgment as the most confirmed tobacco-user is in his practice."

Bishop Foster, of the Northern Church, says that no person should be an official member of the church who does not take some church paper. We know of some pastors down this way who are not only of that opinion, but act upon it, and will not nominate such men for official position. They take position that a man can not "know," much less, "love" the "Methodist doctrine and discipline" who does not read the church paper. Would it not be a good idea for our pastors generally to act upon that view in nominating men for official position?

Mr. Charles Darwin, speaking of New Zealand, in Journal of Researches, says: "The lesson of the missionary is the enchanter's wand. The house had been built, the windows framed, the fields ploughed, and even the trees grafted by the New Zealander. When I looked at the scene I thought it admirable. * * * I took leave of the missionaries with feelings of high respect for their useful and upright characters. I think it would be difficult to find a body of men better adapted for the high office which they fill."

A writer, reviewing Ernest Renan's late book, "History of the People of Israel till the Time of King David," has this keen sentence: "The author acknowledges that the book will not be satisfactory to narrow critics or narrow bigots; and it does require a singular breadth of mind to accept as history a book which rejects as valueless the documents on which it is based and which then evolves from those documents a history that is true, because it might have happened." That is as neat a piece of criticism as we remember to have seen.

We once wrote for this paper an account of a "revival meeting" we held at a certain place, during which nobody was converted and nobody added to the church. Editor Parker's waste-basket caught that communication. We have just read a report of a "revival meeting" in one of our exchanges which beats ours. The preacher wrote: "We had a great revival in our church and we turned out fifteen members." When Gideon started against the Midianites he had thirty-two thousand men. When he came to the real battle 31,700 had dropped out and gone home. "Not by might nor by numbers, but by my spirit, saith the Lord."

The Southern Reporter, published at Sardis, Miss., in a recent issue has the following:

It looks as though the Methodist preachers regard Sardines as a pretty tough set. On Wednesday night of last week, at prayer meeting, Dr. Wier read the first chapter of James and commented somewhat upon it, dwelling especially upon the importance of doing as well as hearing the Word. On Sunday morning Mr. Casey read the same chapter and made similar, but, perhaps, more lengthy and earnest comments upon the points dwelt upon by Dr. Wier on the Wednesday night before, and on Sunday night, Mr. Moon charged his battery with the twenty-second verse of the same chapter, and fired a whole broadside into the unhappy little fishes.

In view of the fact that efforts are to be made to modify the Louisiana Sunday Law in its application to towns and cities, let it be kept before the people and the legislators, that no greater outrage and robbery can be committed than to compel people of any class to labor seven days in the week and pay them for only six days. No matter what "establishment" is kept going on Sunday, somebody is "compelled" to keep it going for nothing. The saloons, markets, railroads, never pay extra for Sunday work. In a twelve-month they get nearly two months' work for which they don't pay a penny. The laborer pays it in an enfeebled body and mind—enfeebled for want of the rest which they require. The legislator who refuses to grant the worker this most inestimable boon deserves to be put upon the rack of perpetual never-ceasing, unintermittent toil.

Personals.

Let our pastors all remember that May 20 is set apart as Children's Day. We hope that due prominence will be given to this throughout all our circuits and stations.

The Central Methodist favors a reunion of the two great branches of Methodism in this country. Speaking of the departed great men on both sides, it says: "Now let their sons draw up a plan of reunion universally acceptable."

The pastor of Fidelity Street Church, Rev. J. T. Sawyer, informs us that he will be ready to dedicate his new church edifice, June 3, at 4 P. M. The church is a beauty, and the pastors and brethren who have worked so earnestly to repair their great loss by fire last year, deserve the highest commendation.

Dr. S. A. Steel, of Louisville, in a note to the Central Methodist, withdraws from the editorial staff of that paper. Accumulating duties forbid his taking on extra work.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Church Extension has determined to extend its operations into Mexico, and Dr. Morton, the secretary, will visit that country and make a personal inspection of the needs of the church.

We are pained to read in the press dispatches of the death of Mrs. L. D. Palmer, of Nashville, Tenn. She died at Kissimmee, Fla.

The editor of the Florida Christian Advocate, Dr Josephus Anderson, who was once in favor of a reunion of the Northern and Southern Methodist churches, says that "now a union of the two churches is not desirable."

Rev. I. S. Hopkins, D. D., president of Emory College, Oxford, Ga., has accepted the position of president of the Georgia Institute of Technology. His will leave vacant the presidency of Emory.

Rev. Atticus G. Haygood, D. D., will preach the commencement sermon of the Palne Institute, June 3.

Mr. Isaac Pitman, the "father of shorthand writing," is still living and seventy-six years of age.

Dr. J. H. Wainwright and wife, of Nevada City, Mo., go as missionaries to Japan about the middle of this month. A correspondent of the St. Louis Advocate says that Dr. Wainwright he is a doctor of medicine, we presume) is the first layman of our church to go to Japan.

The Board of Publication of the Pacific Christian Advocate have elected Rev. W. W. Pinson to the editorship of that paper, and appointed a committee to investigate the feasibility of publishing a daily Christian Advocate.

We have received a communication entitled "Take off the Assessments," signed "S. S. Sup't;" but, as we do not know who "S. S. Sup't" is, we can no publish it. Always let the editor know who you are when writing for the paper.

Mr. Spurgeon has returned to the Baptist Union from which he withdrew some time since.

Hon. Melville W. Fuller has been nominated by the President for Chief Justice in place of Judge Waite, deceased.

Dr. J. M. Trimble is the only man in the General Conference, now in session in New York City, who was in the celebrated Conference in the same city in 1844.

It is said in the Independent that Miss Frances E. Willard will be presented as a candidate for the editorship of one of the official papers of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

Notice.

The thirty-ninth annual commencement of Hiwassee College will occur May 13-15. The valedictory sermon will be preached by Dr. J. P. McFerrin, of Chattanooga. From this "small college" have gone out eighty-six preachers. Three brothers are here now—the eighty-fourth is from Mississippi. Thirteen States have students there. Among these students are eighteen boys, the sons of soldiers too poor to pay expenses, but aided by generous gentlemen in Atlanta—a bright class of boys, by the way, who will make their mark by and by. This class will have twenty-four next year.

Captain Force and Guy Norton returned last Tuesday evening from their Southern trip, after making purchases at Crowley, La. Mr. Norton purchased a fine farm near the town, and Capt. Force secured a small tract near the city and will engage in fruit growing and fancy gardening. They expect to return in a few months to make it their permanent home.—St. Paul (Neb.) Phonograph.

Letter from Japan.

DEAR BROTHER: I have just closed my quarterly meeting on this, the Kobe circuit. We have received twelve persons into the church by baptism during the quarter, and we have eight on probation. There has been an increase in our services during the quarter, and my congregations have been larger. We have just had our week of prayer and self-denial, and it has resulted in great good to us all. The church is revived and there is a deeper spiritual feeling manifest among all the native Christians. Our love-feast on Sabbath was one of deep interest, and we all felt that the Spirit of God was in our midst, and that his blessing was resting upon us. The testimony of those present showed a deep feeling of the Lord's presence. We shall not soon forget that occasion and the wonderful testimony of our native brethren.

The amount collected during this week of prayer was $8 54, in the Kobe Church, which we shall use to aid our young men who are studying for the ministry. Our collections for the quarter amounted to $17 29, not including that collected during the week of prayer. We are trying to collect money to build us a church; but the amounts are coming in slowly. We have secured a lot, and have some six hundred dollars collected; but we shall want, at least, nine hundred more. A beautiful drawing of a church has been sent us by our highly esteemed and beloved brother, A. L. West, of Richmond, Va., whose name is well-known everywhere as a devoted friend of the cause of missions. We pray God's richest blessing upon him and his dear family. Bro. Hunnicutt and others have also contributed toward our church in Kobe, the first Southern Methodist Church in Japan. We sincerely thank them all for their help, their good-will and their earnest prayers, and we sincerely pray God's richest blessing to rest upon them all. Pray for us.

Ever your brother in Christ,

J. W. LAMBUTH.

KOBE, JAPAN, April 10, 1888.

Attention, Brethren!

The treasury of the Ministerial Educational Association of the Mississippi Conference is empty; the board of three beneficiaries is due, and to widows. About ninety dollars is necessary to meet expenses to June 1. Will not our generous contributors and members help us in at once this emergency, by forwarding their annual payment? I have notified by letter most of the members who are in arrears. Some have responded; will not others? Remit by registered letter to

Items of Interest.

In two years the Baptists have baptized 1,000 persons in Cuba.

Two brothers, Noble, all men of Russia, are said to be worth $100,000,000.

Artificial ivory is now made by boiling potatoes in sulphuric acid.

The South African diamond fields last year yielded gems amounting to 3,046,898 carats, valued at over $20,000,000.

Last year Cincinnati consumed 726,112 barrels of beer. At five cents a glass it represents $14,522,240 spent for beer alone.

One hundred and thirty persons, including every druggist in Concord and in Merrimac county, N. H., have been indicted for liquor selling, and there is much excitement in consequence.

Two million and a half is said to be the number of persons who are slaves to Sabbath toil in America, and they generally receive no more than six days' wages for seven days' work.

The "National Drink Bill" of Great Britain is again on the increase, the returns for 1887 being greater by £2,047,895 than the year previous, which year and several preceding had registered a decline. The increase is chiefly on beer, wine coming next.

One thousand dollars have been subscribed in Oregon for the importation of singing birds from Germany to that State.

In Sioux City, when Rev. G. C. Haddock was murdered, there were one hundred saloons running. Now there is not one. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."

In Connecticut there are over eighty-five thousand acres along the Sound shore devoted to oyster cultivation.

M. Henry Harrisse proposes to celebrate the coming 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by the publication of an edition de luxe of all the original letters and other writings of Columbus now in existence relating to his great discovery. Only 500 copies of the work will be printed.

There are 350,000 Germans in New York City.

It is said that 50,000,000 pounds of cotton-seed oil are used in the adulteration of lard in the United States.

During the first three months of the year, 5,000 more emigrants arrived at New York than during the same time last year.

There are 26,945 students in the German universities. Theology, 5,791; law, 5,769; medicine, 6,650; philosophy, 8,735. The Americans number between two and three hundred.

Books and Periodicals.

BOOKS.

THE DEATHLESS BOOK. By Rev. David O. Sears. D.—Lothrop Company, Boston. Eyrich, 130 Canal street, New Orleans. Price, $1 50.

The author in this volume gives a history of the Bible, and considers its influence upon art, science, commerce, government, learning, literature and general civilization in ten chapters. No part of the Bible is obsolete according to this author, and, while it is the most sacred, it is the most human of all books. We quote the closing paragraph:

"In view of the harmony of science with all the teachings of the volume; in recognition of the indebtedness of history to its principles; in the certainty that the principles it declares are the only sure basis of a successful life; in its marvelous adaptation to the necessities of all men; in the proofs borne upon its pages substantiating its claims, we read what no one has yet successfully denied: The World's Deathless Book is the Book of God."

ANDIATOROCTE. By Rev. C. A. Walworth. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Eyrich, 130 Canal street, New Orleans. Price, $1 50.

This is a book of poems, hymns and meditations in verse. There are some fine thoughts clothed in all sorts of verse, and the religious tone which pervades the whole book is indeed quite refreshing.

THE POCKET GUIDE FOR EUROPE. By Thomas W. Knox. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. Eyrich, 130 Canal street, N. O.

This is a very handy little volume, and will be valuable to our friends who are contemplating a trip to Europe this summer. It gives information about steamship lines, countries, cities, "travel talk in four languages," and has a copious index.

FAITH MADE EASY. By James H. Potts, M. A., D. D. Published by Cranston & Stowe, Cincinnati; and Phillips & Hunt, New York. 540 pp.; octavo. $2 50.

This is "a popular statement of the doctrines and evidences of Christianity in the light of modern research and sound biblical interpretation." The persons addressed are laymen, and yet it will be found thoughtful and suggestive to clergymen. All persons in church offices and doing church or Sunday-school work need just such a book.

THE THRONE OF ELOQUENCE. Great Preachers, Ancient and Modern. By E. Paxton Hood. Published by Funk & Wagnalls. 479 pp.; octavo. $2.

It is a contribution to homiletics in an informal and popular vein, and, while not substituting the works in our Conference course, will be found valuable as a side-light after they have been read. The abounding biographical illustrations insure entertainment, and give a spring-like uplift to the reader.

THE VOCATION OF THE PREACHER. By E. Paxton Hood. Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18, 20 Astor Place, New York.

Like the above work by same author, the object sought seems to have been recreation in homiletics. Among the topics are: The Instinct of Souls, Frederick William Faber, Mediæval and Post-Mediæval Preachers, Concerning the Imagination, Billingsgate in the Pulpit. No one will regret the expenditure of $2 for this handsome volume.

YANKEE GIRLS IN ZULU LAND. By Louise Vescelius Sheldon. Published by Worthington Company, 747 Broadway, New York. $2 25.

The binder, printer and engraver have all done exquisite work, which they have priced low. The authoress describes her travels in a very sprightly, realistic style. It is capital reading for a tired man or woman.

BEFO' DE WAR. Echoes in negro dialect. By A. C. Gordon and Thomas N. Page. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. 131 pp. $1.

Old Virginia life in the white folk's house is told in a number of short poems by negroes, and the tender love and homage felt by the slave for his kind master is pathetically told.

FATHER SOLON; OR, THE HELPER HELPED. By Rev. DeLoss Lull. Published by Wilbur B. Ketcham, 71 Bible House New York City. 367 pp. $2 50.

This is a book for home reading, and designed to illustrate the happy arts and ways of home-life. It is a romance, but for purpose of impressing the obligations to a fragrant domestic life, and will serve indirectly to counteract Mormon influences.

THE HOLY DAY. By Rev. L. L. Pickett, Dangerfield, Texas. Price 10 cents.

BAPTISM AND IMMERSION. By William Hewson—a layman. J. D. Barbee, Nashville, Tenn. Price 20 cents.

THE SUCCESS OF THE GOSPEL AND THE FAILURE OF THE NEW THEOLOGIES. By John F. Hurst D. D. Wilbur B. Ketcham, 71 Bible House, New York. Price 10 cents.

PERIODICALS.

—The Book-Buyer is a good monthly for persons making up libraries. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Price 10 cents; $1 a year.

—The Forum, for May, a larger edition of which was called for in advance than had ever been issued of any previous number, contains articles on the following wide range of public questions: The Judiciary, Municipal Government, River and Harbor Bills, The Liquor Traffic, The Railroads, The Public Schools, The Admission of Utah; and of foreign questions, The Irish Problem, and the Temporal Power of the Pope. The growth of the Forum is a significant indication of the taste of the American reading public, which does not demand sensationalism, but does desire the discussion of practical living topics. The Forum is published at 253 Fifth Avenue, New York. Price $5 per annum.

—The New Princeton Review, for May, has Balzac, by John S. Fiske; Ethics and Economics, by Washington Gladden; An Episode in Central American History, by William E. Curtis; Criticisms, Notes and Reviews. A valuable part of this periodical is the record of events at home and abroad. A. C. Armstrong & Son, New York. Price $3 per year.

—The Century, for May, is all that anybody can desire in a monthly magazine. It is the beginning of the thirty-sixth volume of this popular periodical whose price from the first has been cheap at $4 per annum. Century Company, Union Square, New York.

Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is becoming a universal favorite for restoring gray hair to its original color, and making hair grow thick and strong.

Louisiana Notes.

The State Press Association held its annual session, last week, in Opelousas.

Our new State superintendent of public instruction says, he believes "in compulsory education in law; but in fact we have not the means to provide for those now actually attending the public schools."

Gen. Beauregard has resigned his office of adjutant-general of the State of Louisiana.

Hon. C. H. Luzenburg has been appointed district attorney for the parish of Orleans, vice Lionel Adams, resigned.

The Postoffice Department has established a railroad postal service from New Orleans to Covington, via Slidell and Abita Springs, six times a week. The service begins next Monday.

Ruston is to have a compress and a canning factory.

The State Medical Society, at a meeting in Monroe recently, adopted resolutions requesting the Legislature to pass a law requiring the public schools to give instruction on the effect of alcohol on the human system.

There are 18,639 names of scholars on the rolls of the public schools of New Orleans. The average attendance for April was 16,378.

Mississippi Notes.

The Jackson Daily Advertiser suspended publication May 1.

The New South, W. C. Welbourne, editor, has appeared at Ellisville.

A Chicago syndicate has purchased 10,000 acres of land in Franklin county for $3 per acre.

There is talk that an effort will be made to remove the court-house from Meadville to Roxie, on the L. N. O. and T. railroad.

Prof. R. W. Jones, of Columbus, has been chosen president of the Young Men's Christian Association of Mississippi.

Col. Ben Lane Posey, one of the veterans of the Mexican War, and of the Palmetto Regiment of South Carolina troops in the Civil War, died at Bay St. Louis, May 2, aged 61 years.

Maj. W. T. Walthall, of Biloxi, has been confirmed as United States Consul to Demerara.

"Fifteen Objections to Church Entertainments."

The contents of this pamphlet is a sermon preached in Carondelet Street Church by Rev. Beverly Carradine, and was published by request. The price is put at about cost—i. e., ten cents per copy, $1 per dozen, $7 per hundred.

Another Extraordinary Offer.

After this date we will include in our club arrangement the New York Weekly World, the price of which, including all postage, will be three dollars. This amount will entitle the subscriber to one copy of the "World's History of the United States," post paid.

This history is on a new plan. It is the record of the events of our history in the order in which they happened. There are no moralizings, no opinions put forth, no criticisms offered in regard to anything. It is not a political record merely, but one of all sorts of facts that have contributed to make our history. Discoveries, inventions, financial and literary matters, are all noted. One merit of the work is, that it can not grow old. The date of an event, when once ascertained, is fixed for all time. The book has twenty-four very good illustrations. We regard it as a valuable book for every student.

Old and new subscribers are entitled to the premium. Subscribers who have already paid will receive the History and the Weekly World one year by sending one dollar. Cash to accompany all orders.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

"Economy is wealth." If the person who invented the proverb will call at this office any afternoon, we will present him a goodly supply of economy for half its face value in wealth. We have more economy than we really need.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

"Murphy, moight oi ax yez whunder it's natheral or artificial fur yez to be dat bow-legged?" "Artificial, Molke; oi rode up in a b'loon wan toime an walked back."

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

Our Young People.

ONE OF THESE DAYS.

BY CHARLOTTE W. THURSTON.

"Please, gwan'ma, me wan' to go barefoot, me do
Coz Diddy tit'Belen she always does too.
Her gwan'ma don't mind it a bit, what she does;
Me don't want to wear any stockings and shoes."
Two little round arms are entolding her tight—
Poor grandma! her cap is a pheasant sight:
But D's little hot grandma is fair will bemoan
While that cheek of pink velvet is pressed to her own.

"Go barefoot! Come, this's a new fancy," she says.
"Come of these days, darling—one of these days."
A week and a day
Went a-fading away,
And sweet little Katie was busy at play.
When loving old grandmamma takes off her cap,
And draws down the shades for a bit of a nap.
What sound seems her wakening senses to greet?
The hurrying patter of bare little feet!
A tiny white figure she spies through the gloom
Is tottering and capering all round the room.
"What! taken off, darling, your stockings and shoes.
Is this the way grandmamma's love you abuses?"
The tiny white figure comes close to her side
With blue eyes of innocence opening wide;
The sweet little vision soft coaxingly says,
While the bare chubby feet she demurely displays,
"It's one of these days, gwan'ma—one of these days."

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl eleven years old. My father takes your nice paper and the Nashville Advocate. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. My teacher's name is Mrs. Gilder. I like her very much. I go to school every day. My teacher's name is Mr. R. R. Smith. My studies are grammar, history, geography, arithmetic and spelling. My father is a preacher. We have preaching every third Sunday. We have stayed here four years. We have to move at Conference. We have good friends here. We will hate to move and leave them. I will close for fear my letter will be too long. I want to see my letter in print.

Your little friend,
DAISY LESTER.
ATLANTA, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to a newspaper, I thought I would write. I will answer Katie Eagan's question in regard to the number of letters in the Bible: There are 3,566,480 letters, 773,765 words, 31,173 verses, 1,139 chapters and 66 books. I have gone to school but very little. I am now only eleven years old. I wish to see this in the next paper. I will close by asking which is the longest verse in the Bible? Don't put this in the waste-basket. Your little friend,

Czar Peter's Shoes.

Peter the Great often visited the iron foundry of Ulullee, about ninety versts from Moscow, and on one occasion passed a whole month there. Laying aside all the cares of state, the Czar occupied himself while there entirely in examining minutely every portion of the great establishment, and threw himself with ardor into the study of the blacksmith's trade.

He soon succeeded in making himself master of this art, and some days previous to his departure succeeded in making eighteen pounds of iron, stamping the imperial mark upon every piece of metal that came under his hand.

This work completed, Czar Peter went to the director of the works, and, having expressed his satisfaction with them, inquired what wages he was in the habit of giving his hands for every pound of iron they smelted. The manager replied: "Three kopecs."

"Then," said his emperor, "I must have earned fifty-four." The manager wished to pay him in so many gold ducats, saying that he could not remunerate his sovereign like a common workman, but Peter replied by saying:

"Keep your ducats, and let me duly receive what you generally pay; unless, indeed, I have worked better than the other workmen. I'm in great want of a pair of shoes, and shall buy them with my wages."

So saying, he showed his employer, and at the same time subject, the miserable, worn-out pair of shoes in which his feet were at the time incased.

The fifty-four kopecs were handed over to him, and eagerly accepted; and with them he purchased a pair of shoes, which he was proud of showing to every one as having been earned by the sweat of his brow.

A piece of iron smelted by Peter the Great, and stamped with the imperial mark, is still shown in the foundry of Ulullee, while another is kept in a museum of curiosities at St. Petersburg.

Good Boys.

The wisest teacher may be at fault when he attempts to foretell the future of his pupils. The model boy, who escapes bad marks and wins prizes, whose hair is always smooth, his teeth and nails always as they should be, who never drops his slate, nor slams the door, nor leaves it open—how natural to predict for him sure success in after life!

Perhaps he will achieve it. Probably he will do so if the foundation of his goodness is strong and well laid. But if it is built up on a basis of timidity, or inordinate love of approbation, it indicates weakness of character, not strength: and in the rude struggles of men, strength wins the victory—strength intelligently used.

We once knew a boy who was, in all visible things, an absolute pattern. Not a flaw could be found in his conduct, any more than a spot of dirt could be found on his garments. Yet at the age of thirty-five this model was a man in ruins—bankrupt in fortune, debauched in morals, past any reasonable hope of reform: and those who had known him best were obliged to admit that the model boy was father of the dissolute man.

His goodness at school had been genuine as far as it went, but it did not spring either from principle or from benevolence. At the first rude test it had disclosed itself as empty and shallow. Then his former companions recalled that he had always been unpopular, that he had had few friends, that he had been the friend of few of his fellows.

Perhaps the surest mark of inferiority that a human creature can show is coldness of heart. The human quality of human nature is love. He is most a man who loves most, and he is least a man who has least capacity of affection.

A good case in point is Abraham Lincoln, now newly revealed to us in a popular biography. He was far from being a model boy, or an exemplary youth; but he could love, pity, give and help. He could save the life of the town drunkard whom he found freezing by the roadside. Some of his old comrades remember to this day his bursts of human rage at cruelty done to turtles and cats. He had his faults: but he could think, he could feel, and he could love. He was a good boy.—Youth's Companion.

In General Debility, Emaciation, Consumption and Wasting in Children, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is a most valuable food and medicine. It creates an appetite for food, strengthens the nervous system, and builds up the body. Please read: "I tried Scott's Emulsion on a young man whom Physicians at times gave up hope. Since he began using the Emulsion his Cough has ceased, gained flesh and strength, and from all appearances his life will be prolonged many years." —JOHN SULLIVAN, Hospital Steward, Morganza, Pa.

Vanderbilt and His Father.

The son was then thirty-two years old, and himself a father. They were on board the steam yacht Northern Star, on their way to St. Petersburg. William, who was a habitual smoker, was puffing his favorite cigar. "Bill," said the Commodore, "I wish you'd give up that smoking habit of yours. I'll give you ten thousand dollars if you will."

"You need'nt give me anything," was the son's answer, as he flung the cigar overboard. "Your wish is sufficient." He never smoked afterward.

Would that more of our young men would follow his example.

An old painter watched a little fellow who amused himself making drawings of his pot and brushes, easel and stool, and said, "That boy will beat me one day." So he did, for he was Michael Angelo.

About Lamps.

Don't have in every room a beautiful lamp, softened and shaded so that it is "just light enough to see how dark it is." The "dim religious light" is becoming and æsthetic, but somewhere—wherever the most reading is done—we want a good, strong light. I have in my mind a picture of a great six-foot man, whom I know, wandering helplessly around, from one shaded, lace-trimmed lamp to another, trying "to find a lamp without a petticoat," by which to read his evening paper. Let the useful German student, or the Argand drop-light, hold a place of honor, especially if there are very young or very old eyes to bend over the printed page. There are many lamps beautiful to lighten a dark corner, which are useless on a center-table. There has been a species of carved brass shades invented lately, set here and there, with great bull's-eyes of colored glass. Beware of it! It is fair to look on, but difficult to read by. First, the light through the red bull's-eye will smite your long-suffering optic, and if you dodge that, it is only to fall into the more pensive blue. After prancing around one of these shades a whole evening, I went to bed and dreamed I was looking at fireworks all night.

Rose is the prettiest all-over color for a shade, and yellow next; blue is apt to make people look a little ghastly. There are all kinds of crocheted, silk, ribbon, lace and paper shades, but they all lose their color before long if put on next to the glass shade, and then they look so scorched and forlorn, and show so plainly that they "have seen better days," that one regrets the time spent in making them. I saw some pretty shades lately, made of pink and yellow crape. They were just big circles of the crape, with a hole cut in the middle for the chimney and top of the shade. The lower edge was trimmed with lace. They fell in soft folds, and shaded a lamp without extinguishing it.

Now a word as to the care of lamps, which few servants understand. They should be kept perfectly clean, and filled every day. The wick should be rubbed off, not cut, and the chimneys washed whenever they are the least smoked, with a little ammonia and water, which cleans them instantly. There is nothing which will reward your care more, for a pretty, well-trimmed lamp lends beauty to a whole room, while a smoky, bad-smelling one will destroy an entire evening's pleasure.—Congregationalist.

RULES FOR EATING.—There are some good rules for feeding as to quantity. When our food is simple and natural in kind and quality and mode of preparation, there is little danger of eating too much. There is little danger, for example, of eating too many grapes, apples, pears or bananas. Salt, sugar, spices and luxurious cookery tempt to excess. With men, as with animals, a natural diet is self-limiting, and we are disposed to stop when we have got enough. The more artificial the food, the more elaborate and luxurious the feast, the more liability to overload the stomach, overtask the digestive power, and overweight the forces of life. Simplicity of food is a condition of health, and promotes longevity. The quantity of food which enables a man to do his daily work without loss of weight is precisely what he requires. He supplies the daily waste—no more and no less. This quantity may vary a little with each individual, but everyone can easily ascertain his own measure of requirement by reducing the quantity of daily food until he finds a balance of force and weight. It is my opinion that the average quantity of water-free ailment required, say by business and literary men, is twelve ounces. Men of great muscular activity may require sixteen to twenty ounces. I have found myself in very good condition for sedentary work on eight or ten ounces. When any one is in good condition for his work and keeps his normal weight, he has food enough. Dr. Nicholl's advice is, find this quantity by experiment, and then habitually keep to it.

"DON'T suppose, if you have that pain through the right side and shoulder blade, that yellowness of the skin and whites of the eyes, and furred appearance of the tongue, that these indications are of little account, or will depart of themselves. Much better take Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Pillets and remedy the trouble. 25c. per vial.

Long-Standing
Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Hot Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years and suffered terribly, and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Pennington, Ga.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wright, 9 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased. I my trouble began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and after faithfully continuing for some time this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. RALEIGH—It is with saddened hearts that once again we notice a vacant place in our school. This time death came so suddenly into our midst, that it is with difficulty we can yet realize that little FREDDIE VAUGHN is gone from among us. Only a few days since he was a bright, joyous lad, active and full of the beautiful life of careless, happy boyhood. Now he is with him who hath said: "suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." It is needless to attempt a panegyric upon the character and life of this dear boy. Those who knew him loved him. Manly, brave, yet tender and gentle as a girl, he was his mother's joy. Teachers and companions alike remember him with affection, and mourn, not for the bright inheritance he has entered upon, but for the heartaches his going has made. He was fond of attending service and Sabbath-school, and his little life gave evidence of a love for the Savior. We feel that for him, "all is well."

Resolved, That in the death of Freddie Vaughn, our school has lost a faithful member, his teachers and companions a well-beloved pupil and comrade, and his mother a noble son.

Resolved, That to the latter we tender the sympathy that wells up from our hearts, feeling the burden of her sorrow, and pray our heavenly Father to comfort her with the sweet incense of his love.

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes, and a copy furnished his bereaved mother, and a copy sent to the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

BROWN—JOSEPH W. BROWN, son of Rev. George W. Brown, was born August 1, 1871, and died at Gallman, Miss., February 25, 1888. Joseph's mother died when he was quite small; but the impress of her love, coupled with a father's prayers, led Joseph to seek church fellowship with the Methodists at the age of twelve years. He was quiet and unobtrusive in disposition, beloved by all that knew him. During the winter he left home on a visit to relations near Gallman, intending to farm this year with his brother Edgar near there. He had scarcely arrived before disease, in form of meningetis, seized upon him. It soon assumed a typhoid form, and for seven long weeks he laid a sufferer. The resident pastors of the Methodist and Baptist Church visited him often, and Joseph courted their company and sought their godly intercessions at a throne of grace. He expressed himself as trusting in Jesus and prepared to die. Attendant loved ones had strong hopes of his recovery, and, while the symptoms were all favorable, suddenly he expired. Thus passed away the loved son and brother. None doubt but that he sleeps in Jesus, and while "absent from slght he is present with the Lord."

RICHEY—SISTER LUCY J. G. RICHEY, daughter of William G. and Judith E. Jordan, and wife of William B. Richey, was born June 30, 1815, and died April 4, 1888. She professed religion while at school in Columbus, Miss., in 1830; joined the Missionary Baptist Church, and soon after she joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of which she remained not only a consistent, but a devoted, member until the day of her death. Sister Richey suffered much and for a long while from cancer, but bore her sufferings as only a Christian can. Truly, it may be said of her that she was made purer by suffering. Her end was peace. In her death Marrah Chapel has lost one of its purest members; her husband, all that can be embraced in the word "wife;" her children, a tender, praying mother, and her aged mother, her brothers and sister, a tender, loving one who by example "taught them how to live and showed them how to die."

May the "God of all grace" sanctify this loss to all of our good, and bring us all to safely join our sister "where the old is ever new," and where the skies are ever blue!

STOCKWELL.—The subject of this sketch—THOMAS STOCKWELL—was born in Yorkshire, England, December 15, 1832; came to this country, December, 1842, and died at his home, in Brookstown, La., September 1, 1883. Bro. Stockwell joined the Methodist Church, 1855, and was converted in 1857 or '58. He was elected steward soon after, which office he filled with credit to himself and friends until the Master called to him to come up higher. He was a consistent member, a plain, unassuming, conscientious Christian man, quietly doing his duty as he saw it, with the fear of God ever before him. In 1851 he married a Methodist lady and a devoted wife, who says she has no doubt of his having been ready to go. He loved his Bible—the book of all books. He was a patient sufferer for some time when death released him from all sorrow and pain. It was not my privilege to know Bro. Stockwell personally, but I have learned from some of my predecessors that he was a great lover of his church, doing as much for its support, if not more, than any other on the work. He leaves a devoted wife and six children to weep after him, but they should rejoice over the life that he lived while with them, and endeavor, by God's grace, to follow on his footsteps.

May the Lord bless the bereaved wife and children, and at last give them all a home in heaven with their dear father who has gone before!

G. D. ANDERS.

MEYERS.—Ten years ago, the writer, while making his rounds on the Sea-shore district, formed the acquaintance of the subject of this obituary, MRS. MENA MEYERS, and her family. Since then he served as their pastor for two years. She was born in Mecklinburg-Schwerin, Germany, August 24, 1821, and died at her home in Moss Point, Miss., January 1, 1888, being nearly sixty-four years of age. She had been in the United States twenty-seven years, and, bringing with her the thrift, industry and religion acquired in her native land, she and her family prospered in all things and gained the respect and confidence of those who knew them. In 1868, under the ministry of Rev. M. E. Bull, of the Alabama Conference, she joined the Methodist Church. Consistent and practical in her religion, she took an active, generous part in the support of the institutions of the church. The pastor was made glad, not for the quarterage only, but for many things she brought to his home. Her dying words to her daughters were those of complete triumph. In answer to their expressed hope that she might still survive, she would say: "No, never; let me die. I am ready and waiting to go; so why should I stay? Let me go."

THOMAS PRICE.

ROBERSON.—Miss ANNA L. ROBERSON, daughter of J. W. and Mary E. A. Roberson, was born August 20, 1869; professed religion about ten years ago, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in which she lived until the day of her death, April 1, 1888, which occurred at New Albany, Miss. Miss Anna was a modest, unpretending, humble Christian. She was thoughtful: had made all her arrangements as to where and how she should be buried, and, above all, she had her house in order, was waiting the summons of the Master. Her last testimony for Christ was cheering and beautiful. Her father says he has lost his most efficient adviser and help, spiritually. Our church loses a member much admired, and the young ladies of the town a model for example. But we "sorrow not as those who have no hope." Let us meet her in the sweet by-and-by.

D. W. RABB.

EVANS.—In Purvis, Miss., MABEL AMEDIE EVANS, aged three years, five months and six days, born September 11, 1884; died February 21, 1888; the only child of W. A. and Lucy C. Evans.

Death, the old reaper, has again plucked a bright blossom of earth—plucked and taken it to the Father above. When we look upon the grief of the stricken parents, we wonder that death did not spare one so pure, bright and dearly beloved. To-day little Mabel sleeps beneath the sod, leaving a vacancy in the home, and a sad yearning in the hearts for the lost behind. May the fond "mamma and papa" find consolation in knowing that she is now an angel of light!

A FRIEND.

SICK headache is the bane of many lives. To cure and prevent this annoying complaint use Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Pills. They are agreeable to take, and gentle in their action.

Self-denial is the first law of discipleship. It is the foundation-stone in every solid religious character. Self-crucifixion is the threshold of all acceptable work for Christ. It is the companion and forerunner of cross-bearing. Christ announced it as the universal and unchanging law of following him: "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow me." Self can not be a follower of Christ. It can not and will not serve him. Therefore, self must be crucified before Christ can be served. It takes courage to say No in many cases, but to say No to self, to hush the clamors of appetite, to deny some habit spoiled by indulgence, is the most difficult of all denials. Self-denial gives value to our acts in the estimate of God. The widow's two mites, valued by their money-worth, were mean, but estimated by the amount of self-denial they represented, they exceeded in value all the rich gifts of all the wealthy. Wonderful principle which can so enhance the poor value of two mites!—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

DIZZINESS, nausea, drowsiness and distress after eating can be cured and prevented by taking Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Pillets.

Lightning Conductors.

Prof. Tyndall, writing to the London Times, says:

"Your recent remarks on thunder-storms and their effects induce me to submit to you the following facts and considerations. Some years ago a rock lighthouse on the coast of Ireland was struck and damaged by lightning. An engineer was sent down to report on the occurrence, and as I then held the honorable and responsible post of scientific adviser to the Trinity House and Board of Trade, the report was submitted to me.

"The lightning conductor had been carried down the lighthouse tower, its lower extremity being carefully imbedded in a stone perforated to receive it. If the object had been to invite the lightning to strike the tower, a better arrangement could hardly have been adopted. I gave directions to have the conductor prolonged immediately, and to have added to it a large terminal plate of copper, which was to be completely submerged in the sea. The obvious convenience of a chain as a prolongation of the conductor caused the authorities in Ireland to propose it, but I was obliged to veto the adoption of the chain. The contact of link with link is never perfect, I had, moreover, beside me a portion of a chain cable through which a lightning discharge had passed, the electricity in passing from link to link encountering a resistance sufficient to enable it to partially fuse the chain.

"The abolition of resistance is absolutely necessary in connecting a lightning conductor with the earth, and this is done by closely embedding in the earth a plate of good conducting material and of large area. The largeness of area makes atonement for the imperfect conductivity of the earth. The plate, in fact, constitutes a wide door through which the electricity passes freely into the earth, its disruptive and damaging effects being thereby avoided. These truths are elementary, but they are often neglected.

"I watched with interest some time ago the operation of setting up a lightning conductor on the house of a neighbor of mine in the country. The wire rope, which formed part of the conductor, was carried down the wall, and comfortably laid on the earth below, without any terminal plate whatever. I expostulated with the man who did the work, but he obviously thought he knew more about the matter than I did. I am credibly informed that this is a common way of dealing with lightning conductors by ignorant practitioners, and the Bishop of Winchester's palace at Farnham has been mentioned to me as an edifice 'protected' in this fashion. If my informant be correct, the 'protection' is a mockery, a delusion and a snare."

ELECTRICAL MEASURES.—Electricity is no longer used in a haphazard way, as it was a few years ago, but it is accurately measured out for the work required of it, its quantities, according to Prof. Wm. A. Anthony, being comparable to those of more ponderable gas, oil, or water. Its quantity, measured in units called coulombs, may be considered as analogous to pounds of a gas or a liquid; potential, measured in volts, analogous to pounds per square inch of fluid pressure; capacity, measured in farads, analogous to cubic feet of a vessel for holding fluids; while the strength of current, measured in amperes, find no close analogue in fluid measurements, though this is, perhaps, the most important of all, and furnishes the fundamental unit of the whole system. Another very important quantity is the resistance of bodies to the flow of electricity, which may be compared, qualitatively, to the fractional resistance which fluids experience in flowing through pipes, and is measured in ohms.

There is music in heaven because there is no self-will. Music goes on certain laws and rules. Man did not make the laws of music; he has only found them out, and, if he be self-willed and break them, there is an end of music instantly; all he brings out is discord and ugly sounds. Music is a pattern and type of heaven, and of the everlasting life of God, which perfect spirits live in heaven; a life of melody and order in themselves; a life in harmony with each other and with God.—Chas. Kingsley.

Some Church Problems in Aphorism.

The world's deepest misery, like its sublimest faith, is without speech.

Only small needs have vital force enough to utter the wild wail of despair.

The Protestant world hinkls its churches as if it expected only our most worthy selves and well-behaved and highly respected neighbors, and advantageous commercial friends, to worship in them.

The anarchist is a person who believes that his worst enemy is the man who owns a house, that dynamite is the only true gospel; and that the only future is none at all.

American infidelity is only the cast-off rags from the infidel wardrobes of Germany.

Prescription for making an anarchist: Between the upper millstone of our neglect to meet the emigrant, on his arrival, with the gospel in his own tongue, and the nether millstone of a criminal neglect of his children, we grind out the anarchist.

The wine-glass is an opaque thing, and God can not be seen through it.

These are the days, and America is the paradise, of doing all things, or pretending to do them, by the omnipotent committee.

The crown and glory of all true union is for each unit to be at its best. The links, and not the impersonal chain, hold the anchor.

That is the most efficient organization which compels the most effective use of the individual force.

The only way to melt the wall of ice which rises between the masses and the church, is for every individual Christian to kindle a fire at its base.

Let the church observe as much system in its evangelistic methods to reach the one house and the one person as the politician does to reach the one voter.

Christ always fed the hungry multitude by individual servitors.

Protestantism has yet to learn from Romanism the whole full lesson of woman's worth and force in the church.

The church of Christ, in its most exalted hours, has never been afraid to be in the most unpopular minority.

Nothing strong in truth or magnificent in possession has ever come to the church by falling, as ripe fruit, in its open hand. The treasures of the church have been won, like pearls, from the ocean depths, or pure gold from the white-heated furnace.

The birthplace of the church was at the foot of a cross.

God is always on the side of his kingdom and the men who love it.

The American church is getting into the firm conviction that the whole heathen world will be won to Christ. But when shall we be convinced that the whole Christian world will be won to Christ?

We have half won our victory when we see the place where defeat is possible.

The glory of the weak is that before them God has placed his greatest promises.

The Chinaman ought to be as free to land anywhere on our shores as the American missionary is to step ashore on every foot of the twenty-five hundred miles of the Chinese coast.

The day is sure to come—we see the twilight now—when the saloon will be buried so deep that no pick and spade of even a Schliemann shall be able to exhume it.

The saloon, that venerable structure of the alcoholic style of architecture, is already taking on the look of a useless antique of the paleolithic age.—Bishop Hurst, in Independent.

As the Scriptures assume the existence of rich men in the church, it can not be the duty of rich Christians to impoverish themselves by giving away all that they possess. But as it is God who gives the power to get wealth, it is the duty of wealthy Christians to contribute to the benevolent and philanthropic undertakings of the church in proportion to their ability. Faith in God and gratitude for past mercies should be evinced by practical expressions of liberality. In speaking of men of wealth we do not mean merely persons of great riches, but those also who have acquired sufficient wealth to enable them to give material assistance to the enterprises of the church without seriously interfering with family or business claims.—Christian Guardian.

For The Nervous
The Debilitated
The Aged.

Medical and scientific skill has at last solved the problem of the long needed medicine for the nervous, debilitated, and the aged, by combining the best nerve tonics, Celery and Coca, with other effective remedies, which, acting gently but efficiently on the kidneys, liver and bowels, remove disease, restore strength and renew vitality. This medicine is

Paine's Celery Compound

It fills a place heretofore unoccupied, and marks a new era in the treatment of nervous troubles. Overwork, anxiety, disease, lay the foundation of nervous prostration and weakness, and experience has shown that the usual remedies do not mend the strain and paralysis of the nervous system.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5.

WITH STANDARD SELECTIONS.

BY IRA D. SANKEY, JAMES McGRANAHAN AND GEO. C. STEBBINS.

234 Hymns, a Complete Book in Itself.

NOW READY

and used by Mr. MOODY in his Meetings

Six years having elapsed since Gospel Hymns No. 4 was issued, Christian workers throughout the land have felt the need of additional new songs, and to meet this demand GOSPEL HYMNS No. 5 has been prepared. Each piece in the book has been carefully tested by the authors, and only those retained that are especially adapted for use in devotional services.

No. 5

Contains a greater number of new songs than any of the preceding volumes, together with the best of the old favorites and standard selections of unquestioned merit.

This collection contains 208 pages, of the same size and shape as other numbers of the series, but, while greatly increased in size, the prices are the same as for preceding single volumes, viz:

Price per 100, by Express, Charges not Prepaid:
Music Edition, Boards Covers.....$30 00
Word Edition, Paper Covers..... 5 00
" Minion Type, Board Covers..... 10 00

If ordered by mail, add per cents per copy to Music and two cents to Word Editions.

☞ Former editions of GOSPEL HYMNS are still published. No. 5 is not expected to supersede, but to supplement them.

No. 5 will not be bound with the consolidated book.

EDUCATIONAL.

Mansfield Female College.
1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. D. F. Hadsle, alsoof Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks, extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 288 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A Burlington freight train was wrecked in Chicago, on May 3, by the strikers.

A new steel company has been formed in Birmingham, Ala., with a capital of $1,000,000.

Winona, Minn., is partly under water.

A charter was filed in Topeka, Kan., May 3, called "The Farmers' Trust of the Mississippi Valley." The capital stock is nearly $1,000,000. The charter is signed by citizens of fourteen States and three Territories.

On May 3, Senator Stewart introduced a bill to execute the stipulations of the new Chinese treaty. It absolutely prohibits, after ninety days from its passage, the entry of Chinese laborers or laborers of Chinese descent, excepting only such as were at the date of the treaty, or shall be ninety days after the passage of the act, in the United States, and who may leave the country having a right to return in pursuance of the terms of the treaty.

The Progressive Labor party, formed in opposition to the Henry George party, was declared dissolved by its general committee on resolutions, declaring that it had accomplished its object with the aid of the withdrawal of Henry George from his party.

At the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, in session in New York, on May 4, a debate was opened as to the eligibility of women lay-delegates in the Conference.

In the investigation of the Jackson (Miss.) election, Senator Chandler failed to make out a case.

The stockholders of the consolidated Chesapeake and Equitable Gas Companies of Baltimore have agreed upon a plan for consolidation. The stock will amount to $11,000,000.

At the request of counsel for John W. Keeley, he has been granted an extension of sixty days in the time for the inspection of the Keeley motor ordered by the court.

A powder-laden car on the Philadelphia and Reading railroad, near Mt. Carmel, colliding with a detached portion of the train, was fired by the concussion. Seven lives were lost, thirty injured, and a large amount of property destroyed.

The Methodists had an immense mass meeting in New York, on May 6, under the auspices of the New York City Church Extension and Missionary Society.

The River and Harbor Bill has passed through the House. This great result is very largely due to the energy, industry and tact of the Hon. N. C. Blanchard, chairman of the committee.

Revs. G. J. Hackett, of Louisiana and T. J. Walney, of Mississippi, have been elected vice-presidents of the American and Foreign Bible Society.

Governor Hill, of New York, has vetoed the bill passed by the Legislature repealing the law passed last year making Saturday afternoon a half holiday.

The plumbers and carpenters of Troy, N. Y., have struck for eight hours.

FOREIGN.

Fifteen banking houses in Buenos Ayres are said to have suspended within ten days. The liabilities of one of the banks exceed 7,000,000 pesos. The government bank refuses to discount bills. Italian houses suffer heavily.

The Sultan refuses to submit the differences between Morocco and the United States, in reference to the men imprisoned at Eabat, to arbitration, and the dispute has been reopened.

It is reported that a serious outbreak has occurred in Moaster, in Servia. The Servian and Greek portion of the populace are said to have united to oppose the authorities of Turkey.

A dispatch from Berlin to the London Standard says that clear proofs have been received of the existence of French and Russian intrigues against Italy.

Relations between Turkey and Greece have improved and the two governments have agreed not to recall embassadors.

The death is announced in London, May 5, of Sir Charles Tilston Bright, one of the projectors of the first transatlantic cable, who was the engineer-in-chief of the expedition which carried out the project and who has since been prominently identified with the extension of submarine telegraphs throughout the world.

The people of a number of parishes in Ireland have warned the priests that if the Pope's rescript against the league is read in the chapels they will protest against it by leaving.

At a conference in London, May 4, between representatives of the printing and allied trades and a section of the London Chamber of Commerce, the International Copyright Bill now before the United States Senate was denounced.

An epidemic prevails in Madrid. It is feared the disease is of choleric nature, and its spread is attributed to the extreme heat and the drinking of impure milk.

The Belfast Whig states that Mr. Gladstone gave an audience to three Parnellite members of Parliament. Lord Roseberry was present. The subject discussed was a proposal to draft an Irish local government scheme as a stepping-stone to home rule.

The shoemakers have struck in Berlin. There are now 1,500 workmen out.

General Von Schweinitz, the German embassador at St. Petersburg, has returned to the Czar the Russian decorations worn by the late Emperor William. The Czar was greatly moved by this mark of the cordial attachment of the dead monarch.

All the League branches of Limerick have condemned the papal rescript.

The Journal des Debats, in an article in reference to the manifesto issued by the Patriotic League in which General Boulanger is styled the leader of the National party, demands that the league be suppressed.

MORNING BIBLE READING.—The best time for Bible reading is in the morning. The mind and body are fresh after the repose of the night, and the highest powers of thought may be brought to bear upon the chapter selected. But, with most people, each recurring morning brings its own pressing tasks. Business cares, the daily toil and the duties of the house are the first and most engrossing concerns. Some hours must pass, with many, before they can find time to sit down to any quiet reading. Let the plan be honestly tried by taking some words from God's book for the meditation of the morning. Make for the month a fair, steadfast trial of the plan of studying the Bible when your faculties are at mental high-water mark. You wonder at the familiarity of this or that friend with the Psalms, the epistles, the gospels. It has been gained, a little at a time, by patient daily reading—thoughtful, prayerful reading, too, which was hived by the soul as something worth treasuring. We shall all gain immeasurably in our influence as well as our comfort by giving more of our unwearied thought to the holy book. A few tired, sleepy, worn-out moments at night, and those only are almost an insult to the Master whom you profess to serve.—Selected.

MY LIFE-LONG PRAYER.

BY REV. HORATIUS BONAR, D. D.

Teach me thy love, O gracious Son of God,
The love that passeth knowledge teach thou me!
Quenching my soul let that love flow in,
In heavenly freshness coming straight from thee.

Quench thou my thirst with this great love of thine;
No other love but thine can satisfy;
No love save that, that welleth from the cross,
Can the deep want of this poor soul supply.

Fill up my spirit with this love of thine;
Let the day break and every shadow flee;
Drive all darkness, cast out every fear,
Let this bright love be light and peace to me.

Prepare me for thy coming, for I know
That in an hour we think not, thou wilt come.
Robed in thy blood, and clothed in raiment fair,
Let me be ready for my glorious home.

Let me then dwell in love and love in me;
My guide and light thine everlasting Word,
Then shall I safely brave the perils here;
And shall I be forever with the Lord.

Comparative Growth of Methodism and Romanism in the United States.

BY REV. J. A. PARKER.

It is a matter of boasting among Romanists that the Roman Catholic Church outnumbers all the Protestant Churches in the United States. This opinion is closely nursed by the compilers of Romish statistics, for the encouragement of which they have adopted the rule of counting the entire Romish population as members of the church"—e. g.: If the father of a family be a Romanist, his entire family (unless the mother happens to be a Protestant) is put down as members of the church, and if the mother be a Protestant, the father (being a Romanist), together with all the children, whether two or ten, are reported as so many members. Beside these, all baptized children, whether living in their natural families or scattered in nurseries, houses of correction, almshouses or hospitals, or thrown out among strangers, have been recorded as members, and are so reported in the statistics. By this method the number of members is increased, at least, threefold above that which is legitimate according to Protestant methods. Among Protestants the rule is to count only those who have personally assumed the vows of membership. Taking this as a basis, and counting those who incline to and patronize Protestantism in any Protestant community, they will be found to be, at least, three times as many as those who have personally assumed the obligations of membership.

The statistics furnished by Dr. Baird (See "Religion in America," pp. 526-7) furnish us a key to the difference between the actual membership of a church and its adherent population. The comparison establishes the difference as a fraction less than one to one. Thus, in 1855 the number of Methodists were computed at 1,593,794, while the Methodist population was reckoned at 5,500,000. But as the number of members of the Methodist Church has run up to 4,000,000, the population adherent to the Methodist Church might be safely reckoned at 12,000,000 to 15,000,000, and these figures might be adapted as the basis of our calculations. These last figures include a number of Methodist organizations not mentioned by Dr. Baird, and only partially reported by the cyclopedias. We will, therefore, adapt as the basis of our calculations "Green's Diagram for 1881."

There are two methods of procedure before us, viz: (1) To apply the Romish rule to our statistics; and (2) to apply our rule to the Romish statistics. This is certainly fair. In order, however, to be reasonable and safe from the charge of forcing figures, we will drop the fractional part of the difference between the actual membership and the population of a church, taking one to three as the basis of our calculation. This difference, we are sure, will be justified by actual count in any average community. If it be a community in which Romanism is dominant, or one in which Methodism is in the ascendency, it will be found, we feel safe in saying, that the population under the influence of the dominant church, and nominally supporting it, is three times as great as the number who are actual members—i. e., those who have individually assumed the vows of membership.

It must be remembered that there is absolutely no certainty in regard to the numbers reported as "members of the Holy Catholic Church." As Dr. Baird suggests, different writers give different numbers, varying from 50 per cent. to 100 per cent. "Green's Diagram" is not a Methodist document, and may, therefore, be accepted as being as free from prejudice in that direction as any. Beside it is, as far as we are able to determine, as nearly correct as any we are likely to get hold of. Hence we proceed to our conclusions from the figures contained in it. The number of Romanists in the United States is put down there as 6,174,202. Now, as this is the population, and as the population of any church is three times as many as its members, divide this sum by three, and we have this result (we omit fractions):

No. of Methodists ("Green's Diagram")	3,187,588
No. of Romanists	2,058,067
Methodist majority	1,129,521

This is the result when we apply our rule to the Romish statistics.

But if we apply the Romish rule to our statistics, this will be the result: Number of Methodist members, 3,187,588. As the population is equal to three times that amount, we have in the United States:

Methodist population	9,562,764
Romish population	6,174,202
Majority of Methodists	3,388,562

From these comparisons it is easy to see that by any fair method of reckoning the actual strength of Methodism, as compared with the actual strength of Romanism, is nearly 33⅓ per cent. in favor of Methodism. This takes no account of the immense gains of Methodism since 1881, of which we will see something further on. These are the facts as they existed in 1881, and by a simple principle of mathematical progression, the results at the end of the next century can be approximately ascertained.

How these results have been reached—under what circumstances and in what time—must be considered in order that the real merits of the question may become more apparent. Maryland, the stronghold of Romanism in the United States, was settled in 1634. There, in the very outset, Romanism found a patron in the person of Lord Baltimore, and enjoyed an amount of freedom and success almost wonderful, when we remember that Maryland was a province of England, which country had planted her church there under the sanction of her laws and the protection of the crown. However, up to 1783 Romanism had her full rights without fear or molestation, just as all other sects which did not belong to the English establishment. After that period there was nothing to interfere with the free exercise of her full strength, which she threw into the work to win for Rome what had been lost to Great Britain.

At the close of the Revolution, and for nearly two years after, there was no such thing as organic Methodism in the land. But, starting out at that date, poor, and without the fostering oversight of a propaganda, Methodism has won its way to the hearts of the people, being sped on its journey by faith and prayer, and holy and heroic deeds, until "the little one has become a great nation."

From 1634 to 1784 Romanism was fostered and fed in America by the Propaganda of Rome, under the shrewd engineering of the Jesuits, while Methodism lay dormant in the Word of God and in the lives of holy men. Thus, while Romanism has been busy, drawing its treasures of money and its hoards of pauper immigrants from every country in Europe, swelling its population with every shiphad of foreigners landed on American soil, Methodism, after its birth, was carrying the gospel of peace to the hearts and homes of the American people, swelling its population from zero to 12,000,000 of souls. Romanism, with 150 years to her advantage, and the treasures of Europe and the authority of Rome for her help, has accomplished in this country but little, if any, more than one-half that the Methodist Church has accomplished. Let us try the figures on this aspect of Romanism. In 96 years—1784 to 1881—Methodism gathered an actual membership of 3,187,588, while in 246 years—1634 to 1881—Romanism gathered an actual membership of only 2,058,067. If we adopt the Romish rule of counting the population under the churches, respectively, we will see that in 96 years Methodism raised her membership from 0 to 9,562,764, while it took Romanism 246 years to raise her membership to 6,174,202. In other words, the Methodist Church has drawn into its fold in 96 years more souls, by more than one-third, than Romanism has been able to draw into its fold in 246 years. Dividing the adherents of Romanism by the number of years that church has been engaged in the work, the average annual ingathering will be found to be 42,282. Proceed on this method with the adherents of Methodism, and it will be seen that the average annual increase is 99,612, or more than twice as much as the annual gains of Romanism. Surely this does not look as if Romanism was taking America.

Suppose now we estimate the entire Protestant membership: Our tables give us 9,172,205 as the Protestant membership of this country, not including Jews, Mormons, and Universalists. Here again, if we apply the Romish rule, we find the Protestant population to be 27,416,615, or fully one-half the entire population of the United States, while Romanism boasts of its superiority with less than one-ninth of our population.

If some one should ask, If this be so, how does it come about that the church of Rome exercises such an influence in American politics? we may answer, In various ways. (1) By the power of priestcraft; (2) by the greed and craftiness of the Jesuitry, and (3) by the traditions of men taught the people as the doctrines of God.

To illustrate: The general government made last year an appropriation of $338,299 98 for Indian education. Of this sum the Jesuits secured the management of $168,959 13, or more than half of the entire appropriation. Of an appropriation of $9,847 72 for day-schools—under contract—the Romanists secured $7,632 92! (These figures we gather from the New York Independent, of February 9, 1888.)

As to how this is done, I will let Senator Blair tell in his speech, delivered in the Senate chamber, February 15, during the discussion of the "Blair Bill." The Senator said: "Twelve years ago, * * * when we were undertaking to enact a constitutional amendment which was to prevent the appropriation of the public money to the support of sectarian schools of this country, a friend pointed out to me on the floor nine Jesuits who were there log-rolling against the proposed amendment to the constitution; * * * he pointed them out, nine at one time. * * * Why, sir, upon the staff of every great paper in this country to-day is a Jesuit, and the business of that man there is to see that a blow is struck wherever there is an opportunity to strike at the common-school system of America; and the further investigation there is in this matter, the more potent will this appear." As the Senator elsewhere says, the Jesuits are more the enemies of this country to-day than are the anarchists, and are doing more to overthrow our American institutions and subvert our forms of government than all communism combined. "Log-rolling" for public money for sectarian purposes! But who ever heard of Jesuits "log-rolling" in any legislative assembly in the interests of order or morality?

We are constrained to the belief that this fictitious claim of strength upon the part of Romanism is a mere deception, practiced on the people for the purpose of boosting up a claim to consideration at the public crib. Romanism, with all its boasted numbers in this country, is a minor sect, and has nothing like the strength which her statisticians boast. As three is greater than two, so is Methodism greater than Romanism in the United States.

Animal Suffering in the Atonement.

BY "GILDEROY."

Dr. Abbey has been so busy keeping the world right on the "church" that he himself has gotten wrong on the atonement. The last state is worse than the first. In his article, attempting to reconcile the differences of your correspondents, he plants himself squarely on the "moral influence theory of the atonement," so eloquently advocated by Horace Bushnell and men of that school. The incarnation, suffering and death of Christ were a spectacular animal exhibition of the boundless benevolence of God towards man. He says: "Voluntary suffering and self-denial in relieving distress is the only thing that can cause us to believe that God is benevolent." This exhibition of benevolence was made to "cure man's disobedience and to secure his affectionate obedience." Now, is this all? This theory has, at least, the advantage of age. It was held by Socinians and Arians, and is now held by Unitarians. It has the great disadvantage of having been utterly exploded and blown into thin air long before Dr. Abbey was born. God was to be reconciled to man as well as man reconciled to God. The atonement concerned the divine character, the foundations of God's throne, as well as fallen and rebellious man. Without a voluntary propitiation and satisfaction God could not forgive sin, nor man implore pardon.

The Doctor says: "Suffering means animal suffering, or it means nothing;" and in another place, "Suffering means animal suffering, whether voluntarily undergone or not." So, then, Christ suffered and died as an animal, as a man only. Surely this is enough to stir the sleeping dust of Wesley, Watson, Fletcher, Summers, and a host of others. Is there no such thing as mental suffering?—suffering peculiar to the mind? And is there no such thing as spiritual suffering?—suffering peculiar to the spirit, the soul? I had thought the animal suffering was the least and lowest of the untold agonies of our redeeming Lord. I know, by my own consciousness, that my spiritual and mental battles cost me more exquisite sufferings than my "wrestlings with flesh and blood." I do hope Dr. Abbey will so far modify, or explain, that statement as to allow room for "soul suffering" in Christ. He might the more readily do this, since Christ himself said in the Garden of Gethsemane, "My soul is exceeding sorrowful, even unto death." Was that animal or spiritual suffering? Perhaps the Doctor merely means to say, "Animal suffering is animal suffering." If so, I agree with him. In cases where an animal and a spiritual nature are linked together in one person, as in man, perhaps Dr. Abbey can tell us how one nature could suffer and the other be free from suffering and sympathy with it. If he will do this, he will have made a long stride towards explaining the mystery of redemption, in which two whole and distinct natures participated, the one suffering all the pain and agony, and the other not entering into sympathy and suffering with it. This is the question at issue between your correspondents. Let the Doctor try his hand on it. The physical animal sufferings of my son cause me intense mental and spiritual suffering, while my animal nature is comparatively free from pain. I would belie my nature and belittle the instinct of fatherhood not to enter into and suffer as my own the agonies of my son. Is the feeling, the love, the sympathy of fatherhood less in God than in a sinful worm like me? Nay, verily. Indeed, the whole merit and virtue of the atonement, as a sacrifice for sin, lay not in the animal suffering of Christ, but grew out of the volition of this God-man. He offered himself a sacrifice for sin.

It might be well for young men who are interested in this subject to study carefully Acts xx, 28: "God purchased the church with his own blood." Socinians, Arians and Unitarians have put forth all their learning and skill to evade the force of this Scripture. "If it means anything," it means more than the blood of an animal, the blood of a man. In some sense, perhaps in a sense far beyond our comprehension, the blood of Christ is the "blood of God."

In commenting on, "Without the shedding of blood" there "is no remission," Dr. Abbey says: "Nothing else could impress us sufficiently with a sense of divine benevolence to cause us to take refuge therein, and so rely upon it for safety. Atoning sacrifice is objective." Is there not some "subjective" reason why the shedding of blood is necessary to the remission of sin? Is there not a reason for this in the nature of sin and in the law of God, or character of God? Are the reasons for atoning sacrifice wholly "objective?" The Doctor does not go back far enough. Why blood? Why the sacrifice of life? The Doctor says, "To show man the benevolence of God" for its moral effect on man. "This blood was shed for the remission of sin," without which sin could not be remitted, however great and glorious the benevolence of God. Dr. Abbey will not be able to construct a permanent theory of the atonement, one satisfactory to students of theology, and in harmony with the Word of God, until he goes back of this "objective" view of "atoning sacrifice." The whole thing grows out of the nature of sin and the nature of God. The law, an expression of God's nature, demanded obedience or life. Sin was the sacrifice and loss of life. Salvation involves the sacrifice of life. "The blood is the life;" hence the shedding of blood is indispensable to the forgiveness of sin and the restoration of life. The reasons of "atoning sacrifice" are to be found in the natures of things—the nature of God, of his law, and of sin.

Unless something new springs up I have no more to say to my venerable friend. I would not have said this much only that some young preachers, good students, desire all the light they can get on these great themes.

The Churches, North and South.

We commend to a certain class of our readers the following article from the Florida Christian Advocate. The editor, Dr. Josephus Anderson, was at one time much in favor of a union of the two churches of Methodism, but his views have undergone a change, and this is what he says in regard to the matter now:

"The Northern Methodist Church is doing a great and glorious work in the North. It grew up there and suits the genius of the people. Its history and traditions are interwoven with the texture of society and the recollections of the people. It is more fully the embodiment of Northern thought and feeling and energy and peculiarities, in connection with religion, than any other body of men can be. It is at home and knows how to work. But this is not true respecting it at the South. Here it is an importation, a stranger, and not suited to the state of things. It comes into the South as a superior to an inferior; comes as an accuser with the conviction that Southern people are disloyal citizens; comes doing the evil work of reviving sectional feeling and old buried recollections of the dead past; comes with impracticable plans and exciting views of negro equality; comes as the special favorer of a particular political party; and, coming thus, it can not have a mission of usefulness in the South, and must fail. The Northern people in the South soon see that such a spirit will not do. They, with Southern people, want peace and the unity of society. They feel that the accusations of disloyalty, the revival of old issues, the perpetual irritation produced by repeating questionable war stories, and the general bearing of the Northern Church toward the Southern whites will not do. They see that polities in the church will not suit the South. They join the Southern Methodist Church and are welcomed. They feel at home, and society grows into unity in this way.

"The Southern Methodist Church has a special mission to fulfill. The South is to be the great seat of empire and population and wealth in this country at no very distant day; and the providence of God has fitted Southern Methodism to meet the spiritual wants of this and of that time. The old opposition of our revolutionary forefathers to the union of Church and State has taken the form of violent repugnance to polities in the church, and this has become a ruling passion in Southern hearts; and a historical and inwrought distinction of Southern Methodism. It abhors polities in the church. It dreads sectionalism in religion. It is at home in the South. It was born and grew up here, and is part of Southern history. It knows the negro, gave him the gospel when no one else would, and consented to separation in 1844 rather than give up its missionary work among the slaves. It is a part of the South; but so formed that it is heartily sick and tired of war and war stories, and sectional feeling and political antagonisms, and is anxious for peace and brotherhood, and social unity and political tolerance. And these facts give Southern Methodism its advantages in the South over Northern Methodism, and qualify it for its great mission in this part of our beloved country."

Reason and experience both forbid us to suppose that personal morality can be maintained without religion, or national morality to the exclusion of the religious principle.—Washington.

PETER'S DENIAL.

Matthew xxvi. 67-75.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Wherefore let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall.—1 Cor. x. 12.

TIME.—A. D. 30, Friday, April 7, about 3 A. M. PLACE.—Jerusalem: the palace of Caiaphas, the high-priest.

INTRODUCTION.

Few events in the Bible are so full of human nature and divine grace, of warning and comfort, as the fall and restoration of Peter. The nearest parallel case in the Old Testament is the great sin and repentance of David. (Psalm li. All four evangelists narrate the main facts. Their candid statement respecting what might seem derogatory to the good name of the chief apostle is a guarantee of honesty and presumptive evidence of truthfulness. Every point of the narrative records not only with Christian experience, but with the character of Peter and our Lord's predictions and warnings to him. What befell Peter may befall any Christian who relies on his own strength, especially after self-exaltation, lack of watchfulness and prayer, and presumptuous rushing into danger. The account of Peter's repentance also finds its confirmation in the Christian heart. The four accounts agree that Peter was recognized on three occasions during the night; that he was on all three a denier of his Lord; but they mention different recognizers, especially in the second and third case, and they record different replies and different circumstances. It follows that not one of the four consulted the narrative of the others, or derived his account from the same immediate source.

67. Then—After the Sanhedrin had pronounced him "guilty of death." Did they—The guard chiefly. But, perhaps, members of the Sanhedrin also. At all events they permitted it. Spit in his face—O, the indignity! And yet he sublimely endured it, for their sakes, for our sakes. Spitting was considered among the Jews as the expression of the greatest contempt. Deuteronomy xxv. 9; Numbers xii. 14. This insult was punished with a fine of four hundred drachmas (the drachma being equal to about fifteen American cents). Even to spit before another was regarded as an offense, and treated as such by heathen also. Thus Seneca records that it was inflicted at Athens upon Aristides the just, adding, at the same time, that with considerable difficulty one individual was at last found willing to do it. Buffeted him—Struck him with clenched fists. The word is onomatopoetic. You think you hear the sound of the blows. Others smote him—Either with the hand or with rods, probably both. Compare the similar treatment at the examination before Annas, John xviii. 22. This probably took place in part while Jesus was led into the court to be kept there until the morning. His very meekness, his very silence, his very majesty—the very stainlessness of his innocence, the very grandeur of his fame, made him an all the more welcome victim for their low and devilish ferocity.

68. Prophesy unto us—In the fertility of their furious and hateful insolence they invented against him a sort of game. Blindfolding his eyes, they hit him again and again, with the repeated question, "Prophesy to us, O Messiah, who it is that smote thee." Thou Christ—They called him "Christ" in mockery and ribaldry. Aye, indeed, you are Christ! And a great prophet too! You can see without looking, we might think; and behind as easily as before! Well, then, now's the time to exercise your prophetic gift and win immortal fame! Who gave you that blow from behind? First condemned as a blasphemer, he was treated as a soothsayer. Luke (chapter xxii. 65) adds: "Many other things blasphemously spake they against him."

69. Peter sat without—While all this was going on in the inner compartment of the high-priest's court. In the palace—In oriental houses the street door opens into the entrance hall or passage: this is the "porch" of verse 71. Beyond this is a central court open to the sky and surrounded by pillars. The reception-rooms are usually on the ground floor, and are built round the central court. Probably the hall or room in which Jesus was being tried opened upon the court. Thus Jesus was able to look upon Peter. At the upper end of this court, probably, would be the memorable chamber in which the trial was held—open to the court, likely, and not far from the fire, but on a higher level; for (as Mark says) the court, with Peter in it, was "beneath" it. The ascent to the council-chamber was, perhaps, by a short flight of steps. A damsel . . . saying—In the original it is one damsel, for the evangelist is thinking of another. He, therefore, specifies numerically first the one, and then the other. The Jews seem to have employed women as porters of their doors. (Acts xii. 13.) An obscure servant girl the innocent occasion of the fall of the chief of the apostles! Thou also wast with Jesus of Galilee—Probably contemptuous banter, or light ridicule, not with a view to serious accusation. The sense of this is given in John's report of it (chapter xviii. 17), "Art not thou also one of this man's disciples?" That is, thou as well as "that other disciple," whom she knew to be one, but did not challenge, perceiving that he was a privileged person. In Luke (chapter xxii. 56) it is given as a remark made by the maid to one of the bystanders—"this man was also with him." If so expressed in Peter's hearing—drawing upon him the eyes of everyone that heard it, and compelling him to answer to it that would explain the different forms of the report naturally enough.

70. He denied before them all—Before those gathered about the fire. Peter was off his guard. The mere curious question of an inquisitive young girl startled him, by its very suddenness, into a quick denial of his Lord. Doubtless, at the moment it presented itself to him as a mere prudent evasion of needless danger. But did he hope to stop there? Alas! "once denied" is always "thrice denied." I know not what thou sayest—A shuffling answer; he pretended he did not understand the charge, and knew not whom she meant by Jesus of Galilee, or what she meant by being with him. Alas! for poor blustering human nature! How cowardly it is, especially when it is conscious that it is standing only on a very humble platform of observation! On this first occasion he denies not only his discipleship and knowledge of Jesus, but even that he understood what she could mean; possibly to two different maids. He practiced evasion, which leads to direct lying, often to perjury.

71. When he was gone out into the porch—The vestibule leading to the street—no doubt finding the fire-place too hot for him; possibly also the hope of escaping—but that was not to be, and, perhaps, he dreaded that too. Mark mentions a crowing of the cock, while he was there. As Peter himself probably informed Mark of this, it was not the cock-crow that brought him to repentance; nor does he conceal his forgetfulness of the signal. Another maid . . . said unto them that were there—This second recognition seems to have been a general one, beginning by the fire, recurring in the porch, where this maid attacked him. Luke tells of a man recognizing him; probably a servant standing in the porch, one of those to whom the maid spoke. At such a time such a charge would awaken further remark. This fellow was also with Jesus of Nazareth—Again, a woman's weapon of contempt and ridicule: potent enough when human weakness is not supported by divine grace.

72. Denied with an oath—Perhaps Peter, the fisherman, was a profane man, and in the time of temptation the long habit, long cast off, reasserted itself. The downward step once taken, the disciple's fall was fatally rapid. Forgetful of his Lord's command forbidding any use of oaths in common speech, he did not shrink from invoking the divine name, directly or indirectly, to attest his falsehood. I do not know the man—The man, Peter? Is that the way you now speak of your Lord? But do you think that you are really hoodwinking the eyes that are glaring at you all round about, or looking askance on you, and passing knowing winks to one another? Peter was now "a stone of stumbling," not a "rock." What a contrast to his confession! Chap. xvi. 16.

73. After a while—"An hour" (Luke), so that the second cock-crowing followed immediately. (Ver. 74.) Peter's second denial had, so to speak, been interrupted by the arrival of the Sanhedrists. Since then the excitement of the mock-trial, with witnesses coming and going, and, no doubt, in Eastern fashion repeating what had passed to those gathered in the court around the fire; then the departure of the Sanhedrists, and again the insults and blows inflicted on the Sufferer, had diverted attention from Peter. They that stood by . . . said—It is evident that, in spite of denial and of oath, they wholly distrust and despise him; and at last one of the high priest's servants a kinsman of the wounded Malchus—once more stoutly and confidently charged him with having been with Jesus in the garden. Thy speech bewrayeth thee—The Galileans were unable to pronounce the gutturals distinctly, and they lisped, pronouncing sh like th. Perhaps Peter said, "I know not the ith," instead of, "I know not the ish" (man). The Galilean patois was probably stronger when he spoke under the influence of strong excitement.

74. Then began he to curse and to swear—The first word indicates that he invoked imprecations upon himself if his denial were not true. The second word signifies an appeal to the Deity in attestation of his truth. No doubt he first swore to show that he belonged not to the prophet of Nazareth; but how a real and insane rage seems to have complete mastery. Immediately the cock crew—Mark relates that the cock crowed twice, (verses 68, 72); the others speak only of his crowing once. This accords also with their respective accounts of our Lord's prophecy. History (tradition) reports that ever after, when St. Peter heard the crowing of a cock, he fell upon his knees and mourned; others say he was wont to rise at midnight and spend the time in penitent devotion between cock-crowing and daylight. And the papists, who love to turn everything into superstition, began that practice of setting a cock upon the top of towers, and steeples, and chimneys, to put the people in mind of this sin of Peter and his repentance by that signal.

75. Peter remembered—And at that fatal moment of guilt, while those shameless curses still quivered on the air, first the cock crew in the cold grey dusk, and at the same moment, catching the last accents of those perjured oaths, either through the open portal of the judgment-hall, or as he was led past the group at the fireside through the open court, with rude pushing and ribald jeers, and blows and spitting, the Lord—the Lord in the agony of his humiliation, in the majesty of his silence—"the Lord turned and looked upon Peter." Who can tell what lightning flashes of wounded love and piercing reproach shot from that "look" through the eye of Peter into his heart! He went out—Flinging the fold of his mantle over his head, he, too, like Judas, rushed forth into the night. Into the night, but not as Judas: into the unsunned outer darkness of miserable self-condemnation, but not into the midnight of remorse and of despair: into the night, but, as has been beautifully said, it was "to meet the morning dawn." And wept bitterly—O how bitterly it needed to be! The strong man would bow himself in agony. The evangelist veils the scene. Let us veil it, too. Thousands have read the history of Peter's sin who have thought little of Peter's tears and Peter's repentance. The remorse of Judas led him back to the priests with money in his hand; the repentance of Peter led him to God with tears in his eyes.—The remembrance of his great sin kept him humble all his life, and deepened his gratitude. The same was the case with Paul's persecution. So God overrules even our sins for our good and the good of the church.

PRACTICAL LESSONS.

1. That night in the high priest's palace was Satan's "sifting time." He "found nothing" in Christ, meekly enduring blows and scoffs; but he found a good subject in Peter.

2. Like other self-confident men, Peter was brave by spurts. He had not that principle of courage which recognizes its own weakness and depends upon faith in God and a good conscience.

3. It is a bad sign when we try to conceal our discipleship in a company where the name or cause of Christ is derided. To be "ashamed of Jesus" is the first step toward denying him.

4. We never know how much badness there is in us until the sifting time comes. Peter never dreamed that he could deny his Lord, much less play the coward and turn liar and blasphemer.

5. While Satan sifts, Jesus prays. He does not pray that Satan may not sift, but that our faith may not fail.

Here and There Again.

This April has been a busy month for me in going to and fro that knowledge might be increased. The first Sunday, and some days following, were spent on Ebenezer circuit. Bro. W. A. Dollar, P. C., met me at Lexington with his span of ponies and new buggy, and carried me and the books to Ebenezer and other points on his work, where I preached seven sermons, talked up Sunday-school matters, and sold about $30 worth of church literature. Bro. Dollar has his work well in hand; is in good favor with his people, and will doubtless have a year of prosperity.

On Friday, the sixth, I went to Sidon circuit, and was met by Bro. J. T. Howell, P. C., who took me in hand and worked me in his charge ten days, during which time we visited four of his churches, preaching and pastorating as we went. I preached six sermons and sold more than $100 worth of religious literature. The two Sunday-schools already existing were improved and two new ones were projected, and a good lot of literature ordered for them. Sidon circuit is improving in every department of church enterprise. A handsome church building has just been completed at Tchula, and one will, doubtless, be built at Sidon ere long. Bro. Howell is a young preacher, but, being prudent and zealous, he bids fair to be useful in the Master's service. The outlook in his work for this year is very encouraging.

Monday, the sixteenth, I arrived at Greenwood, and found the pastor, Bro. T. W. Lewis, busily engaged in making arrangements for the approaching District Conference. The next day after my arrival the parsonage where I was being kindly entertained was struck by a storm of boxes, sacks, cans, etc., containing just such articles as a preacher's family needs at all times, but especially during a District Conference. Such timely tokens of appreciation will always be rewarded by him whose servants we are.

The Winona District Sunday-School Conference was held on Thursday, the nineteenth. Reports from the various charges showed increasing interest in this department of church work. Friday morning the District Conference convened, with Bishop Galloway presiding. There was an unusually full attendance of preachers and delegates, and a large number of visitors—all of whom were hospitably entertained by the good people of Greenwood. Among the visitors we note with pleasure Revs. R. S. Woodward and J. H. Woodward, of the Mississippi Conference. Hope they will come again. Rev. W. B. Murrah, of Whitworth College, and Rev. T. J. Newell, of Grenada Collegiate Institute, represented the interests of those church schools, and made good impressions in favor of Christian education. The Conference proceedings and religious services were all good to the use of edifying. A committee was appointed to secure a district parsonage. Rev. W. P. Ratcliff, J. B. Streater, J. R. Bingham and J. G. Irving were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, with O. J. Moore and J. G. Hamilton, alternates. Next District Conference is to be held at Pickens.

The week of prayer and self-denial was well observed in most charges of the Winona district. About $550 already reported as collected, and more to follow. I have no definite information from other portions of the Conference.

During this month I have sold more than $200 worth of religious literature: since Conference, nearly $1,200 worth. I have, during this year, traveled 1,225 miles, preached thirty-five sermons, delivered many Sunday-school and prayer-meeting talks, visited a great number of families and made innumerable acquaintances. The Lord bless all the good people who have been kind and helpful to me in this work of faith and labor and love, and cause the good seed sown to produce abundant fruit!

Bro. Mellen's "Figures and Facts."

An article on the first page of the ADVOCATE, of April 19, by Rev. T. L. Mellen, is in such form and substance and of such a character as to demand notice, and, while possibly Bro. Mellen did not so intend, is calculated to convey false impression and injurious inferences. It conveys the impression of injustice and illiberality on the part of the church. I say the church, for his article attacks the whole church; and in his article headed, "Figures and Facts," he boldly asserts a niggardliness and parsimoniousness that does not exist in our church nor amongst our people (and I fain would believe as known to Bro. Mellen), and does gross injustice to our city, and, in so far, conveys false impression of our city and church, and, while exonerating Mr. Mellen from any intentional wrong, I must, nevertheless, set him right as far as Vicksburg is concerned, and I believe all of the districts. Now, Mr. Mellen, in speaking of the district, says, "Vicksburg." Now, I affirm and think I can establish the fact that Vicksburg has for years paid in full her Conference fund, and I believe her entire assessments of all kinds, and I believe a more liberal people in and out of the church does not exist in any community—Bro. Mellen to the contrary notwithstanding. Bro. Mellen may and probably does set the whole district down to Vicksburg, which is a gross injustice to our city, and I must say that I think not unknown to Bro. Mellen.

The church in this city is composed of a little more than three hundred members, and it pays our preacher $1,500, furnishes him a house worth $300 a year, pays all of her assessments of every kind including Conference fund (Bro. Mellen to the contrary notwithstanding), sustains a Sabbath-school of from 150 to 200 scholars, with between twenty to thirty teachers, a fair library, and, I am proud to say, I think a school not surpassed in the State by interest and regime. Our school-room on last Sabbath morning was crowded, and I thank God for the prospect for good existing. Our entire disbursement for our church and Sabbath-schools all told falls, if any, but little short of $3,500 per annum. Again, Vicksburg—nay, our church—did last year, besides paying all of our assessments, footing every bill, raise money and purchase a lot, and build a chapel or church in South Vicksburg; and the church has been occupied all the fall and winter. And, Mr. Editor, in view of the past, we thank God and take courage, with the assurance that God loves a cheerful giver. I hope Bro. Mellen will think twice before he condemns again and get right.

Yours, etc.,

G. L. RECORD.

Vicksburg District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: Our District Conference met at Natchez, in Wesley Chapel, April 26, and closed its deliberations on the twenty-eighth. There was an increased attendance upon past years. These meetings would be doubly interesting if the representative laity of the church could be stimulated sufficiently to induce them to attend the Conference and become interested in the deliberative workings of this body. Its work is reportorial, suggestive and inquisitive, and, perhaps, slightly inquisitorial. Though it is not a judicial, executive or legislative body, yet it inspires an active interest in those directions. Comet-like, with luminous train, it swings around the ecclesiastical system without law or authority to make law, yet it excites a lively interest in debate and reveals the perfections and imperfections of lay and pastoral work.

Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, our presiding elder, dignified the chair presidential, and held with steady arm the check-reins of authority. He is a close inspector and critical observer along the line of duty, and a vigilant detective of all imperfections and variations along that line.

The reports made by preachers and laymen indicate an active awakening all along the line of church work: increased congregations, more preaching-places, more work done, the interests of the church more prominently before the people, the gospel preached with more zeal and simplicity, and the finances in better condition. The minor interests of the work throughout the district were carefully looked after. There is a great deal involved in and to be evolved out of what Dr. Marshall denominates the "nickel, nickel, nickel" plan.

Dr. C. K. Marshall, Thomas A. Holloman, Judge J. Milsaps and W. A. Gunning were elected delegates to the Annual Conference; J. D. Johnston and W. G. Paxton, reserves.

The Conference expressed its high regard and esteem for Dr. Hunnicutt as an able and courteous presiding elder. This is his last year on our district.

The good people of Wesley Chapel and their active little pastor, Bro. Harmon, entertained us pleasantly.

Vicksburg will be the place for holding the next Conference.

THOS. A. HOLLOMAN,
Secretary.

City Public School Directors.

In my childhood's days the school directors most interested in the system of public education were Methodists. In bold relief among them all stands Mr. Parham, the teachers' and the children's friend. As I followed in his funeral train, I wondered if the children of the public schools of to-day would ever be blessed with so just, so wise, so exacting, so genial a school director! How well I remember the serious joy his visits to the schools gave the children. "Angel visits" they were, though not "few and far between." The kindly smile, with the searching question, always made a child feel sure it knew the answer, and in case of failure, the surprised look in those dark eyes made us resolve never to miss again.

Have you no broad-minded man of your persuasion whom you can suggest to our Council as his successor? We need Jews and Gentiles on the School Board to make public education broad, deep, systematic, healthful and just alike to teachers and children. Since women have inaugurated insane asylum and prison reforms, it would be well also to name her as a factor in the improvement the people promise for our schools. It makes no difference about her creed, provided she be a Christian and an admirer of our public schools—one who sends her own children to them, and knows from experience how they have been neglected; knows what an injustice was done children and parents by introducing text-books fit only for mature minds; knows the fearful sanitary condition of the yards and closets, and is willing to give some time and attention to the honorary position she accepts.

You can aid the public movement of reform by urging the Council to choose with care the school directors, because the position is honorary. Only an honorable person ought to be selected; then the teachers will be paid living salaries and promptly, the schools and premises be habitable, and no longer a reproach to our city. Education in the South will be universal if the directors do their duty. Heart, mind and hand will all be equally developed, for the time is not far distant when manual training will be a necessary adjunct to the system of public schools.

A FRIEND OF REFORM.

From the Work.

EBENEZER, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I send you today the result of the week of self-denial and prayer from the Ebenezer circuit. Twenty-seven dollars in cash, which I send to Dr. Kelley, at Nashville, Tenn.

The church at the prominent appointments was blessed spiritually, and moved up into a higher plane of life.

Bro. G. W. Bachman, our colporteur and Sunday-school agent, was with us a part of the week, and, as usual, did good work in preaching, selling books, baptizing children, and looking after the Sunday-school interest.

I am glad we can report the building of a new church since Conference. All who have seen it say they admire the plan of its construction.

We are going to observe Children's Day, and endeavor to interest them in the missionary work. We hope thereby to prepare them for greater liberality and more earnest work in their generation than many of the fathers and mothers in the present.

W. A. DOLLAR.

MAY 4, 1888.

AUSTIN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Last Sunday I closed a meeting at Austin. The Lord was with us, and the people say it was the best meeting they have had for years, though we had but two conversions. Rev. J. W. Dorman, of Jonestown, was with us, and did good work. This is my first year in this district. I am delighted both with the country and people. My charge is new, having four appointments, only two organized churches. Will organize and build two new churches soon. This is a grand country, and people know how to make a preacher feel good. May God bless and reward them for their labor of love!

T. J. TAYLOR, P. C.

WEST MELVILLE, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I closed a meeting at this place on last night which resulted in much good. Membership built up and strengthened; sinners promised to turn over a new leaf and do better; Sunday-school in fine condition; Juvenile Missionary Society on a boom. Result of week of prayer and self-denial (financially), $5 15, from West Melville.

C. R. GODFREY, P. C.

Woman's Work.

MR. EDITOR: I regret that an opportunity has not presented itself earlier to request a notice of our society having forwarded $36 80 in March, for which we are as thankful as we know how to be; but hope for better results in future. We have such a dear, good pastor, and he has added so much to the church, that my heart is sad that there are not more free-will offerings in "woman's work for woman." I request the prayers of the church in our behalf.

Yours in Christ,

TREASURER.

P. S.—We have quite a bright band of little workers among the children. May their sheaves be many! Amount forwarded, $9 50. Lady managers: Mrs. Robert Randal, Mrs. Boyd, Mrs. Burch.

Notice.

To the Members of the Mississippi Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN: Rev. H. R. Singleton, of Natchez, Miss., is treasurer of the Sunday-school Board of our Conference, and money collected on Children's Day, May 20, 1888, may be sent to him. I make this statement because last year several brethren wrote me to know what to do with this money. The Board had not then been organized, and I advised them to keep the money till Conference. This may be done again, or it may be sent to the treasurer, as you may prefer.

Yours fraternally,

W. B. LEWIS,
Chairman S. S. Board.

A Tribute.

Lives there are, spent in the quiet privacy of the country, whose gracious influence is all the while sinking into and shaping the lives around them. The power exerted by such lives can be measured only by him who measures results by a standard, higher and truer, than human beings use to measure each other. One such life I would lovingly, reverently commemorate. To those who knew it in "cradlehood," in girlhood and in the ripeness of sanctified womanhood, there are priceless lessons in its teaching. These lessons given, though but in part, to others, will encourage them in times of adversity, and nerve them for the struggles with poverty and misfortune.

Mrs. Drucilla M. Parker was the third daughter of Rev. D. M. and Mrs. M. E. Wiggins, and was reared, consequently, in a typical Methodist home. Before she could articulate the simplest words she voluntarily kneeled and went through the form of prayer when her older sisters and brother were praying. Her soul evidently then apprehended somewhat of God, took in some loving knowledge of his attributes, and was imbued with a religious reverence which grew and expanded with her body and mind. The tiny seed dropped by the mother's hand into "good ground" germinated under the warm rays of divine grace, and, being carefully tilled by the same hand, became a goodly tree bearing rich fruit for the Master. Through all of her school-life Drucilla Wiggins lived about three miles from Sharon Female College, where she had superior opportunities for mental and religious training; the walk to and from school promoting that vigorous flow of blood which accounted largely for the cheery face and buoyant spirit which characterized her at home and at school. She bore the yoke in her youth, rising early that her part of the domestic duties might be gotten through with, and the walk to school accomplished in time for roll-call, which came before prayer. Deftly was the butter churned, swiftly the broom flew over the floors, that the dear mother might not be overburdened. One has well said, "There is no genius like the genius of energy and industry;" and it was this genius that kept this young girl even with all of her class and ahead of many, and the inspiration of her genius was love of God and devotion to duty. Religiousness was so characteristic of her daily life that it was manifest to all about her. She acknowledged God in all her ways with a healthy spirituality which banished cant phrases, and lived in loving, happy obedience. Her laugh, even after troubles, multiplied and heavy, had pressed sorely on her heart, was that sweet, rippling laugh which those who can read character recognize as the rill from a peaceful fountain; not the laugh which chills one with its mockery of mirth.

Well educated and peculiarly fond of mathematical studies, she made a successful teacher, spending a number of years in that vocation.

Her married life was full of toil and mental strain. The mother of ten children, she constantly rejoiced in her heritage of good health which enabled her to labor early and late that their support might not be too heavy a burden upon her invalid husband. For her children she craved such opportunities of education as their parents had enjoyed in Sharon; but, knowing these to be out of their reach, she stimulated both boys and girls to faithful use of such as they had, at the same time giving them liberal education in field and household industries. She would even go with her little boys to the field, hoeing row after row with them and sweetening the lesson in honest labor with that other lesson of mother-love.

A characteristic home scene is described by a witness: "The mother is working with the hoys near enough to hear the twin babies crying. She leaves her hoe, tired and heated, takes the little ones in her arms and sings as she rocks them the old chorus 'I wonder, Lord, shall I ever get to heaven,' etc. 'So surely as there is a heaven' thought the listener, 'it is for you.'" Stressing industry and frugality in training her children, she at the same time impressed upon them the importance of seeking "first the kingdom of God and his righteousness."

She was a seed sower, and already there is promise of an ample harvest from her sowing. Her sister writes of her at two periods of their lives: "Being a fun-loving girl, I found fun even in her religion, and, while I think of it now with a pang, I do so with pleasure, too, because she bore it so meekly. In my heart I reverenced her piety." Again: "I have seen her in most trying circumstances, when her way seemed to be hedged up; but the light of God's love was shining in her soul, and every trial was so completely mastered by her faith in Christ, that bitter became sweet."

But, as we often see, the "chosen vessel" is the first broken—the true and beautiful life is cut short. We eagerly, restively ask, Why? But from the eternal city the answer that comes to our questioning hearts is, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." Then, with her meekness of spirit, let us bow our heads, and say, "Thy will, oh! Father."

E. M. HENNIGHTT.

Moral Suasion and Prohibition.

The advocates of the liquor business say, We are in favor of temperance, but for its promotion let us have moral suasion. Prohibitionists say, Let us have both moral suasion and prohibition. The first has been tried long enough for all to understand that it will not, and can not succeed only to a very limited extent; but both have been tried in certain localities comparatively a short time and have succeeded in a marvelous way so far. The way to prove a thing is to try it. It does look like the prohibitionists ought to have the privilege of trying their plan (universally) at least for a while, and then, if there is an increase of intemperance and crime, and there is more litigation on account of it, then all, with one consent, should be willing to have the sale of spiritual liquors as a beverage legalized, and be content with the result.

It is hardly probable that anyone will sell liquor as a beverage and have much of the moral suasion element about him. It is funny to think about it. It would be an amazing sight to see one of these that had the cheek to persuade anyone to be temperate, for that would be acting absurdly with a vim. It is very certain that no one can think of selling whisky to be used as a beverage with an intention to promote the cause of temperance, and there has never been a (divine law) against temperance, for it is one of the fruits of the Spirit, and the Spirit is the Spirit of truth and sincerity and never incites anyone to indulge in any forms of dissipation.

There is great opposition to liquor selling throughout the entire country, and this opposition is increasing rapidly, and, doubtless, it will continue until the whole business will be prohibited by law. That will be a happy time for every citizen of the land. The people will then have been delivered from one of the greatest evils that has ever cursed humanity. The good effect of prohibition where it has been tried is just as manifest as it can be. In such places we have the most of moral suasion. Prohibition is one of the grand machines for generating moral suasion. The friends of the liquor business say they "prohibition does not prohibit, and that it does no good." They evidently are afraid that it will. There is nothing they work harder against than that. That prohibition does not prohibit could not be driven into my head with a sledge hammer, and I have no inclination to keep this a secret. Two things continue the sale of ardent spirits as a beverage—inordinate love of money and excessive love of liquor. Prohibition is a strike at both of these things. But it is argued that it takes away men's liberties; this is the big argument. The reverse of this is true. It is inconsistent with a free government to allow its citizens to do anything that injures them and others. If the whisky, as it is commonly used in this country, does no harm, there is nothing that does. To illustrate: The devil came to a preacher one day, and said, "I want to persuade you to quit preaching against me and my kingdom." The preacher said: "I will do so if you will do for me three things." Said the devil: "Name them." "Well, I have two appointments, and I can get to them only with great difficulty. One is a good way off across a bad swamp, and I always, in order to get to it, have to go all the way round, and that gives me much trouble. I want you to make a bridge across that swamp. That is one of the things." "All right," answered Satan, "I'll do that, so that it will be convenient for you to pass over." "Now," says the preacher, "in the next place, I have a church in another direction and there is a big mountain between me and it, and I can't go over it, and it is troublesome to go all the way round it, and I want you to cut a tunnel through it, so as to shorten the way and make it much more pleasant." The devil consented to do that. "Now, in the third place," said the preacher, "I want you to bring up a nice Christian gentleman that sells whisky." At this the devil's countenance fell immediately, and he said quickly, "Ah! you have got me now; it can't be done."

"The Agony in the Garden."

Will persons who have read "Gilderoy," on the above subject, in the ADVOCATE, of April 12, be kind enough to read, or reread if they have already seen it, a communication, over my name, on the same subject, in the ADVOCATE, of February 16. I disclaim holding any commercial view of the atonement, as attributed to me by that writer. For the lesson to be learned from it, from a human standpoint, I represented his manhood as entertaining the agony of the occasion, viewed as a man, with a keen sense of the responsibility in the work of redeeming earth's millions.

Certainly, I have heard Christian ministers, in whose Christ-like character I could not have been mistaken, on approaching certain, responsible occasions, express an agony which, if not so intense, was nevertheless of the same nature as that of the God-man. It was the spirit of their Master which possessed them. They were "partakers of the divine nature." (II Peter i. 4.) Christ was emphatically and truly man. He said: "Believest thou that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself: but the Father, that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." (John xiv. 10.) The gospel preacher who agonized for the soul committed to his charge spoke the word that converted it to God. Yet it was not he that spoke, but the Father, Son and Holy Ghost that dwelt in him.

In General Debility, Emaciation, Consumption and Wasting in Children, Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites is a most valuable food and medicine. It creates an appetite for food, strengthens the nervous system, and builds up the body. Please read: "I tried Scott's Emulsion on a young man whom Physicians at times gave up hope. Since he began using the Emulsion his Cough has ceased, gained flesh and strength, and from all appearances his life will be prolonged many years."—JOHN SULLIVAN, Hospital Steward, Morganza, Pa.

WHAT THEN?—I am a Christian. What then? Why, I am a redeemed sinner, a pardoned rebel, all through grace, and by the most wonderful means which infinite wisdom could devise.

I am a Christian. What then? Why, I am a temple of God, and surely ought to be pure and holy.

I am a Christian. What then? I am a child of God; and I ought to be filled with filial love, reverence, joy and gratitude.

I am a Christian. What then? Why, I am a disciple of Christ, and must imitate him who was meek and lowly in heart, and pleased not himself.

I am a Christian. What then? Why, I am an heir of heaven, and hastening on to the abodes of the blessed, to join the full choir of glorified ones in singing the song of Moses and the Lamb; and surely I ought to learn that song on earth.—Payson.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Briefs.

Our brethren assembled in General Conference, in New York City, after long and able debate, decided not to admit lady delegates, and had the grace to pay their expenses to and from New York. They also decided against admitting delegates residing out of the bounds of Conferences which they were elected to represent. It is said a motion will be made to limit the Bishop office to ten years!

The Advance says:

Prof. Blackie recently delivered a lecture in Edinburgh, on the "Philosophy of Education," in which he takes the ground that Bible history and geography ought to belong to all well-conducted schools, independent of churches, because religion is the breath of daily life, and Christianity is not a religion founded on fancy, but on the history of the human race for 4,000 years, and it belongs to a man's education to know the record of God's dealings with the human race.

The General Conference of the Methodist Church, now in session in New York City, is said to be made up as follows, not counting reserves: The ministerial delegates are: Presiding elders, 112; pastors, 89; educators, 24; agents and secretaries, 21; editors, 11; missionaries, 1: The lay delegates are as follows: Lawyers, 24; merchants, 20; educators, 14; bankers, 10; real estate, 9; manufacturers, 9; physicians, 6; lumber, 5; farmers, 7; judges, 4; insurance, 3; brokers, 2; editors, 2; publishers, 2. Many other employments are represented by one delegate each.

There seems to be no end to inventions. The Interior has this:

The telautograph is a new invention by Prof. Elisha Gray, which promises to supplant the telephone. "I have already tested it," says Prof. Gray, "to my own satisfaction over and over again. By my invention you can sit down in your office in Chicago, take a pencil in your hand, write a message to me, and as your pencil moves, a pencil here in my laboratory moves simultaneously, and forms the same letters and words in the same way. What you write in Chicago is instantly reproduced here in fac simile. You may write in any language, use a code or cipher, no matter, a fac simile is produced here. If you wish to draw a picture, it is the same, the picture is reproduced here."

This is what an English paper thinks of our President:

The London Economist says: "Vast business, financial and railway schemes hang upon the result of the presidential election. Even English business waits. Europe has hardly realized that the growth of America has advanced the President's position to one of immense power and responsibility, so that it is now one of the first importance on earth. American diplomacy is guided by the President's decision and affects all countries. The President is now resolving the fisheries question with England, the Samoa question with Germany, the emigration question with China, and the consular rights question with Morocco. He may next week decide whether America shall produce financial ruin in Paris and shake the French republic by its treatment of De Lesseps' Panama Canal scheme."

Japan is taking active steps to forward the education of women. A woman's college has been founded in Tokio, with English teachers, and the government has entrusted the full management of the college for six years to a committee of English women.

Encouraged in God.

It must have been a time of deepest distress when six hundred hardy warriors "lifted up their voices and wept until they had no more power to weep"! Soldiers are not accustomed to weep at trifles, and when we read that a whole band fell to weeping, as men never wept before, we may be sure that there was some unusual occurrence the cause of such an unusual sight. This strange scene occurred in the early life of David. Persecuted and hunted by the jealous Saul, with his faithful followers he had taken refuge in the land of the Philistines, and placed himself under the protection of Achish, the king of Gath, who gave him the little town of Ziglag as a place of residence for himself and his soldiers and their families. Here he was secure from the murderous intentions of his own king, whom he had served so faithfully and from whom he had a right to expect better treatment than he received. It was not long before the young warrior was called upon by his adopted sovereign to give a decisive proof of the genuineness of his allegiance. "The Philistines gathered their armies together for warfare to fight with Israel;" and Achish summoned David and his little band of six hundred to join in the campaign. David promptly presented himself at the head of his men, and answered the command, "Thou shalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men," with the reply, "Thou shalt know what thy servant can do." The wily king of Gath thought that by arraying David and his band in battle against the Israelites he would secure his services for all time to come! But the other princes of the Philistines saw in it nothing but defeat and disaster to their cause, and had David and his soldiers summarily dismissed from the army and sent back to their little town of Ziglag.

From Ziglag to Aphek, the place of rendezvous for the Philistine army, is a considerable distance, and the march thither and back must have occupied several days; at least, long enough time for a most dreadful calamity to befall Ziglag. When David and his little band got back home, they found the place sacked and pillaged and burnt, and all their wives and children carried away captives! "Then David and the people that were with him lifted up their voice and wept until they had no more power to weep." It was enough surely to break their hearts when homes and wives and children were all gone. With merry hearts and elastic step they had marched from far-away Aphek, expecting the cordial welcome of expectant wives and little ones, when, lo! they are greeted by the smoldering ruins of once happy homes, and hear the startling tidings that their households have been led away in the captive chains of the remorseless invader! If ever there was a time of distress, it was that bitter hour! The record says: "David was greatly distressed, for the people spoke of stoning him, because the soul of all the people was grieved, every man for his sons and for his daughters:" How this cruel threat must have pierced with anguish the soul of the young leader! He had lost his all—his loved and cherished ones—as well as the others: and why should his life be threatened for a calamity for which he was not responsible, and which pressed upon his own spirit with as much weight as it did upon those who threatened? When he was pursued and well nigh overtaken by the evil-eyed Saul, he said: "There is but one step between me and death;" but now he stood alone before six hundred armed men, whose eyes flashed with the fires of vengeance, and whose tongues uttered the threat of death! He had often escaped from Saul by flight, but there could be no such thing as flight now. Perhaps, no commander of soldiers was ever in such a critical situation, and David realized that his usual sagacity and strategy would avail him nothing under the present circumstances. He felt that all human wisdom and power could not relieve the exigencies of this case. In this trying emergency the young warrior "encouraged himself in the Lord his God," and thus exhibited as sublime a trust in God as history has anywhere recorded; and that trust was rewarded by as signal a victory as any commander ever achieved. "Encouraged in God," he pursued the retreating invaders, completely surprised them by a night attack while they were "eating and drinking and dancing because of all the great spoil that they had taken," destroyed the larger part of their immense army and recovered all they had taken. The record is very careful to state this last: "And there was nothing lacking to them, neither small nor great, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil nor anything that they had taken to them; David recovered all." Not only did he recover what they had lost, but he took an immense spoil—enough to satisfy his own little band of soldiers, and to send presents to the elders of thirteen different localities, "and to all the places where David himself and his men were wont to haunt." So great a deliverer and helper is God!

The lesson of this incident in David's life is this: The deeper the distress, the more firmly should we trust in God. The ever-present faith should be: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore, will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea." And such a faith, nurtured and kept in exercise, will attain to the proportions of that professed by the Prophet Habakkuk: "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls; yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

"Let sinners learn to pray,
Let saints keep near the throne;
Our help in times of deep distress
Is found in God alone."

A New Subject for Our Contributors.

We place before our contributors a subject upon which we will be glad to have an expression of opinion. We say here, let the opinions be expressed as briefly as possible, so that our readers may have the benefit of "many minds." We state the case briefly as follows:

The last published Minutes of our three patronizing Conferences report our membership at 86,814, distributed as follows: North Mississippi, 36,234; Mississippi, 34,265, and Louisiana, 16,315. There are reported 6 colleges for females, 1 for males and females, and 1 for males, making in all 8 colleges reported as under the patronage of our church in Louisiana and Mississippi. The Mississippi Conference reports 4 colleges exclusively for females, 1 for both sexes, and one-half college for males. Louisiana Conference reports 1 college for females and one-half college for males. North Mississippi Conference reports 1 college for females and none for males. The one-half college is Centenary, which belongs equally to the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences. We see from this that in our territory we have 6½ schools for our girls and 1½ schools for our boys.

What is the meaning of the fact that we are providing better for the college education of girls than for that of boys? Is the education of girls more important than that of boys? Are we unable to educate both boys and girls?

We ask for short communications anent this curious condition of our educational affairs.

A Home for Homeless Women.

The Christian sentiment of our age is growing more practical every day. Christian charity is continually looking for new channels through which it may pour its benefactions to the needy. Christian activities are continually assuming new forms and seeking new objects. This is one of the good "signs of the times." The church is more than ever before showing her "faith by her works," and thus perfecting that faith. This is one of the distinctive features of Christianity, and it is coming out in bolder relief in our day than ever before in the history of the church. This work of Christian benevolence has the special sanction of Christ's blessing in the doing of it, and the promise of his final approval and reward in the judgment: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least of these, ye have done it unto me."

A little more than a year ago a company of Christian women in this city organized "A Home for Homeless Women," and have been working in a quiet, but very effective way ever since. Sixty-one of such women have been cared for, many of whom have been provided with permanent homes, or sent to their distant friends. There are now ten inmates of the "Home." The ladies of the organization open a floral exhibition in Odd Fellows Hall to-day for the purpose of raising funds for their benevolent work; and we trust that during the three days the exhibition is open that hundreds will pay them a visit, and thus assist in their commendable enterprise.

The Louisiana Legislature.

This body met, on Monday last, in the Capitol at Baton Rouge. The House was organized by the election of S. P. Henry, of Cameron, speaker, and P. J. Trezevant, of Caddo, clerk. The Senate was organized by the election of M. J. Foster, of St. Mary, president pro tem., and C. D. Caffrey, of Lafayette, secretary. The governor's message was received immediately upon the organization of the assembly. It is a long and interesting document, bringing to the notice of the assembly the present condition of the State and its future needs. The governor makes some important recommendations to the Legislature, and not the least is his recommendation in regard to educational enterprises. This matter should command immediate attention. We are looking hopefully for great and good things for our State from this new Legislature.

Pencilings.

He said he could not spare another dollar for the cause of Him who made and redeemed him; at the same time his contributions amounted to just half the sum he paid his cook. To crown all, he (the morning of the pleaded poverty) went down town and purchased two mirrors for his parlor, costing exactly two hundred and fifty dollars. Into those same mirrors he looked and knew not what manner of man he was.

He affirmed that he was too tired to preach the night sermon, but that same afternoon and deep into the evening and night he delivered himself of an amount of cheerful and humorous talking that would have filled a 12 mo. volume, containing twenty sermons. He apologized for his heaviness and weariness in the pulpit, but as soon as he got out he was as bright as a June morning. An explanation from the same lips was now in order, but it came not. Under some ruminating brows this sentence was gradually being evolved: "Here is either an unblessed heart or unfurnished brain." Both or either will invariably produce pulpit heaviness or weariness.

My brother in the ministry, you are very much afraid of a certain grave, learned-looking individual who sits in your congregation. He is not a member, only an attendant. He wears spectacles, and looks profound. You are in terror of the man; he has shorn you of spiritual strength, clipped your oratorial wings, so to speak. Now, let me beseech you not to allow this state of things to continue any longer. This writer knows the man, and knows him well. After frightening me half to death a score of times, I at last discovered him. Here is the final analysis: It is the spectacles that contributes the scholastic look. Often his thoughts are far away—usually he is asleep behind the spectacles; and as to the treasures of his mind—ahem!—well, I would not mortify the individual, but what he does not know is about comprised in all the books that have ever been published.

Another Warning.

The Standard, of Chicago, sounds this note:

One of the subjects to be discussed at the Educational Convention, in Washington, is "Resistance of Sectarian Aggression on Common School and Public Funds." The significance of such a subject, discussed at the national capital, is strikingly suggested by what is said in our Washington letter, this week, of the avowed purpose of the National Catholic University, whose corner-stone is probably by this time already laid. Mark what a "prominent priest" says of the real purpose of this movement: "Here, under the shadow of the Capitol's dome, will grow up an institution of learning that will become mightier with the ages it endures. Here the influence of the church will keep track of a body of men, the law-making class yearly gathered here, that it could not reach at any other location." Note the second of these two sentences, in the utterance of which Jesuitical cunning seems for once to have forgotten its cue. There is nothing in the way of State or national subsidy which these men are not perfectly capable of soliciting, however much in violation of the Constitution and the very principles of republican liberty the granting of such demands might be. And in repeated instances, already, they have both asked and received. It is not that they care for the money; they have money enough. It is that every such concession is a new yielding of our government to Roman Catholic usurpation. Step by step, in this way, they push themselves into a position where they shall have a degree of governmental recognition which no Protestant body would ever think of asking, and which is so much gained toward final control in national affairs. Does it not belong to Baptists, of all others, to "resist" this sort of "aggression?" And is it not fully time we were wide awake to our duty in that regard?

Thanks.

MR. EDITOR: I thank Bro. Mellen for his elaborate and lucid article, "At the Door," in the ADVOCATE, of May 10, pouring light all through the contributions for our Conference claimant's in the Mississippi Conference. I commend it to the careful and religious consideration of every member of our church, as well as every pastor, in the Woodville district.

JOHN A. ELLIS.

CLINTON, Louisiana.

London has a great problem. It has 2,600,000 people unable to get into a place of worship. In Central London, with 2,000,000, there is only accommodation for 600,000.

Notes.

A recent writer in one of the most popular monthlies of the day has this thought: "It is clearly a misfortune that the memory of the young people of to-day is not so richly stored as that of the old with immortal passages of Scripture." Sunday-school teachers ought to reverse that sentiment.

The church may now heave a sigh of relief, as Commissioner Dunlap reports the last dollar paid on the property of Payne Institute, "whereby the conditions upon which Rev. Moses U. Payne's gift of $25,000 was offered has been met." The Institute is reported by President Walker "as well attended and daily increasing in usefulness." We are glad to know these facts, and to publish them.

The Fortnightly Review, having called upon distinguished men of letters to furnish the "one passage in prose which appears of its kind the finest," among other answers, received from John Addington Symonds the answer that "Job xxviii, 12-28 is absolutely the greatest passage known to me." Matthew Arnold said, "Passages like 'Foxes have holes,' etc., comply with the test as much as anything in the world."

We are much afraid that many professing Christians are living in ignorance of the real meaning of the word righteousness. Judging from their lives, we get the idea that the word in their view means being good. It seems to us that the Revised Version has brought out the true meaning in Revelation xix, 8, where the translation is made thus, "The fine linen is the righteous acts of the saints." "Doers of the word," is the definition St. James gives, and they who do, are the ones who will stand erect in the judgment.

A brother who occupies a prominent position in our church said in our office the other day, that "If the Methodists in our section do not pay more attention to denominational education, in twenty years we will have no Methodists." While that statement may be a little too strong, there is much cause for thinking that at this point we need to strengthen our defenses. If we allow other denominations to educate our young people, we must not be surprised if they find church homes in those denominations.

The Richmond Advocate has this, which we heartily commend to the especial notice of every one who is trying to learn how to preach the gospel:

The minister who makes free use in the pulpit of such words as "exegesis," "heterodox," "esthetic," "evolution," "subjective," and "objective," is apt to put the salt a little too high for many of the sheep, and they are puzzled, and wonder what he is driving at.

Our brethren assembled in New York refused to admit the women as lay delegates, but passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That we submit to the Annual Conferences the proposition to amend the Second Restrictive Rule by adding the words, "and said delegates may be men or women," after the words, "two lay delegates for an Annual Conference," so that it will read: "not more than two lay delegates for an Annual Conference, and said delegates may be men or women."

The Wesleyans in England have been investigating, by special committee, the subject of class meetings. They are surprised to find that history does not sustain them in the view heretofore held that non-attendance on class meeting was sufficient reason for exclusion from the church. The Methodist Times says that Dr. Osborn furnished remarkable evidence that from the days of Wesley down the average attendance upon class-meeting did not exceed fifty or sixty per cent. of the members. Upon this the Times says: "One of the most startling results of the investigation of the committee was the historic discovery that non-attendance at class is not in itself a necessary reason for exclusion from membership." Why that "discovery" should be startling, we don't exactly see.

As there are two or three correspondents for our paper, whose contributions we can not read until they are deciphered by our expert printer and published in proof sheets, we commend to all writers this paragraph from the Central Christian Advocate:

It is no excuse for a man to say that he can not write more plainly. If he can write at all, he can make himself understood. That he does not do this is simply because he is not willing to make the effort. He is too impatient or careless, or, as is frequently the case, lazy. To write lines so closely together that the division between them is almost imperceptible, to make confusing abbreviations or figures that may be taken for any of the numerals, to scrawl a signature that is as much Egyptian as English in its chirography, and to make the body of a communication a succession of meaningless loops and curves is as senseless as it is impertinent. The man who writes this way from preference must be deluded with a sense of his own importance or indifferent to the heavy draft he makes among the patience and time of his friends and business associates.

Personals.

Bishop Galloway is booked for two commencement sermons in North Carolina next June.

Tulane University Law School graduated twenty-six young gentlemen to the degree of Bachelor of Laws last Tuesday: among the number, our young friend, George E. Foster, son of the late W. H. Foster, of this city.

Respecting the author of "The Crisis of Missions," an exchange says:

Dr. A. T. Pierson recently declared that for eighteen years his ministry was almost barren of results, and in consternation says: "God said to me, 'You will give up the idol of literary pleasure, and give yourself to rescuing perishing, I will give you souls.' I said, I will do it. Within eighteen months God gave me more souls than the eighteen years before."

Dr. D. C. Kelley has tendered his resignation as Treasurer of the Mission Board, to take effect October 17, if it was accepted by the Board.

The vote in the General Conference on the admission of women as lay delegates was as follows: Aye, ministers, 122; laymen, 76. No, ministers, 78; laymen, 78; a majority against women of 38 in a vote of 435.

The death of Rev. Dr. Gulliford, one of the Memphis Conference, is announced in the last Nashville Advocate.

Rev. F. H. Swindell, of North Carolina Conference, has been appointed to the place of Dr. Burkhead on the Board of Missions, and Rev. Z. T. Smith, of White River Conference, to the place of Dr. Winfield.

Our old friend, Rev. John Hannon, D. D., has been lecturing the people of San Jose on that awful subject, dynamite!"

Rev. Mr. Potts, the editor of the Michigan Christian Advocate, is said to be so sick that he does not hear his own voice!

Gov. Thomas Seay, the present governor of Alabama, has been renominated unanimously by the Democrats for a second term.

Hon. George G. Dibrell, ex-member of Congress, from the third district of Tennessee, died at his home in Sparta, Tenn., May 9. He was a consistent member of our church and a delegate to the General Conference, which was held in Nashville, in 1882.

Our book agent, Dr. Barbee, has been elected Treasurer of our Mission Board, without salary, in place of Dr. Kelley, resigned.

In accepting Dr. Kelley's resignation the Board passed the following action:

Resolved, That in accepting Dr. Kelley's resignation of the office of Treasurer of the Board of Missions, we express our high appreciation of his long, earnest and efficient labors in the missionary cause, assure him of our prayers for yet greater usefulness and happiness in the work of our Lord.

This, from the Nashville Advocate, is highly appreciated. Let our brethren heed the exhortation it gives:

"With much pleasure we see from his last issue that Rev. Dr. C. W. Carter, editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, has returned to his post greatly improved in health, and ready for the summer's work. Now give him one thousand new subscribers before the 'dog-days,' and make him feel still better.

We are distressed to read in the dispatches that our brother, Rev. R. B. Hines, while riding through a cut on the railroad near Yazoo City, Miss., was knocked off his buggy and very seriously injured. No particulars are given.

Rev. J. Black, of Meridian, dedicated a new church in Meridian, last Sunday.

We regret to learn that Rev. R. D. Wilson Worthy, presiding elder of the Vicksburg district, has been unwell for several weeks.

Woman's Missionary Society.

The regular annual meeting of the North Mississippi Conference Society, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will convene at Holly Springs, June 20, the session embracing first Sunday in July. It is earnestly desired, and very important to the success of our work, that every auxiliary send a delegate to this meeting. All auxiliaries please attend to this at once and notify corresponding secretary of Holly Springs Auxiliary, that all necessary arrangements can be made for the entertainment of delegates and visitors attending Conference. Children are cordially invited to be present, and anyone who feels an interest in our work.

MRS. W. H. WALL,
Rec. Sec. N. Miss. Conf. S.
By order of president.

Notice.

To the Members of the Brookhaven District Conference—

BRETHREN: In obedience to your request, I have placed the manuscript of my missionary discourse, "Obligations and Objections," in the hands of Dr. Barbee for an estimate of the cost of publication. The terms are such that if only 500 copies are printed, it can not well be sold for less than 10 cents a copy; but if 1,000 copies are printed, it can be sold for five cents a copy; and if 2,500, for three cents. I am not able to defray the expense unaided. If you, brethren, who voted so cordially and unanimously for its publication, will let me know at once how many dollars you are willing to invest in the publication, the discourse will soon appear. Each subscriber will get his proportionate number of copies. Fraternally,

T. L. MELLEN.

WESSON, Mississippi.

District Conference.

The Meridian District Conference will be held at Lockhart, July 26-29. On Saturday of this Conference, a Sunday-school Conference will be held. A suitable program for such Conference will be published in due time.

Items of Interest.

The deposits in the savings banks of Massachusetts and New York amount to nearly $1,000,000,000.

There are 900 beet sugar factories in Europe. France manufactured 600,000 tons of sugar and Germany 1,024,000 tons.

A sheet of manilla paper six miles in length and five feet wide, without a break, was made at a paper mill at Athens, Ga., the other day.

Some of the shepherds in the mountains of Bulgaria live for ten and fifteen years attending their flocks, and never knowing what it is to sleep in a house or to enjoy any of the comforts of civilization.

The Boston Transcript notes that only a fraction over fourteen per cent. of the prison population of Massachusetts are women, in spite of the sixty-odd thousand "superfluous women" in the State.

Dogs are often killed for hydrophobia when they have been only enraged by toothache. Old dogs often suffer much from loosened teeth, and may bite when approached or touched; if their teeth were extracted, they would enjoy life many years and be less dangerous.

Perhaps the best paid woman in American journalism is Miss Mary Louise Booth, who is paid $8,000 a year for editing Harper's Bazar. She sometimes makes also as much as $5,000 in a year for translations.

Near the town of Soleure, Switzerland a bird's nest was recently found which was constructed entirely of the imperfect watch springs thrown out from the workshops. It has been deposited in the local museum.

The largest cotton mill in the world is said to be located at Krunholm, in Russia. The establishment contains 340,000 spindles and 2,200 looms, disposes of a force of 6,300 horse power and gives employment to 7,000 hands.

The assertion is made that there are at least one hundred successful female "drummers" on the road, mainly representing firms in Chicago, Cincinnati, St. Louis and Louisville.

A nugget of ruby ore, weighing 1,600 pounds and estimated to be worth $10,000, was taken from a mine near Elko, Cal., a few days ago.

Chicago has 71,900 pupils and 1,650 teachers in the public schools.

The Supreme Court of Missouri has declared the St. Louis city ordinance of 1857, in regard to selling beer and wine on Sunday, null and void. The result is, the Downing liquor law applies to St. Louis as well as to other parts of the State, and measures will be taken to enforce it.

Marshall Field, of Chicago, is put down as the largest wholesale dry-goods merchant in the world; and in pork-packing, Phil. Armour distances all competitors.

As a book publishing center, Chicago is next to New York, and issues more subscription books than New York, Boston and Philadelphia combined.

Protestants are building ten churches every day in the United States. Christianity is not dead, nor liberality a lost art.

There are four great accumulated masses of gold in the world—$282,000,000 in the United States Treasury, $237,000,000 in the National Bank of France, $107,000,000 in the National Bank of Germany, and $100,000,000 in the Bank of England.

Dr. Dorchester gives the following as the latest religious statistics: Methodists and kindred bodies, 4,601,416; Baptists, 3,720,745; Presbyterians, 1,431,249; Lutherans, 930,830; Congregationalists, 436,379; Episcopalians, 423,305; Christians, 112,000; Adventists, 134,577; Christian Union Churches, 125,000; Friends, 82,000; German Evangelical Church Union, 60,000; other small bodies, 35,850; aggregate, 12,132,651.

New York City spends $3,000,000 preaching the gospel and $4,000,000 in charity.

Out of the 140 missionaries who went to Africa under Bishop Taylor's lead, only six men and six women have died. Thirty-six stations have been started.

A dress-maker who has the record of women's measures for the last forty years says that women are larger and healthier than they used to be. Thirty years ago the average waist was twenty inches, now it is twenty-four inches.

There is a family of four in New York of the following ages: One brother aged 92, one sister aged 91, and twin-sisters aged 90.

The net profits of the Eastern and Western Book Concerns of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the past quadrennium have been $859,054.

People with thin heads of hair should use Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer to make the hair grow out thick, healthy, and strong.

That Tired Feeling

Season is here again, and nearly every one feels weak, languid, and exhausted. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It is, in a peculiar sense, the ideal spring medicine. It purifies, vitalizes, and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, and imparts new strength and vigor to the whole body.

Periodicals.

—The Sidereal Messenger, conducted by W. W. Payne, Northfield, Minn. Price $2; ten numbers.

—Woman, an illustrated monthly magazine, has a full table of interesting matter, and is published by Woman Publishing Company, at Temple Bar, N. Y., for the low price of $2 75.

—The Pulpit Treasury begins volume six with the new heading, "The Treasury for Pastor and People." It has much good reading, and is published by E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York. Price $2 50; clergymen, $2.

—Wide Awake, for May, is as bright and sunny as a May morning. The beautiful frontispiece (after Steffeck's famous painting) shows the late Emperor William and his brother when boys, in company with their famous mother, Queen Louise. A brief article about the Emperor, with a portrait from his last life photograph, is timely. President Madison's Family, with its beautiful portraits of Dolly Madison and other members of the family, is very chatty and entertaining. These glimpses into the home life of the children of our Presidents appeal forcibly to every American boy and girl. Young coin collectors will turn first to the Pleasures of a Young Numismatist. Mrs. Clark's Rise and Fall of the Migit-is delightful in its fun, which "goes home" to every lad who has owned an amateur printing press. Several jolly poems add to the entertainment furnished. The more substantial features include, In a Typhoon, by Olive Risley Seward; Chinese Dragons, by Prof. Douglas, of the British Museum; Night in a Beaver Town, by Edmund Collins. In the June issue will begin Mrs. Crowninshield's serial of training-ship life, Plucky Smalls: His Story. Newsdealers have this issue for twenty cents, or it will be mailed by the publishers, D. Lothrop Company, Boston. A sample back number of any of the Lothrop magazines costs but five cents, or of the four for fifteen cents.

An admirable means of reinvigorating vigor when impaired by over-work, sickness or other causes, is the use of Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

We invite the attention of our readers to the advertisement of the Singer Manufacturing Company's three wonderful sewing machines: the Oscillator, an eclectic sewing machine combining in one beautiful piece of mechanism all the scientific points of advantage known to the art—is prized by experts who can appreciate this product of 36 years' study and experience; the Vibrator—a marvelously light-running and elegantly finished machine with the open-end, "self-threading" shuttle, and all the latest points of convenience and simplicity—is an ideal machine to be used "without teaching" by every member of the family; and the dainty Automatic—the latest and best of single-thread machines—completes a trio of Singers beyond all competition, and their exhibition at all the Singer Company's offices throughout the Union is well worth the attention of everyone who owns, uses or needs a sewing machine.

The Independent says that twenty, or twenty-five other newspapers of New York City are printed on its press.

Captain Force and Guy Norton returned last Tuesday evening from their Southern trip, after making purchases at Crowley, La. Mr. Norton purchased a fine farm near the town, and Capt. Force secured a small tract in the city and will engage in fruit raising and fancy gardening. They expect to return in a few months to make it their permanent home.—St. Paul (Neb.) Phonograph.

Publisher's Department.

No fraudulent advertisements will knowingly be allowed in the ADVOCATE. If one ever appears, it will be by accident. In ordering from those whose advertisements appear in our columns please state that you have seen the same in the ADVOCATE.

Scrap of conversation between two ladies, overheard on a suburban train a few mornings since: "So, George is at Harvard now?" "Oh, yes; this is his second year, you know; he has just entered the sycamore class."

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

This is the toast which the modest Irishman drank to the Englishman: "Here's to you as good as you are, and here's to me as bad as I am. But as good as you are, and as bad as I am, I'm as good as you are, as bad as I am."

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

Mansfield Female College. 1887-8.

THE FALL TERM will open Wednesday, September 15, 1887.

The Faculty has been strengthened by the accession of Rev. M. S. Watts, of Virginia, who will have the discipline of the College, and Prof. D. E. Huddle, also of Virginia, who will manage the boarding department. Both these gentlemen are experienced in school work, and they, with their families, will add much to the social advantages of the pupils.

Other highly qualified teachers have been secured for the Literary, Music and Art Departments.

Annual rate for board and tuition from one hundred and sixty-five to one hundred and eighty-five dollars, according to class. Music, instrumental or vocal, and art lessons, five dollars per month of four weeks extra.

Instruction in French, ten dollars per year. Use of piano for practice, ten dollars. Total expense for the year for board, tuition, and single course in music or art, paid in advance, two hundred dollars.

A deposit of five dollars for each term must be made for purchase of books and stationery.

Pupils must furnish their own bed-clothing and pillows, towels and toilet articles.

The College is the property of the Louisiana Conference, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the daughters of members of this body receive free tuition in the Literary and Music Departments.

Owing to the steadily increasing patronage during the past four years, the Board of Managers have made arrangements for increasing the capacity and comfort of the buildings, and beautifying the grounds.

Mansfield is on the line of the Texas and Pacific R. R., 288 miles from New Orleans, and forty miles from Shreveport.

THE PRAISE OF GOOD DOCTORS.

BY SAMUEL W. MCFIELD.

A SONG.

The best of all the pill-box crew,
Since ever time began,
Are the doctors who have most to do
With the health of a hearty man.

And so I count them up again,
And praise them as I can:
There's Dr. Diet,
And Dr. Quiet,
And Dr. Merryman.

There's Dr. Diet, he tries my tongue,
"I know you well," says he;
"Your stomach is poor and your liver is sprung,
We must make your food agree."

And Dr. Quiet, he feels my wrist
And he gravely shakes his head.
"Now, now, dear sir, I must insist
That you go at ten to bed."

But Dr. Merryman for me
Of all the pill-box crew!
For he smiles and says as he jobs his fee:
"Laugh on, whatever you do!"

So now I eat what I ought to eat,
And at ten I go to bed,
And I laugh in the face of cold or heat;
For thus have the doctors said!

And so I count them up again,
And praise them as I can:
There's Dr. Diet,
And Dr. Quiet,
And Dr. Merryman.

We take pleasure in giving our little cousins the following composition from a boy. We think if there is anything in having a vivid imagination, the author will one day be a poet of high order:

Columbus was a man who could make an egg stand on end without breaking it. The King of Spain said to Columbus, "Can you discover America?" "Yes," said Columbus, "if you will give me a ship." So he got a ship and sailed over the sea in the direction where he thought America ought to be found. The sailors quarreled, and after many days believed there was no such place. But after many days the pilot came to him and said, "Columbus, I see land." "Then that is America," said Columbus. When the ship got near, the land was full of black men. Columbus said, "Is this America?" "Yes, it is," said they. Then the chief said, "I suppose you are Columbus?" "You are right," said he. Then the chief turned to his men and said, "There is no help for it; we are discovered at last."—London Standard.

MR. EDITOR: Our society met again Friday, and we had a splendid time. We got the names of four more members. We have taken up seventy cents; but our dues are only five cents per month now. Vice-president, Maggie Richardson; secretary, Ada Sherrouse; treasurer, Sallie Payton; corresponding secretary, Mona Rowe; lady manager, Mrs. Landrum. I am president. Our Sunday-school is increasing every Sunday. The infant class has thirty. They are going to make two infant classes and will have to take some out of the thirty, that is, in one class. The Bible class has a great many in it. Bro. Godfrey is our stationed preacher this year. He has been preaching here ever since Thursday night till Sunday night; one convert. He does preach so good. Sunday morning his text was begun at the time when God told Noah to build the ark; that he was going to destroy the world. Where is this passage of Scripture found in Proverbs? "It is the glory of God to conceal a thing; but the honor of kings is to search out a matter." I will close, wishing the ADVOCATE much success.

The Little Beauty.

"I know I am homely," said little Rosie Oppenheim, as she peered from the top of the chair into her looking-glass and scanned every feature. It was only too true, for the face she saw was far from fairy-like. There was no pretty dimple in the cheek, no bright, winsome eyes, no tiny, clear-cut nose, no smooth, white forehead and drooping eyelashes. It was a dark countenance—small eyes, thick lips, large nose, and huge ears.

"Goodness! What a fright!" she exclaimed, as she got off the chair and turned her face from the mirror. "Well, I am glad that I know it, anyway; and so, if the girls call me names, they won't sting me at all, because it is true." And she laughed such a merry little laugh that the sunbeam through the window caught its echoes and passed them to the clouds beyond.

Rosie took up her sewing by the window, but after a time grew tired of the work, and, picking up "Alice in Wonderland," was deep in its mysteries. With what interest did she follow the adventures of that pleasant little maid! How excited she grew as page after page was quickly scanned! How—

"Rosie"—it was Mrs. Oppenheim who spoke—"Rosie, dear, I would like you to run to the corner and match this silk."

Quick as a flash, she threw down the book, and returned in a few minutes with the article desired. Then she resumed her book.

"Sister Rosie—Posy"—The voice came from a little chubby boy of five. "Won't you please tell me a story?"

"Why, of course I will, my precious," said the young girl, seizing the little fellow; and he eagerly listened while she told him such a fairy story that his eyes grew larger and larger, and his mouth wider and wider, until he soon fell fast asleep.

"I don't think I shall read any more now," said Rosie to herself. "It is time to go to the piano. I have to run over those scales." And she darted up the stairs and had just opened the piano, when her father appeared at the doorway.

"You would oblige me, my darling," he said, "if you would close that piano. My headaches dreadfully."

"All right, papa. I will get up early to-morrow and finish the exercises." And she closed the piano softly, then quietly left the room as her mother entered.

"What a beautiful disposition that child has!" said Mr. Oppenheim. "It is your training, my love."

"But I do wish that she was a little prettier, Joseph."

"Not for the world, not for the world, Hannah. Believe me, she is a little beauty as she is; and, if God spares her, her features will grow more regular."

Rosie did not hear her father's remarks, although she felt that she was loved even more tenderly from that hour. But the sunbeam that caught her merry laughter and bore it to the clouds heard the words of praise, and shone in extra lovely colors that evening.—Jewish Messenger.

Good Spellers.

The Wide-Awake, for May, tells an incident quite worthy of being read by all our school-children. We quote as follows:

Martha Biggs came of a scholarly family. Her father was one of the early ministers of the little town of Halifax in New England, where his pastorate was life-long, and five of her brothers were ministers also. In accordance, therefore, with the family tradition, she was ambitious of learning, and above all did she desire to stand at the head of her class in spelling. But good speller as she was, Marcus Bosworth was still better, and he kept his place "as number one," while Martha remained "number two." He never missed, and Martha was quite in despair when she one day made the happy discovery that his shoes were wearing out. It was far on toward spring, and Martha knew if the shoes did give out, Marcus would not have another pair until autumn. And how was he going to come to school through the February snows without shoes? She watched them day after day, her sweet child-sympathy quite destroyed by her ambition, and marked the gradual and entire separation of the worn-out soles from the uppers, and how they were tenderly tied together with bits of string in the vain endeavor to make them last a little longer. One day she was sure that their time had come. They seemed the merest skeleton of shoes, in which Marcus shuffled to the head of the class with the greatest difficulty. Happy Martha! In imagination she saw herself standing as the proud leader of her class at the head of the long line of spellers that ranged from one end of the school-house to the other. But what was her dismay, when the next morning Marcus entered the school-room with his feet bound up in pieces of cloth! To such indomitable resolution her ambition was forced to give way, and she thereafter remained content to be "number two."

It can be further told how one day as Marcus was warming his chilled feet by the fire, the bits of cloth ignited, and the master conveyed him promptly out of doors, and dipped him in a snow-bank to extinguish the flames; but this, it seems, did not extinguish his love for learning.

Household.

THE SIN OF OVERWORK.—The woman who spends her life in unnecessary labor is by this very labor unfitted for the higher duties of home. She should be the haven of rest to which both children and husband turn for peace and refreshment. She should be the careful, intelligent adviser and guide of the one, and the tender confidant of the other. How is it possible for a woman exhausted in body, and, as a natural consequence, in mind also, to perform either of these offices? It is not possible. The constant strain is too great. Nature gives way beneath it. She loses health and spirit and hopefulness, and, more than all, her youth—the last thing that a woman should allow to slip from her; for, no matter how old she is in years, she should be young in heart and feeling, for the youth of age is sometimes more attractive than youth itself.

To the overworked woman this green old age is out of the question. Her disposition is often ruined, her temper soured, her very nature changed by the burden which, too heavy to carry, is only dragged along. Even her affections are blunted, and she becomes merely a machine—a woman without the time to be womanly, a mother without the time to train and guide her children, a wife without the time to sympathize with and cheer her husband, a woman so overworked during the day that "when night comes" her sole thought and most intense longing are for rest and sleep. Better by far let everything go unfinished, and live as best she can, than entail on herself and family the curse of overwork.—The Household.

THE HUMAN BREATH.—Professor Brown-Sequard has recently been making experiments to determine whether the human breath was capable of producing any poisonous effects. From the condensed watery vapor of the expired air he obtained a poisonous liquid, which, when injected under the skin of rabbits, produced almost immediate death. He ascertained that this poison was an alkaloid, and not a microbe. The rabbits thus injected died without convulsions, the heart and large blood-vessels being engorged with blood. Brown-Sequard considers it fully proved that the expired air both of man and animals contain a volatile poison-our principle which is much more deleterious than carbonic acid.—Scientific American.

TO PURIFY A ROOM.—To purify a room, set a pitcher of water in it, and in a few hours it will have absorbed all the respired gases in the room, the air of which will have become purer, but the water utterly filthy. The colder the water is, the greater the capacity to contain these gases. At the ordinary temperature a pail of water will absorb a pint of carbonic acid gas and several pints of ammonia. The capacity is nearly doubled by reducing the water to the temperature of ice. Hence water kept in a room awhile is unfit for use.

On the Sabbath the busy housewife should rest, expand her soul, and let the sweet, hallowed influences of that holy day lift her mind above the every-day cares of life. How much better to have our children remember that mother set apart that day for soul culture, for long quiet talks with her little ones, impressing upon their young minds that it was a day of rest, but not of idleness. In some respects it is a busy day for us, but how like a green oasis in the desert is it compared to six days of labor.—Exchange.

KIMBALL.—The now glorified sister in Christ, Mrs. SARAH ANN KIMBALL, was the daughter of Thomas and Rebecca Hawkins, and was born in Haywood county, Tenn., June 8, 1811. Her last days were spent in the house of her devoted and honored son, Rev. Horace Kimball, pastor of the Moreau Street Methodist Church, New Orleans. She died in blessed hope of eternal life, and ascended in glorious triumph to her immortal home, April 25, 1888. Her parents were godly people and trained her in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. While she was never skeptical, but always historically and theoretically a Christian, she delayed to womanhood the great matter of personal salvation from sin. In childhood her parents made their home in Marshall county, Miss. Here in early youth she came to know the boy who in manhood was to be her devoted husband Rev. W. P. Kimball. Just as Bro. Kimball was duly licensed to preach the gospel, he offered Sarah Hawkins his heart and hand and was accepted. Their engagement was to remain unconsummated until Bro. Kimball had completed his fourth year as an itinerant in the Memphis Conference. But as there was a strong appeal for volunteers for Louisiana Conference, Bro. Kimball gave his name as a transfer. To this his affianced bride gave her cordial and prompt consent. It was deemed, under the circumstances, most expedient for their marriage to be at once consummated. She settled with loved ones and home to try the experiences of an itinerant preacher's wandering, toiling and self-denying life, to go anywhere, and suffer and do whatever it might please God to send. Vermillionville, Southwest Louisiana, was his first circuit. On their way from Memphis, they stopped not far from their field of labor, at New Iberia, Bro. Kimball assisting at the quarterly meeting service. The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was administered. Sister Kimball did not commune. The lay brother whose hospitality they were sharing noticed his omission, and inquired of Sister Kimball why she did not commune. The question profoundly impressed and deeply awakened her. She said to her soul, "If my husband fails as a preacher and pastor, people will say it is his irreligious wife; that it is her fault that he has not been successful." This thought forced upon her a solemn sense of dread responsibility—that, as a minister's wife, she must be religious. "help-meet." She set about the work of salvation with most earnest endeavor, seeking light and help. While attending the exercises of a protracted service, in unceasing prayer—in the interim between the morning prayer meeting and the 11 o'clock A. M. service while sitting in her buggy—her heart lifted to God in prayer, she most clearly realized that God had power on earth to pardon sin—and ever after lived a life of prayer and love, always zealous of good works. She willingly labored and sacrificed for Christ.

As an itinerant's wife she knew how to sympathize with these godly and self-denying men. She was given to hospitality. As a neighbor she was kind, considerate and generous; as a friend, was reliable and true. She rejoiced with them that do rejoice, and wept with them that weep. She loved to visit the fatherless and widowed and to minister sympathy and help. Though she did much, her broad and generous heart would fain have done more for the Master's honor, and the salvation of the souls he died to save.

She bore her long and prostrating sickness with unmurmuring resignation. Some days before the time of her "departure" she received, with husband, two sons and loved friends, at the hands of the writer the holy communion. She was ecstatically happy, sang praises and shouted for joy; called many of us up one by one, and the members of her family present, and said wise and loving words to us all; and while we sang, "Savior, more than life to me," she joined the holy train, and evidenced that Christ was all to her, her "Sun and her Song." All the place was hallowed, and seemed quite on the frontier of "the summer land of song." In this happy frame she continued whenever strength and consciousness permitted, affirming her steadfast faith and rejoicing in hope.

So "God's children are gathering home." How privileged those who knew her best, to be honored with her company so long, and to inherit the benediction of her prayers and consecrated life. Let them bow with meekness to "our Father's" will, and rejoice in hope of his glory, and find consolation where only bleeding hearts can, in Christ Jesus, the Lord.

J. B. WALKER.

PARHAM—JOHN G. PARHAM was born in Virginia in the year 1826, and died in Bessemer, Ala., March 15, 1888, aged sixty-one years and nine months.

His father was a gentleman and physician of high standing in Vicksburg, where the subject of this sketch spent a goodly part of his life. He graduated at Centenary College, when that institution was located near Brandon, Miss. In 1846 he married Miss Mary Blunt, who survives him. He removed to New Orleans in 1849. Here he connected himself with the educational interests of the city, although he had studied and prepared himself for the practice of law. In the public schools we find him successively occupying the positions of principal, superintendent, director and finally president of the Board of Directors. This last position he resigned on his departure, in 1887, to his new home in Alabama. After the war Bro. Parham entered upon mercantile life in New Orleans, and for years was a partner in one of the most prominent firms in this city.

The writer of this memorial, in contemplating the life and character of the deceased, feels the embarrassment, not of poverty, but wealth of material out of which to reproduce the man who awakened our love and respect, excited our admiration and left a lasting impress for good upon all with whom he came in contact. He was a man of rare refinement; coarseness of speech and conduct were simply impossibilities with him. The gentleman was stamped upon appearance and manner. No one was surprised at the gentle tone and delightful courtesies of his life, for you were prepared beforehand for them, by his very looks and bearing. He was a man of great sincerity and transparency of character. No dissimulation or double-facedness, no cloaking or hiding. He was what he was at all times: an upright, truthful, open-browed, open-hearted man. He was a charitable man not only in the ordinary acceptance of the word, but after the spirit of the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. You might visit him and leave his company fully assured that your name and character were in good and merciful hands. The writer knew him intimately, as friend and pastor, for years, and can not recall a single harsh or unkind utterance that ever fell from his lips.

He was a devoted church member. Hundreds in this city can testify to the regularity of his attendance, the liberality of his offerings, and the deep affectionate concern he cherished for the interests of the church. His fond and long employment was in the Sabbath-school, where he labored faithfully as superintendent for many years.

Above all, and better than all, he was a Christian. Converted in early life, he walked with God, felt his acceptance, and died as he had lived in the faith. Questioned on his deathbed, whether he had any fear, he replied, "None whatever;" that he had long ago made his preparation and felt at perfect peace with God. In this state of deep serenity of soul he remained until the last, then closed his eyes on earth to open them instantly in heaven. So closed a pure, beautiful and useful life.

He leaves to his family the priceless legacy of a well-spent life and spotless name; and to the world an example that should prompt many to say, "Let me die the death of the righteous, and may my last end be like his."

THOMAS.—Died in Grenada, Miss., April 11, 1888, of measles, little JOHN ERVIN THOMAS, eldest son of Rev. J. E. Thomas, aged two years and seven months.

Died in Grenada, Miss., April 19, 1888, of measles, HOWARD OVERTON THOMAS, youngest son of Rev. J. E. Thomas, aged one year and one month.

While there is much to comfort the hearts of bereaved parents, when their children are taken while yet in their infancy, the grace of God only can sustain his children amidst such sorrow as our dear brother and sister are called upon to suffer. In a few short days God has taken their two bright and beautiful boys and left them sonless. But they know whom they have believed, and are persuaded that he is able to keep that which they have committed unto him. Our whole people have learned to love Bro. Thomas and his family, and we all suffer and sorrow in this common bereavement.

THOS. J. NEWELL.

From the Centropolis, Kansas City, Mo., December 1st, 1887:

There is nothing so valuable to us as health, but we do not realize this until we are deprived of it. How many of our readers awake in the morning with dull pains in the back and head, and find it a hard task to perform daily duties? These are symptoms of Malaria, and we know from personal trial they may be completely eradicated by Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria. It is a simple and effective remedy, and we advise our readers to try it.

A Find at Pompeii.

The find of silver plate and other valuables at Pompeii took place on September 20, in Regio VIII., Insula II., house twenty-third. It seems that the owners of the house, having made a bundle of their plate, had put it on a stool in a room on the ground floor adjoining the kitchen, waiting, perhaps, for a lull in the shower of burning ashes and for a chance of removing it to a safer place. The increasing fury of the eruption, however, must have persuaded the fugitives to think only of their lives, and in the hurry of the flight the bundle was left behind. We have found pieces of the stool or bench upon which it was laid, as well as pieces of the strong cloth which had been used for the bundle. There is an exquisite set for four, in solid silver, perfectly well preserved. It contains 4 large cups, 4 round dishes, 4 smaller, and 4 small cups, 4 egg cups, 1 filter, and 1 jug. The weight of the set amounts to 2,753 grammes, nearly 6 lbs. To this we must add one more pound of broken silverware and table utensils, such as spoons, salt cellars, etc.; a statuette of Jupiter sitting on a bronze stool, three pairs of gold earrings, and fragments of a large bronze pedera inlaid with silver ornamentations. More important still is the discovery of three libelli (of wood), coated with wax, containing family documents. When first dug out they appeared to be in good preservation, but the action of the atmosphere soon turned them into a heap of minute fragments. With the help of photographs and of copies we are able to decipher the general meaning of the three deeds, all drawn up in the year 61 after Christ—that is to say, 18 years before the catastrophe. The leading personages are both women—a Decidia Margaris and a Poppea Note, liberta of Priscus—and both seem to have cleverly managed their affairs. In the first deed Poppea Note sells to Margaris two young slaves named Simplex and Petrinus. In the second the same lady declares herself a debtor to Margaris for the sum of 1,450 sestertii, which she had evidently borrowed from her friend. The meaning of the third can not be made out with certainty, but the repetition of the word mancipia, which occurs in every other line, makes it evident that Poppea Note is still engaged in her favorite sport of dealing in slaves. —The Athenæum.

HOW POSTAGE STAMPS ARE MADE.—Steel plates on which two hundred stamps are engraved are used in printing. Two men are kept hard at work covering them with colored inks and passing them to a man and a girl, who are equally busy printing them with large rolling handpresses. Three of these little squads are employed all the time. After the small sheets of paper upon which the two hundred stamps are printed have dried enough, they are sent into another room and gummed. The gum used for this purpose is a peculiar composition made of the powder of dried potatoes and other vegetables mixed with water. After having been dried again, this time on little racks which are fanned by steam power, for about an hour, they are put in between little sheets of pasteboard, and pressed in hydraulic presses capable of applying a weight of two thousand tons. The next thing is to cut the sheet in half; each sheet, of course, when cut, contains a hundred stamps. This is done by a girl with a large pair of shears, cutting by hand being preferred to that of machinery. They are then passed to two other squads, who perforate the paper between the stamps. Next they are pressed once more, and then packed and labeled, and stowed away for dispatching to fill orders.

Consumption Surely Cured.

To the Editor:

Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above-named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy FREE to any of your readers who have consumption, if they will send me their Express and P. O. address.

Respectfully,

No soul can preserve the bloom and delicacy of its existence without lonely musings and silent prayer, and the greatness of this necessity is in proportion to the greatness of the soul.—Canon Farrar.

The Power of Personal Character.

We can only make the best of others by first making the best of ourselves. In other words, there is no power like the power of personal character and the personal element in every good work. It is the man who commends the creed, not the creed the man. Every reform, every regenerating movement, must have a man behind it. He must be a good man who would make others good. He must be generous who would make others liberal. We can not be in the company of some men ten minutes without being lifted into their purer atmosphere. We act our best, talk our best, feel our best, when they are near. We can not drop an unjust or bitter word in their presence, any more than we could take a live coal into our lips. We can not retail a doubtful piece of gossip until they are out of hearing. While they are talking we feel generous and high-minded, willing to sacrifice our money or our time or ourselves to the cause they love. While they are near we feel that life is worth living, that we can amount to something if we choose, that it is a noble thing to be a man, that it is a glorious thing to be a Christian. We can not describe this enveloping, elevating influence. We can not tell exactly what it is, but we have felt it. This was and is the influence of Christ in the earth. He only turned and looked upon Peter, but Peter was never the same man after that look as before. From the cross he looked with tender, loving eyes upon a sin-stained world, and this old world has never been quite so vile and wretched since. Every year it is being lifted, more and more, out of its wretchedness, and this is only accomplished, and altogether accomplished, by his pure and loving personality.—Exchange.

Nearly everybody needs a good medicine at this season, to purify the blood and build up the system. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most popular and successful spring medicine and blood purifier. It cures scrofula; all humors, dyspepsia, sick headache, that tired feeling.

Systematic Giving.

A colored brother was explaining his system of giving to the Lord. "Yes, sir," he said to the visitor, easing himself back on his spade, "I gibes de Lawd off o' one acre ebbery year to de Lawd."

"Which acre is it?" inquired his friend.

"Wal, dat is a dibberant question. Truf is, de acre changes most ebbery season."

"How's that?"

"Why, in wet seasons I gibes de Lawd de low land, and in de dry seasons I gibes him de top acre ob de whole plantation."

"In that case the Lord's acre is the worse in the whole farm, for in wet seasons it would be flooded and in dry times parched."

"Jest so," rejoined the systematic giver; "you don't allow I'se goin' to rob my family ob de best acre I'se got, did you."

And he went on with his digging with a sturdy smile of conscious peace with God.

We are often struck with the wonderful similarity between the colored man and the white man. We think we have known several white men who were just as shrewd in their financial management as this colored man was.—Journal and Messenger.

Dyspeptics disorders of the kidneys are responsible for many of the ordinary ailments of humanity, which, neglected develop into a serious and, perhaps, fatal malady. Experience would suggest the use of Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm.

Morality apart from religion is but another name for decency in sin. It is just that negative species of virtue which consists in not doing what is scandalously depraved and wicked. But there is no heart of holy principle in it, any more than there is in grosser sins.—Horace Bushnell.

In the decline of life, infirmities beset us, to which our youth and maturity were strangers. Our kidneys and liver are subject to derangements; but nothing equals Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm as a regulator of these organs.

"If I had my choice between one child and two adults," the senior Dr Stephen H. Tyng once said, "I would always choose the one child." There is special hopefulness in religious effort for the young.

If you have a tendency to brood over your physical condition, you have reason to suspect the trouble lies in your disordered kidneys and liver. Use Dr. J. H. McLean's Liver and Kidney Balm, and you will soon feel buoyant and vigorous.

The New York Christian at Work says: It is a perfect treasury of things new and old, odd, curious and interesting. It is a volume as full of instruction as of entertainment, and will prove an endless source of profit and amusement in the home circle. It is in a peculiar and most happy sense a stimulating volume. We know of no volume of its kind extant, and whoever may be its author he has shown a special adaptedness to his task, and done his work in a most interesting and thorough manner.

Zion's Herald, Boston, says: It has almost everything that can be thought of to awaken a lively interest on the part of young and old in the careful study of the Bible. It affords also fine and profitable home study and amusement for the family. It is a good thing; happy is he who invented it.

The Cumberland Presbyterian, Nashville, Tenn., says: This is a book to rejoice the heart of every Sunday-school teacher and superintendent. This is not a collection of silly stories and cranky notions too often found in print. The student of these curiosities will find help and light in his investigation of the Word of God. This book in the hands of a wise Sunday-school superintendent would keep any school from dullness.

The Baptist Standard, Chicago, says: One would almost need to write a book as large as this one to give an adequate idea of what it is. The object plainly is to put young students, especially, in a way of learning more about Bible history, Bible geography and various other things in this wonderful book than they might know how to find without a guide. The book is a striking illustration of the methods of Bible teaching adopted in these days.

M. Gervais, a French authority, says there are men capable of bearing arms—in Germany, 5,000,000; in France, 4,500,000; in Austria-Hungary, 1,800,000; in Italy, 2,000,000; in England, 800,000; in Russia, 6,000,000; and in all the other European states, 4,000,000. That gives a total of 24,100,000. Of that number 10,000,000 are trained soldiers.

NOTICE.

The Price Baking Powder Company, in advertising their yeast powder, publish a relative comparison of the strength and merits of various yeast powders, and in said list a "Eureka" Yeast Powder is classed as an "alum powder." The undersigned desires to state that this can not refer to GOODWYN'S EUREKA YEAST POWDER, which is absolutely pure and free from alum. This statement is made for the benefit of my friends and patrons who might be misled into supposing that the "Eureka" referred to is Goodwyn's Eureka, manufactured in this city.

MRS. P. M. GOODWYN,
Manufacturer,

MAY 11, 1888.

To Whom It May Concern:

The "Eureka" Baking Powder shown up in our diagram as alum powder has no reference to a baking powder of that name manufactured by Mrs. P. M. Goodwyn, of New Orleans, which I take pleasure in saying is not an alum powder.

JOHN W. FITCH,
South'n Ag't Price Baking Powder Co.

We endorse the above and pronounce Mrs. Goodwyn's Eureka Baking Powder as being very superior, and we recommend its use.

for the sake of a certain class is, Don't be betrayed by the old adage. It is a snare to your foot; yea, to both of them—the poor foot and the fine one. Anticipate the certain discoveries of time; let that weak, undeveloped member or faculty get an occasional airing. Admit that you don't know everything; that you have not read all the books that have been published; that your genius is not of the universal order like that of Crichton; that there are several things that you can not do; a few things you have forgotten, and one or two facts of Creation you have not yet discovered. Bring forward into view from beneath the distended robes of pretension and florid assertion that little misshapen foot of yours. It will help us, and help you. A peculiar connection exists between those dissimilar feet, and certain graces and passions of the heart. All our readers, I am convinced, have noticed it. For instance, when you thrust forward the best foot, pride immediately swells; but if you put forward or have by others put foward the worst foot, humility at once graciously expands in the heart and life.

You are now better prepared to see the beauty of the other expression—always step out on the right foot. A beautiful moral light falls at once on this sentence. It has a very inviting perspective. It opens away into the character world. I see such entrancing figures coming to the front, as singleness of heart, sincerity and an unbending integrity.

The expression is rich in meaning. It means liberty. The man is not bound down to the use of one foot; he may use the right or the left indiscriminately. The right foot may mean oftentimes the left foot, while the distinction or difference between the best and the worst member is lost sight of altogether. Happy the life that rids you of the galling necessity of approaching the world always in a certain way! Think of a man shuffling and shoveling himself along, so to speak, through the world with the same foot forever in the front. A kind of boat prow, a dolphin's nose. Think of the preacher with one pet sermon or prayer, the young man with the pet recitation, the young lady with the pet song or instrumental piece. This is the adornment or acquisition that is forever to be exhibited to the world. It is the best foot! In the kingdom of morals such a proceeding is simply dreadful; for out of such doings is made the hypocrite. But all this is escaped from by coming forward with the right foot instead of the best. The delightful freedom felt in presenting your true self to the world—pretending nothing, concealing nothing—is itself full pay for the mortification created by the knowledge that we have shown openly and yet humbly that we felt that all wisdom and all gifts did not dwell within us.

Then the expression touches the matter of conscience. Let us all be sure that we are on the right foot in every movement of life. I refrain from enlarging. But come to the final suggestion of the sentence, and that is, Let our beginnings be right. When we start at all, let it be a right start. I do not believe that there is sound philosophy or good theology or religion in the saying that a bad beginning makes a good ending. Life and the Bible both contradict this assertion. Give me the good beginning always. If seen in a thing, it has more chances in its favor; if in a person, a certain good book says when he is old he will not depart from it. The nobler and better the work, the more I crave to see that right start—the getting off on the right foot.

There is a fine and yet strong connection between it and success. And I have seen the grand, complete and triumphant life so invariably terminating the course that began with this step on the right foot, that such a step has finally become not only auspicious, but prophetic. Of course, this does not mean that the successful life did not begin with many discouragements and failures. The stepping forth on the right foot refers to something better than the flush of a first victory. It means commencing with a proper spirit, having a true and elevated conception of the life duty before you, and so speaking and deporting yourself accordingly.

We are constantly called upon to notice young men entering the ministry. You can without any fear of mistake predict what they will be by the way they make their beginning. I saw a young minister go into the pulpit with a ratan cane, the head of which was ornamented with a dog's head. He started out on the wrong foot, or with a wrong spirit or improper conception of the holiness, sacredness, dreadfulness and divineness of his calling. He has not succeeded!

I saw a young minister greatly given to wearing buttonhole bouquets and, Sardanapalus like, surrounding himself with females on the street, and at religious meetings, when the shout of a king was in the camp, and spiritual powers were together with men contesting for immortal souls. There he sat in a grinning framework of surrounding ribbons, embowered in crinoline, while stalwart men of God were agonizing, and heaven itself in a throe over souls that at that moment were hovering between eternal life and death. He didn't start out on the right foot. He has not succeeded! A ladies' man in the ministry is never God's man!

I saw another with the inevitable and omnipresent cigarette. He doesn't look like God's man. Will he succeed? is the question. He himself is looking for comfort in the direction of three of our Bishops. But they followed the cloud of the cigar, and not the pillar of fire of the cigarette. Somehow it is felt by the observer, as Timothy is seen discharging three columns of smoke simultaneously from various orifices in his face, that he has not started out on the right foot.

Sadder still, I have seen more than one start forth careless as to secret prayer and Bible study, and habitually neglectful of brain and heart preparation for the pulpit. They did not step forth with the right foot; and in every case they have not succeeded!

We have only to look at the beginning of the religious life and career of men who have impressed the church for all time to see how remarkably different it was from those just mentioned. Read the lives of McKendree, Asbury, Olin and others. Take up the biographies of such men as Brainard, Buchanan, Payson and Elijah Steele; glance at the histories of Winans and Drake, and others who have left a lasting impress for good on circuit and station and district and State itself, and you will discover that which arrests attention and commands respect and reverence at once. An intense spirit of prayerfulness will be marked in all, together with an intimate knowledge of the Scriptures, and a profound spirituality of life that affected and impressed all who ever met them. The idea of any of these men flourishing a ratan, smoking a cigarette, and flirting with girls, is simply unthinkable. There seemed to be a pressure upon the spirit that left them neither heart nor time for such things. In the pulpit the eye had a solemn, far-away look, as though it rested on the shining hills of heaven, or was contemplating the judgment bar of God. The spirit was uplifted and removed from the multitude, while the whole life made one think of the words of Christ, "I have a baptism to be baptized with, and how am I straitened till it be accomplished." What shall I more add, but that somehow everybody felt, as they observed these men, that they had stepped out with the right foot, and somehow all of us notice that all such lives succeed.

That "Southern Convention."

BY REV. T. CAMERON.

It seems to me our Advocates and the Protestant press generally are almost criminally negligent just now as to the movements of the Church of Rome in this country. To anyone who has kept his eyes open during the last few years, it appears very clear that the supreme aim of that church is to get political control of the United States. And it may as well be said at once, they are making rapid strides in that direction. When that time comes, if it does come, then farewell to our religious liberty in this great republic!

There is before me, in the Daily Herald, of Birmingham, Ala., of April 26, the report of the proceedings of a "Southern Convention," at Hot Springs, N. C., the purpose of which was "to induce emigration to the Southern States."

"Maj. J. D. Kelly, of New York," called the convention to order. "Gov. Fitzhugh Lee, of Virginia, was elected permanent chairman, and Luther R. Ransom, of South Carolina, permanent secretary." It is further said, that "on the platform with Gov. Lee were His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, and Archbishop Elder, of Cincinnati," etc. Again: "His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons, was presented to the convention." He addressed the convention, giving much taffy to the Southern people. There were present also several of the Catholic Bishops, but a conspicuous and ominous absence of the names of Protestant clergy.

Now, it will be remembered by those who have been watching the drift of affairs of late, that a few weeks back a plan of colonization, under the direction of the Romish clergy in the Southern States, was reported in some of the papers. The plan was to induce a sufficient number of Catholics to come to the South to form colonies at several points. They said they "intended after Easter" to inaugurate the movement, and it was expected that Cardinal Gibbons and "all the Bishops in the Southern States east of the Mississippi would be present."

Does not the personnel of the Hot Springs convention indicate that the plan has been inaugurated? From all this it is easy to determine that the real purpose of the movement is to place a strong Roman Catholic plant in localities where now that element is weak, and thus increase the chances of papal supremacy in this country. Who can doubt the correctness of this view?

The Hot Springs convention established the "Southern (?) Immigration Association," with "headquarters in New York." Why, yes, to be sure! Is not Castle Garden there? Moreover, Maj. J. D. Kelly, of New York, was made chief of the association, with power to call the Board together. Railroad corporations, industrial associations, etc., are to be enlisted; governors of all the Southern States and mayors of cities are to be asked to help, and so on to the end of the chapter.

Now, I know nothing of the religious predilections of such men as Govs. Lee, Gordon and Richardson. So far as is known to me, they care for none of these things; but how is it that Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, and Archbishop Elder, of Cincinnati, and other clergy of "Rome" become all at once so deeply interested in this plan of "Southern immigration?" Why? No doubt, beyond the sea in a city on the Tiber, there sits an old man with a long head and a scheming soul, who keeps posted on all these movements, and is chuckling to himself over them. Yes, the Pope directs Gibbons, and Gibbons "works the wires."

The Romish Church is in spirit to-day what she has ever been. Give her control of this government, and religious toleration is at an end, and the horrors of the Inquisition will be repeated. We are nearing a crisis and a conflict in this country over this very question. I am no pessimist; but who can close his eyes to the facts in the case? As surely as the Pope lives, he has his papal eye on America to-day. If he is to be disappointed of his hopes, it must be by a strong correlation of Protestant forces throughout the country, and a live, consecrated form of a pure Christianity everywhere. Protestantism in America must wake up to the dangers that threaten our religious liberties.

It is mere idling to say that the love of liberty is so inwrought into the very fibre of our American people that they will not submit to politico-ecclesiastical domination. When this "association" shall have overrun and overridden our country with those east-off populations of other countries that have been trained to act only as the Romish hierarchy directs, what will we do? Where is the remedy? Would that our people would read. Would that twenty million copies of Dr. Strong's "Our Country" might be distributed!

The Sunday Law.

Notice is published, in some of the city papers, without indication of the source from which it emanates, purporting to be given in accordance with article 48, of the Constitution of Louisiana, "That a bill will be introduced at the next session of the General Assembly to amend and re-enact Act No. 18, approved June 21, 1886, known as the Sunday Law, so as to exempt from its operation cities of over 2,000 inhabitants."

This Sunday Law provides that "all stores, shops, saloons and all places of public business, which are or may be licensed under the law of the State of Louisiana, or under any parochial or municipal law or ordinance, and all plantation stores, are hereby required to be closed at 12 o'clock on Saturday nights, and to remain closed continuously for twenty-four hours, during which time it shall not be lawful * * * to give, trade, barter, exchange or sell any of the stock, or any article of merchandise kept in any such establishment."

Manifestly this law regulates labor, trade and manufacturing in very important particulars, and it is a general law, designed to have effect, and to be operative and obligatory, equally and alike, in all parts of the State.

Recurring to the notice of the proposed bill to amend this law, pretermitting, for the present, any discussion based upon the inconvenience, not to say absurdity, of the contemplated distinction, by which that which may be lawfully done in cities of over 2,000 inhabitants, if done in any part of the State not included within the corporate limits of such cities, would be a misdemeanor, and be punishable by fine and imprisonment; it can be demonstrated, to the satisfaction of any fair-minded man, whether lawyer or layman, that such a bill as that described in the notice can not be lawfully enacted. Considered purely with reference to the organic law of the State, there are insuperable objections to such an enactment. It is positively prohibited by the express terms of the Constitution, and it is, therefore, a legal impossibility.

The provisions of the Constitution, pertinent to this inquiry, are under the heading, "Limitation of Legislature Powers," and they are determinative.

Article 46 declares that "the General Assembly shall not pass any local or special law on the following specified objects." Following this are twenty distinct clauses, in which are enumerated the objects falling under the prohibition, of which clause 11 specifies, "regulating labor, trade, manufacturing or agriculture." Connecting the opening paragraph with clause 11, the article, so far as it relates to the matter in hand, reads thus:

"The General Assembly shall not pass any local or special law regulating labor, trade, manufacturing or agriculture." This plainly means that the General Assembly has no power, is positively forbidden, to regulate labor, or trade, or manufacturing, by any local or special legislation; and that every law regulating labor, trade, etc., must be general, applicable and operative, equally and alike, in all parts of the State.

Article 47 provides that "the General Assembly shall not indirectly enact special or local laws, by the partial repeal of a general law."

And article 48 declares that "no local or special law shall be passed on any subject not enumerated in article 46, * * * unless notice of the intention * * * shall have been published * * * in the locality where the matter or thing to be affected may be situated."

Construing these three articles together, their extent and meaning are too clear to admit of discussion. Any local or special law on any of the objects enumerated in the several clauses of article 46 is absolutely prohibited; the indirect enactment of any local or special law by the partial repeal of a general law, is absolutely forbidden by article 47; and article 48 prohibits the passing of any local or special law, on any subject falling within legislative power, without the requisite public notice.

It would be difficult to imagine any case more directly in contravention of the Constitution than that stated in the notice in question. If the proposed bill should be enacted, it would be a special local law, regulating labor, trade, etc., which the Constitution has placed beyond the domain of legislative power by article 46; and it would be the indirect enactment of a special local law, by the partial repeal of a general law, which is positively forbidden by article 47.

The Sunday Law is the lawful exercise of legitimate, constitutional legislative power, as the Supreme Court of Louisiana decided in the cases of the State vs. Walker, Merz and others, 39 Annual, 132, and State vs. Fernandez, same volume, 538.

If it be not a wholesome law, it might be repealed, but it can not be emasculated by unconstitutional amendments and enactments. Should the existing law be repealed, the General Assembly would be powerless to pass any law regulating labor, or trade, or manufacturing, or agriculture, to have effect and be operative in certain specified localities only, or which would not be obligatory throughout the entire State.

The members of the General Assembly are not ignorant, and there is no reason to apprehend that they will be unmindful of the positive prohibitions of the Constitution, or that they will either attempt or desire to evade the "limitation of legislative powers."—R. H. Marr, in Times-Democrat.

The aged need the strength and comfort of religion. The hopes of youth have faded and vanished. The thrill of buoyant animal spirits is gone. Weakness and pain have succeeded conscious physical strength and vigor. Visions of future achievements can no longer animate and sustain. Many friends of youth and manhood sleep in death. It needs little argument to show that those who are in such a condition greatly need the faith that enables the aged pilgrim to rest upon a Father's love, and that gladdens the soul with the hope of eternal life. Without the peace of such a hope the aged are left to sink in the shadows of an unbroken despair. No picture is sadder than that of the aged who have wasted life in selfish pursuits, and are sinking into the grave in stolid indifference respecting their immortal fate.—Christian Guardian.

FRIENDS.

BY R. L. STEVENSON.

It's all very well for an auld youth,
An' it brooks wi' nae denial
That the dearest friends are the auldest friends,
And the young are just on trial.

There's a rival build wi' young an' auld,
And it's fell in that has pereft me'
For the surest friends are the auldest friends,
And the maist o' mine be le I me.

There are kind hearts still for friends to sit,
And beds to take and break them;
But the nearest friends are the auldest friends,
And the grave's the place to seek them.

JESUS CRUCIFIED.

Matthew xxvii, 33-50.

GOLDEN TEXT.—He humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross.—Phil. ii. 8.

TIME.—A. D. 30, Friday, April 7, 9 A. M. to 3 P. M.

PLACE.—Golgotha, or Calvary, outside the walls of Jerusalem.

INTRODUCTION.

The most casual reader of the New Testament can hardly fail to notice the severe simplicity of the evangelical narratives. They could not be more absolutely colorless if they were official reports by Pilate or his subordinates. There is not a single epithet employed to express or excite either indignation against the crucifiers or reverence or compassion for the Crucified. There is no attempt to deduce any doctrinal conclusion. Simply the facts are stated. Their singular impartiality is of itself a remarkable testimony to their divine inspiration; for the story of the cross has acquired its power in part from the marvelous self-restraint of the historians. They have placed before the world the scene as they saw it; each new generation sees through a clear and colorless atmosphere the Crucified One undraped with the rhetoric of telling: his death is eloquent because the story is told without eloquence: and the latest ages can say, "Not only our ears have heard, but our eyes have seen the glory of the suffering Lord."

33. When they were come unto a place called Golgotha—Calvary. (Luke.) The name probably arose from the appearance of the place—an elevation resembling a skull. The locality is disputed. It was certainly outside the city walls, but their position at that time is uncertain. The traditional site, near the Church of the Holy Sepulcher, is the northwest part of the city, may have been outside the walls of Herod's and so the true site.

34. Gave him vinegar ... mingled with gall—In Mark xv. 23, "wine mingled with myrrh." The animal secretion known as "gall" is clearly out of the question, and the meaning of the word is determined by its use in the Greek version of the Old Testament, where it stands for the "wormwood" of Proverbs v. 4, for the poisonous herb joined with "wormwood" in Deuteronomy xxix. 18. It was clearly something at once nauseous and narcotic, given by the merciful to dull the pain of execution, and mixed with the sour wine of the country and with myrrh to make it drinkable. It may have been hemlock or mandragora, or even poppy-juice, but there are no data for deciding. Tasted ... would not drink—The "tasting" implied a recognition of the kindly purpose of the act, but a recognition only. He did not choose to be compelled. He wished to be in the full possession of his sensibility and self-consciousness.

35. And they crucified him—Crucifixion was used as a punishment by Greeians, Romans, Egyptians and other nations, but not by the Jews. Its infliction by the Romans was a badge of Israel's servitude To hang even a corpse upon a tree was accounted among them the greatest indignity. (Deuteronomy xxi. 22, 23.) The lingering death of the cross rendered crucifixion eminent in cruelty even in that cruel age. It was reserved by the Romans for slaves and foreigners. The convict was fastened to the cross, sometimes as it lay upon the ground, sometimes after its erection. In the former case the body was terribly wrenched when the cross was raised and dropped into its place; the concussion often dislocated the limbs. To fasten the sufferer to the cross, his hands were nailed to the cross-piece; the feet were sometimes bound, sometimes nailed. That the latter course was adopted in the case of Christ is indicated, though not demonstrated, by Luke xxiv. 39, 40. The feet were probably nailed separately, not, as represented in most art, and purely for artistic reasons, with one foot lying over the other and both transfixed with one nail. Lest the hands and feet should not bear the strain, a little wooden pin projected just below the thigh, which afforded the body a partial though painful support. The crucified person was not raised high in air; his feet were but a little above the ground. In this respect the common art representations are not true to the facts. A death by crucifixion seems to include all that pain and death can have of horrible and ghastly—dizziness, cramp, thirst, starvation, sleeplessness, traumatic fever, tetanus, publicity of shame, long continuance of torment, horror of anticipation, mortification of untended wounds—all intensified just up to the point at which they can be endured at all, but all stopping just short of the point which would give to the sufferer the relief of unconsciousness. To all the physical torture we must, in this case, add the result of these upon a soul sensitive and capable of suffering beyond all human comparison; the effect of ingratitude, of loneliness, of hands from those who represented his own chosen people, and, above all, his state of soul as he consciously bore the sins of the world. Parted his garments, casting lots—The clothes of the victims always fell as perquisites to the men who had to perform so weary and disagreeable an office. Little dreaming how exactly they were fulfilling the mystic intimations of olden Jewish prophecy, they proceeded, therefore, to divide between them the garments of Jesus. The tallith they tore into four parts, probably ripping it down the seams; but the cetoneth, or under garment, was formed of one continuous woven texture, and to tear would have been to spoil it; they, therefore, contented themselves with letting it become the property of any one of the four to whom it should fall by lot. The dice were ready in their pockets, and one of their brazen helmets would serve to throw them. No wonder that both Matthew and John, looking back on the scene, were struck by the fact that it had been written ages before in Psalm xxii, which the Jews of that day, as well as Christians, rightly believed to refer to the Messiah.

36, 37. Sitting down they watched him there—This was usual, to prevent the friends taking crucified persons down. There were four soldiers, a centurion and three others. Set up over his head his accusation—It was the Roman custom to place on the cross over the criminal's head a titulus, or placard, stating the crime for which he suffered. St. John records Pilate's refusal to alter the inscription, and mentions that the title was written in Hebrew and Greek and Latin. This is Jesus, the King of the Jews—The inscription is given with slight variations by the four evangelists. This variation points to the independence of the different gospels, and also indicates that a real, though not a verbal, accuracy should be looked for in the records of the evangelists.

38. Two thieves crucified with him ... right ... left—His position between the two was probably owing to the malice of the priests; though the soldiers may have done it in mockery of his kingly claims.

39, 40. They that passed by reviled him—Literally, "blasphemed." They reviled; but it was in this case blasphemy. The words bring before us the picture of a lounging crowd, strolling from one cross to the other, and mocking the central Sufferer of the three. Wagging their heads—Some would move their heads in one way, and some in another, some would make, perhaps, a profound salaam, as before a sovereign Others might simply give a scornful little jerk to one side, as they hastily passed by. Thou that destroyest the temple ... save thyself—A perversion of John ii, 19, 21. Jesus had thus foretold his own death and resurrection, but they maliciously represented him as threatening the destruction of the temple. If thou be the Son of God, come down from the cross—The people who had shouted, but a day or two ago, "Hosanna to the Son of David," now plainly see their mistake. If this man were divine, the Messiah, the Son of God, he would certainly never have been caught and crucified. So the chief priests are after all right, and this man is an impostor. The fact that he is crucified is proof that he ought to be crucified. So are men worshipers of success.

41, 42. Chief priests ... scribes and elders—They were not ashamed to disgrace their grey-haired dignity and lofty reputation by adding their heartless reproaches to those of the evil few. He saved others; himself he can not save—This may be ironical, or it is a recognition of his miracles of mercy, to taunt him with a supposed loss of power just when he needed it most for himself. His very mercy is used in mockery. If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down ... and we will believe—No, they would not; for those who resisted the evidence from the resurrection of Lazarus, and from his own resurrection, were beyond the reach of any amount of merely external evidence.

43, 44. He trusted in God; let him deliver him now—A striking illustration of the false idea of special Providence. Many still think that he who seems to be deserted by God can not be a son in whom he is well pleased, and that God may always be expected to interfere immediately to save his children from unjust suffering Thieves also ... cast the same in his teeth—Luke alone tells of the penitence of one. (See Luke xxiii; 39-43.) Both at first reviled him, but one was converted during the three hours they hung side by side. "Doubtless the cross aided his penitence. On the soft couch conversion is rare."

45. From the sixth hour—Noon. Darkness—This was no eclipse of the sun, for it was full moon at the time, nor any partial obscuration of the sun such as sometimes takes place before an earthquake, for it is clear that no earthquake, in the ordinary sense of the word, is here intended. It was a miraculous occurrence, designed to exhibit the amazement of nature and of the God of nature at the wickedness of the crucifixion of him who is the Light of the world and the Sun of righteousness. Over all the land—Probably only the whole land of Judea, the main point being the fact in Jerusalem. But some refer it to the whole world—that is, where it was day, especially as the heathen notices of what is supposed to be the same event justify an extension beyond Judea. Unto the ninth hour—Three P. M. As the darkness commenced at the sixth hour, the second of the Jewish hours of prayer, so it continued until the ninth hour, the hour of evening sacrifice, increasing probably in depth, and reaching its deepest gloom at the moment of this mysterious cry, when the flame of the one great "Evening Sacrifice" was burning fiercest.

46. About the ninth hour ... Eli, Eli, etc. Eli is the Hebrew form. In Mark xv, 34, the Aramaic words are preserve exactly as they were pronounced by Jesus. The repetition, "My God! my God!" gives a deeply pathetic force It is an expression of utter loneliness and desolation, the depth of which it is not for man to fathom. The twenty-second Psalm, from which this cry is taken, had already been cited from (verse 8) in mockery by the rulers (verse 43), whose conduct is described in the Psalm. (Verse 7.) The casting lots for his garments (verse 35) is a fulfilment of verse 18. There are so many other points of agreement that the Psalm has been deemed a direct and exclusive prophecy of Christ's passion. My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me—"Father" was the cry in the first prayer which he uttered on the cross, for matters had not then come to their worst; "Father" was the cry of his last prayer, for matters had then passed their worst. But at this crisis of his sufferings "Father" does not issue from his lips, for the light of a Father's countenance was then mysteriously eclipsed. ... As for the cry itself, it will never be fully comprehended. We must take care not to ascribe all his sufferings to bodily pain, however cruel. His soul was in immediate contact with the prospect of death, the wages of sin, which he had taken on him, but never committed, and the conflict at Gethsemane was renewed.

47, 48. Some ... said, This man calleth for Elias—This was not said by the Roman soldiers, who could know nothing of Elias; nor was it a misunderstanding of the Jewish spectators, who must have well understood the import of Eli; nor again was it said in any apprehension, from the supernatural darkness, that Elias might really come; but it was replied in intended mockery, as "the contemptuous "this man"—"this one among the three" clearly indicates. One of them ran and took a sponge This was occasioned by our Lord's cry, "I thirst:" but all occurred in quick succession. Filled it with vinegar This was the sour wine used by the soldiers; not mixed with myrrh, as in the case of the stupefying draught Jesus had refused before crucifixion. (Verse 34.) Put it on a reed—The "reed" is described by John as the hyssop, by many scholars thought to be the caper-plant (Arabic, hyssup), which grows in dry and rocky places, and on walls, and is capable of producing a stick three or four feet in length. Gave him to drink—He drank (John xix. 30), and this reception of refreshment from one who still mocked is a token that his love vanquishes the world's hate

49. Rest said, Let be—According to Mark, the man himself says this: giving him the vinegar, in mingled pity and contempt, he probably responded in the same mocking tone to the jest of the others. The latter say: Wait, do not thus sustain him; for he is expecting Elijah to help him." The one who offers it responds: This will sustain him until Elijah comes. It was the last word of cruel mockery.

50. Jesus ... cried again with a loud voice—Emitting a great voice, not a mere cry, but an articulate, intelligible utterance, the words of which have been preserved by John (xix. 30) and Luke (xxiii. 46), while neither Mark nor Matthew record any of our Lord's last sayings, after the citation from the twenty-second Psalm. This mighty voice of the expiring Redeemer was nothing else but the exultant spirit of the dying victor, perceiving the fruit of his travail just about to be embraced, and nerving the organs of utterance to an ecstatic expression of its sublime feelings, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit!" Yes, the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. His soul has emerged from its mysterious horrors: "My God" is heard no more, but in unclouded light he yields sublimely into his Father's hands the infinitely precious spirit. Yielded up the ghost—All four evangelists agree in using this, or some like expression, instead of the simpler form, "He died." It is as though they dwelt on the act as, in some sense, voluntary, and connected it with the words in which he had commended his spirit to the Father. (Luke xxiii, 46.)

District Conference.

MR. EDITOR: The eighteenth session of the Columbus District Conference, of North Mississippi Conference, was held in the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Ackerman, Miss., May 10-13.

We had no Bishop with us, but our new presiding elder, Rev. W. T. J. Sullivan, D. D., presided with ease, grace and dignity. All the pastors were present, save two who were detained by sickness. An unusually large number of lay delegates were in attendance. Rev. W. B. Murrah, vice-president of Whitworth Female College, and Rev. T. J. Newell, A. M., president Grenada Collegiate Institute, looked in upon us and delivered timely addresses on Christian education, and represented to the Conference their respective schools. Revs. T. A. S. Adams, D. D., D. M. Cogdell, A. Langley and J. W. Malone, of the Winona district, were present, and added much to the pleasure and profit of the Conference. The Conference ordered that pastors report by topics; so reports were heard successively on spiritual interests of the church, financial condition, education, church literature, Sunday-schools and missions. The Conference took its time, and did its work well. The discussions suggested by the reports were interesting and will, no doubt, yield great profit to the church. The reports on the different interests of the church indicated progress along some lines, and our shortcomings along other lines were so plainly revealed that every pastor and layman went away determined to do more work, and better work, for the Master. The sermons, by Bros. T. B. and J. W. Malone, J. W. Luter, Q. A. Oates, T. A. S. Adams, W. C. Harris, B. F. Phillip and W. T. J. Sullivan, were strong presentations of the truths of the gospel. The sermon of Dr. Adams, on "Faith and Character of Moses," and the dedicatory sermon of Dr. Sullivan, on the "Uses and Benefits of Houses of Worship," will be long remembered. More than one-half of a day was given to church literature.

From the report of the Committee on Church Literature I make the following extract: "We note with pain that our Conference organ—the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of clear and historic character, and which has stood for more than a third of a century as a bulwark against the strong forces of evil in the great Southwest—is not receiving the support which it merits and our interests demand." The following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, That the pastors and laymen of this District Conference go earnestly to work to double the subscription of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE within our bounds.

The District Conference was organized into a Ministerial Educational Aid Society, with the view of raising, at least, two hundred dollars before the ensuing Annual Conference to aid in the education of young preachers of the district. Its president, W. T. J. Sullivan; secretary, T. Cameron, and treasurer, J. J. Yates, of Starkville, were constituted an Executive Board.

Though a few of the pastors had deferred the observance of the week of self-denial and prayer until the summer, and others had only taken collections at some of their churches, yet three hundred and eighty-one dollars were reported as having been forwarded to the Treasurer at Nashville.

G. Y. Woodward, H. W. Foote, J. E. Bridges and L. A. Fort were elected delegates to the Annual Conference, and J. D. Fulcher and J. J. Yates, alternates.

Some of the brethren leaving before the close of the Conference caused the adoption of the following resolution:

Resolved, That, as a District Conference, we earnestly request the members of the District Conference, both clerical and lay, to make their arrangements, if possible, hereafter to remain through the Sabbath of the Conference.

The people of Ackerman gave us a cordial welcome, and dispensed to us a generous hospitality. The congregations were large, and much interest was manifested in the preaching of the gospel and in the work of the Conference. Rev. W. T. Barnett, the indefatigable pastor, and his people are rejoicing over their new church, which was dedicated to the worship of God at the eleven o'clock service on Sunday.

Louisville was selected as the place for holding the next District Conference.

The New Revision of the Bible.

MR. EDITOR: As soon as I ascertained that the Revised Version of the Bible was in book form, I procured a copy which I read carefully through three times in quick succession, and, while I do not see the necessity of some verbal changes that are made, I find many have been made that give us a better understanding of the meaning of the sacred text. We never owned or read a Bible in our times that was not "translated out of the original tongues, and with the former translations diligently compared and revised," and when we compare our late Authorized Version with all former translations and revisions, we can but see the great advantages of the later versions over their predecessors. Some of the first translations into our vernacular were barely readable and not easily comprehended. In our last Revised Version I do not see the shadow of a change in any doctrine, precept, promise or threatening. It is precisely the same Bible we have always had in regard to these unchangeable truths, but the verbiage in the late revision in numerous places has been changed greatly to our advantage. We have been running to commentaries all our lives to get a better understanding of difficult texts than we could obtain from any authorized translation, and often found nothing but increased perplexity in the conflicting opinions of commentators, whereas the displacement of meaningless and misleading words, and the substitution of words expressing the sense of the inspired writer, remove the difficulty at once. I acknowledge myself indebted to the Revised Version for a more satisfactory understanding of numerous passages of Scripture than I ever had before, and if I had an edition of a larger type suitable to the present dimness of my sight, I would use it in my daily Bible reading the balance of my earthly life. Our late revisionists have left out many obsolete, uncouth, inelegant and even indelicate words, and have substituted them by words equally, and in many instances more, expressive of the true sense of the text, and far more elegant and euphonious both to the reader and hearer.

I have the greatest confidence in and reverence for the eight or ten copies of the King James translation of 1611, now in my possession, which I expect to keep lying about me to the end of life. They have guided me thus far on my journey heavenward. I have one Bible that has been in the Mississippi Conference about seventy years: first as the property of Rev. Armstrong J. Blackburn, then of Rev. Meredeth Reneau, who presented it to me late in 1824. It has traveled with me nearly all over Mississippi and considerable portions of Louisiana and Alabama, and is still in fair condition with its buckskin cover. I have so many pleasing reminiscenses connected with my old John Haggerty Bible, printed in 1812, that money could not buy it from me. But still I am in favor of the new revision. I would recommend the preachers especially to keep a copy of it on hand. If it were admissible in a newspaper article, I could refer them to many passages rendered easier of apprehension in the Revised Version. J. G. JONES.

From the Work.

CLINTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: As I pen you these lines, my heart overflows with joy. Our church has been visited with showers of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

The Woodville District Conference was held in Clinton, and was indeed a blessing to our town. Bishop Keener was with us in the power of the Spirit. He presided and preached to the satisfaction and profit of all. He will never be forgotten by us. The District Conference was a perfect success. It was well attended. Every charge was represented. Laymen and preachers were in good spirits. Upon the whole, the Conference was the fullest, richest and best I have ever attended. After the adjournment of Conference, we continued the meeting, which was attended with great success. The church was quickened into great earnestness and anxiety for the conversion of sinners. We had some as bright conversions as I ever saw anywhere. Thirty-three united with the Methodist Church—the most of these claimed the blessing. Although the meeting has closed, the good work goes on. We are praying for a hundred conversions this year. Bro. J. W. McLaurin, F. M. Keen, N. J. Roberts, N. B. Norwood, and our beloved presiding elder, J. A. Ellis, assisted us in the meeting. They all did valuable service. We hope to send you several new subscribers soon.

"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow;
Praise him all creatures here below;
Praise him above, ye heavenly host;
Praise Father, Son and Holy Ghost."

Your brother,

L. S. JONES.

SOUTH BOSSIER.

MR. EDITOR: At our late Conference session Bishop Key and his cabinet cut off four appointments in this circuit, and formed a new charge—"Valley circuit"—leaving us with Haughton, Fillmore, Doyline, Bossier Point and Benton. Our parsonage at Bellevue was included in the other circuit, leaving us with no parsonage. Our people have rented us a home at Haughton, a central point, at which place we expect to build a parsonage this year. This is my fourth year in this charge, and, though I can not remain another year to enjoy the contemplated cottage, I want to leave my successor with a comfortable home.

Our circuit has the advantage of two railroads—the Vicksburg, Shreveport and Pacific, and a new road running from Shreveport to Lewisville, Ark., on which road we have opened up an appointment at Shady Grove, midway between Shreveport and Benton, a very promising field on Red river.

South Bossier is now well arranged and promises to be, in the near future, a fine appointment—good enough for a D. D. And I hope some one of you will begin to look up your old saddle-bags, and talk to the Bishop about it at next Conference. But how would it look to swop a circuit rider for a D. D.? But our people will not care much for looks in such case.

We have some glorious times A good prayer meeting last night at Haughton. I have a few good brethren at this place that pray in the church—Bros. Bryan McKinney, Britt, Williams and Dr. Heard. But I reckon you think it strange they don't all take the ADVOCATE—well, so do I. We will have a prayer meeting at Doyline to-night. We are getting ready for the District Conference at Haughton, yet to be appointed. It would do any of our preachers good to preach to some of our congregations Don't it do a preacher good to preach to an audience when the open their hearts and drink it in—yes, when the Holy Ghost shows ers right down upon the preacher's soul and breaks to him the bread of life that he may hand it out to his congregation! My soul gets happy while I write.

The editor of this ADVOCATE is hereby invited to attend our District Conference.

EAST FELICIANA CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: We came to this work, by the appointment of Bishop Keener, at the last session of our Conference. The people of this circuit have received their preacher in the spirit of the gospel. I have made the rounds, and, after dwelling among them for four months, I can say I have never served a more generous people They all seem to appreciate the preacher, whoever he may be.

The Board of Stewards made a very liberal assessment for their preacher. They are building a parsonage at Oak Grove, one of our appointments, which we expect soon to occupy.

I have been meeting my appointments, coming from my home in Amite county, Miss., until April 1, when it was thought best for me to move into a house selected for us, near one of our churches, viz: Clear Creek, and give the contractor more time to finish the parsonage; so, on April 3, just after five P. M., with wife and little ones, we drove up to the parsonage. We found waiting eight or ten of the good ladies and some of the brethren, to give us a hearty welcome and come and live in their midst each one having brought with them something that was necessary to commence housekeeping with—ham, coffee, flour, sugar, lard, honey, meal, rice, corn for the crib for my horse, and a great many things too numerous to mention. As we looked upon their bright and cheerful faces and listened to their words of welcome, our hearts overflowed with gratitude to our God for permitting us to serve so kind and appreciative a people. We feel disposed to thank God and take courage. Pray for us.

WAYNESBORO, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Please allow me space in the ADVOCATE for a brief report of affairs on this charge. Impartially considered it may be said to be in a prosperous condition. Every department of church work is moving well. Congregations very large and appreciative. The Word is preached with "unction," and the people receive it gladly. Sunday-schools are live and highly interesting. Prayer meetings are well attended, and prove a source of strength to the church. Class meetings of the old type are held occasionally, which serve as a "lie trimmer," thereby increasing the capacity to give light and "shine."

There are many evidences of growth in grace and in knowledge. The people are cheerful, enterprising and faithful. They are highly appreciative, sympathizing and generous. This has been fully demonstrated by the unremitting kindness and sympathy shown the pastor's family during the long, dark days and months of their sad affliction. The shadow of the dark cloud still hovers over the parsonage yet, amid the awful cloud, sometimes see light, and just beneath is seen the beautiful "bow." "We kiss the rod, and pass under."

The week of prayer and self-denial was faithfully observed on this charge, at both Waynesboro and State Line. Interesting and profitable services were held each night during the week. Eternity alone will reveal the amount of good accomplished. The financial result will reach about thirty dollars, which is the least part of the blessings to be reaped. Yours truly,

E. F. EDGAR.

POPLARVILLE CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I was read out to this appointment at the last session of our Conference. I came immediately to the work, found myself among entire strangers, but soon found myself surrounded by friends. We met the usual hearty greeting with which our preachers are received, and soon came the grateful soundings. We have a pleasant work. It is made up of three principal appointments—Poplarville, Lumberton and Purvis, towns on the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad—and intervening stations. We are encouraged by large and attentive congregations, prayer meetings well attended, and pastoral visits seemingly appreciated. There has been several accessions to the church. We are in the midst of an interesting meeting, at this time, at Lumberton. Fifteen of twenty penitents at the altar last night. We hope for much good to be accomplished before the meeting ends. Our little church here has been finished and painted recently; also a sweet-toned organ placed in it. The enterprising mill-men, Camp & Henton Bros., contributed largely to building and furnishing our beautiful little church here. This is a village of about 500 people, and is as full of push and stir as a town can be. Messrs. Camp and Hentons are a valuable acquisition to this section, and would be anywhere. They are a blessing to our church here.

J. D. HAYS.

IUKA, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Fifty-five dollars, self-denial offerings from Iuka station, Corinth district, North Mississippi Conference. The receipt of the treasurer is in hand. Yours in Christ,

D. L. COGDELL, P. C.

Biographical.

REV. PRESTON COOPER.

BY REV. E. G. COOK.

This Methodist preacher had considerable celebrity about forty years ago; based almost exclusively upon pulpit oratory. Oratory is the most evanescent of all the products of great men. Other creations of genius remain or may be reproduced. Discoveries, inventions and literary productions continue, and we readily associate the name of some one with them, as Morse with telegraphy, Scott with his novels, Milton with his poetry and Shakespeare with his plays; but oratory comes and is gone. However correctly a sermon or speech may be published, it can not be read mentally or recited audibly as it was delivered by the speaker. Many hear and report, but the orator's name and fame are traditional ever after, as Maffit, Bascom, Prentiss, Cooper, and others.

The writer joined the church under Preston Cooper, was often with him and had as much intimacy with him as he would allow to anyone. He avowed his purpose to admit no intimacy which would become pleasant companionship, then warm attachment. He gave as a reason that he had voluntarily put himself at the control of others who could change him from one place to another annually and must do so every two years; then parting would be more painful as attachments were more ardent. This may have been a strange conclusion, but he acted it out. He was not social nor congenial; but his friends respected him so much that he was expected to sit apart in company or retire and read or rather study some book. He seldom read newspapers, not even the Advocates. His name will not be found often in attendance upon Conferences, nor on committees of any kind, though acknowledged to be competent for any Conference work. He had no thought, or, at least, expressed none as to appointments, and gave no trouble to those whose duty it was to see as to his compensation.

His specialty was elocution, as it included articulation, emphasis and gestures, always having in view success as a teacher of revealed truth, intending spiritual results. The writer has stood, at his request, to look upon his gesticulation and hear his pronunciation of sentences or words, and at times repeating the letters of the alphabet as a musician his notes of the gamut.

On one occasion this preacher left his charge for two months, engaging the Rev. Th. Ford to supply his pulpit. When he returned his members almost complained that he did not consult them, and his stewards thought he did wrong in not asking money for himself and family during his absence. After a few months he told the writer confidentially that he had visited Philadelphia to attend the lectures of a professor of elocution, at that time of some note, having classes of preachers, lawyers and play actors. He remarked, in substance, that he did not keep secrets usually, but his congregation might not place the right construction upon the preacher leaving his work to become a pupil in a school for oratory. His conscience was clear, however, on the subject: he required rest, and he improved his absence in a mode, gratifying, improving as well as healthful. He had the glory of God before him, and the greatest efficiency as a preacher was intended.

Poets are said "to be born, not made," and this may be true of orators as well; but in this case the orator was greatly artificial, yet so as to be more natural than he would have been without so much care, attention and study. The result was that at the time of which I write, he was one of the most successful preachers of the Mississippi Conference. Not popular—and yet, I may say, he was popular—much spoken of. Admired by some; by others, disliked. By tone, gesture and facial expression he could depict bad men so plainly that many thought he was personal. He had but little controversy with other churches, but with the masses, whose professed infidelity was but a cloak for sin, he was at variance continually. His preaching, I think, was that of force and incisive; his aim exclusively to convince, convict and bring the hearer in readiness to be converted. He was self-possessed to an extent not the most pleasant to those accustomed to the fluency of some of our best preachers; at the same time he had no little animation, emotion and even passion, but he did not "tear a passion to tatters."

He was much talked about: much that was said would be interesting, and some remarkable, so much so as to cause doubts as to the facts about his dreams and the discovery of the well which bears his name and other strange incidents and co-incidents.

HAZLEHURST, Mississippi.

To Preach Well.

Waiving the prerequisites of a sound conversion and a divine call to the work, which are indispensable, a man must know something before he can tell it; yet familiarity with language, theology, psychology, history, sacred and profane, and homiletics will not alone make him a success. We do not undervalue study; every preacher should be a student. Paul says: "Study to show thyself approved unto God," etc. We do not undervalue acquirements—letters. "Life without letters is dead." But some of the driest and poorest preaching we have ever heard was by men who had completed a university course, and were honored with "D. D.," "LL.D."

The late A. J. Baird, D. D., of Nashville, Tenn., said when he felt it his duty to enter the ministry, he thought knowledge the chief qualification. "Stuff the head," was his idea, and accordingly, attended college six long years, came out with his diplomas, and was soon called to the pastorate, but ascertained by experience, in a short time, that he could not preach. Words flowed apace. His analysis, he flattered himself, was faultless, and his exegesis sound; but the preaching did not draw, Christians were not fed, were not satisfied, and he was conscious within himself of his weakness and utter inefficiency. What could be the matter? He next devoted especial attention to the study of elocution, thinking there must be something in the act of telling what a man knew, and derived much benefit from it. The ear, the fancy especially, was pleased. Compliments not a few were passed upon his public efforts; but the spiritual results were very meagre, and it was as clear as the noon-day sun to himself and his spiritual members that something was yet wanting to render him a successful minister of the gospel of Christ. The great, honest man was troubled beyond measure, and, as a last resort, resolved to take the whole matter to God, and wrestle with him until the problem was solved. Losing sight of human learning and trusting the "Lo! I am with you," he soon realized the assurance of the divine approval, and, with implicit faith in God, he was for more than a quarter of a century the well-known, popular pastor of the first C. P. Church, Nashville, Tenn. His last words were, "I have always believed religion was true, and now I know it." Nothing short of the power of God will impress. Doubtless the burning bush, with its curling smoke and roaring flame, which so readily attracted the attention of Moses, and inspired him with awe, was not always impressive. At any other time it failed to attract any attention whatever, but with the hand of Jehovah upon it, it was a great sight.

Our most talented ministers are sometimes powerless when the hour of duty arrives. I have read somewhere that Bishop Paine went some years ago to preside over a Conference in Texas. He was in his usual health, and presided with entire satisfaction, finishing up the business on Saturday. The Sabbath dawned gloriously, and at an early hour crowds of curious and anxious men and women were seen moving forward determined to hear the Bishop preach; and at this hour the Bishop was pleading for some one to fill his place. The preachers, however, were like the people, and each asked to be excused. The Bishop declared that he was blank, and it would be folly to attempt it. The preachers said he must preach, and that it was eleven o'clock. "Well," said he, "it does seem to me each word will be like swallowing a grub worm." He knelt in silent prayer, groaning heavily. He remained some minutes pleading as one begging for his life. When he arose a change was perceptible. The cloud was gone. His manly countenance was beaming. He announced his text, and, says the writer, "never before or since did I hear such preaching. The immense audience waved and surged as a forest in a mighty wind. Sinners fell over like dead men, and Christians shouted aloud, and the grand old man sat down in a storm." Without the divine anointing the preacher was powerless. How true the words: "Without me ye can do nothing."

Old John Knox prayed all night long, crying: "O God, give me Scotland or I die!" Result: Scotland belongs to John Knox to-day.

A number of young ministers, we are told, once asked James A. Duncan, of Va., for the secret of his power, and, instead of answering directly, he asked them severally: "Have you ever spent twenty-four consecutive hours in prayer?" Each answered, No, and left satisfied as to the secret.

TRADESMEN IN JAPAN.—The boys seen in nearly all the places of skilled labor suggest what is the fact, that apprentices begin to learn their trades usually much earlier than in our country, so that when majority is attained the mastery of the crafts is thorough. Another striking feature of the Japanese system is that of heredity. Skill runs in family lines. Not a few of the famous artisans of the present decade are descendents in the ninth, tenth and seven twentieth generations of the founder of the establishment. I once employed a carpenter in Fukui, who was proud of his ancestry of wood-workers through twenty-seven generations; and the temple records show such boasting to be true, though often adoption interrupts the actual blood line. At a paper-maker's establishment in Awotabi, in Echizen, I dined with the proprietor, whose fathers first established the industry a millennium ago, the national history showing also that the Coreans before the ninth century of our era visited the place.—Wm. Elliot Griffis.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame." —Civil Service Gazette.

Paul's famous declaration to the Galatians, "For I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus," has been thus translated in the Revised Version, "For I bear branded on my body the marks of Jesus."

Rev. Dr. J. H. Vincent, of Rock River Conference, and Rev. J. W. Fitzgerald, of New Jersey Conference, were elected Bishops by the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, held in New York City, May 22.

The New York correspondent of the Watchman, the Baptist organ of Boston, has this to say of the Methodists:

We Baptists can learn much from our Methodist brethren. They have no more average wealth than we, no more intellectual strength than we, no more piety; and yet they are going far beyond us in number of members, in church-building and the other elements of church life. These are facts which we may as well face. They are doing far more than we in building up the kingdom of Christ. Why have we been outstripped by them? Is it not that their affairs are managed with a practical sagacity, a sanctified "gumption" which is too often lacking in Baptist operations?

The tenth annual session of the Woman's Board of Missions was recently held in Nashville, and the report published in the Nashville Christian Advocate reveals some interesting and encouraging facts. There is now a membership of 56,783. Eight missionaries were sent out during the past year. The foreign work is represented by 22 missionaries, 39 teachers and assistants, 7 boarding-schools, 19 day-schools, 871 pupils, 1 hospital, and 1 Bible woman. Collected last year, $69,729; appropriations for the present year, $54,687; cash in bank, $36,752; collected during week of prayer, $6,813. The Woman's Missionary Advocate has reached a circulation of 12,000. The property of the Board is valued at $153,500. Truly, this is good work, and "therein do we rejoice."

In the Louisiana Legislature, the other day, Mr. Soniat, of Orleans, gave notice that he would introduce a bill to authorize city councils of incorporated municipal corporations throughout this State to specify what stores, shops and groceries, saloons and all places of amusements may be open on Sunday and permitting all trading, bartering and selling on Sundays by the proprietors or employees of such establishments. And to repeal Act No. 18 of General Assembly of the State of Louisiana, approved June 21, 1886, in so far only as it affects incorporated municipal corporations in this State, and also to repeal all laws or parts of laws inconsistent therein. This bill will be backed by all the power of the saloons. Their money will carry it through, if possible. It becomes every order-loving and law-abiding citizen of the State to resist this iniquitous measure. This new Legislature—from which we have a right to expect legislation which looks to the good of the whole people in preference to that of the vampires who are sucking the life-blood from the people—will surely not call down upon itself the execrations of this whole land by passing such a bill as Mr. Soniat intends to introduce. Let the friends of the Sunday Law exercise a sleepless vigilance and present a united front.

Compassion on the Multitudes.

There have been men who have swayed the multitudes by their eloquence as the strong wind sways the trees of the forest. How far the influence of a great audience extends in arousing eloquence in the orator we can not exactly tell. That there is a large power flowing from a great crowd toward him who stands up to address it, all must acknowledge. But we are not accustomed to speak of the audience "moving" the orator. The almost invariable rule is to look at and speak of the power the orator exerts over his audience. In the case of our Lord the sacred writers speak frequently of the power his audiences exerted upon him. No one ever had such crowds attending his ministry as Jesus. On several occasions, we read of four thousand and five thousand men, besides women and children, listening to his words and partaking of the bounty of his blessed hands. Such audiences could hardly be less than twenty thousand in number. On one occasion Galilee and Judea and Jerusalem and Idumea and beyond Jordan and Tyre and Sidon poured their thousands out to hear him. No one ever attracted the crowds as Jesus did. So exceptional was this feature of his ministry that the alarmed Pharisees exclaimed in despair: "Perceive ye how ye prevail nothing? behold, the world is gone after him."

As no one ever attracted such audiences and held them so completely in his command as did Jesus, so no speaker was ever so acted upon and stirred by his audiences as Jesus was. No doubt, every public speaker is affected in some measure by his audience, and the numbers making up the audience constitute a very large factor in that influence. The larger the crowd, the larger the effect, is the general rule. The influence that audiences exert on ordinary speakers is generally very different from that which Christ's audiences exerted upon him. A speaker coming before a great audience is moved to exert himself to deliver an address worthy of the occasion and of the crowd, and there is, in most cases, an emotion of selfish ambition that the hearers may go away well pleased with the performance. There are very few public speakers who ever get rid of that ambition, and many not only do not get rid of it, but it increases in them until they are consumed by a hunger and thirst for applause. A great audience touched the heart of Jesus at its lowest depths, and stirred fountains of feeling which ordinary men rarely experience. When he sat on the mountain-side, or in the little boat on the sea, or stood in the doorway at eventide, and looked over the immense crowds that attended his ministry, all the tender sympathies of his great and loving nature welled up and flowed out toward them in a voice of gentle sweetness and words of genuine compassion. He saw in his hearers what no other speaker can see. "He knew what was in man." In those "wonderful seas of upturned faces" he could trace every "line of care," every lineament of anguish, every expression of pain, every gleam of joy, every scowl of hate, every flash of anger to its true source. He knew all the causes of suffering, and all the hidden springs of happiness; and the larger the crowd, the greater must have been the effect upon his sympathizing spirit. But the great fact which stirred the lower deeps of his great nature was, that he saw these immense audiences "as sheep without a shepherd." The language of St. Matthew is most expressive: "But when he saw the multitudes, he was moved with compassion on them, because they fainted, and were scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd."

A great audience, composed of men and women whose lives were full of sin and toil, whose hearts were full of sadness and care, who had spiritual necessities to be administered unto, who had spiritual aspirations to be satisfied, and who were wandering about as lost sheep without guides, affected the heart of the Son of man as no other sight affected it. "He was moved with compassion." Their wants and woes, out of which the possibilities of their spiritual natures projected themselves before his mind, stirred his great nature to sympathy with them. Jesus was a man of the people because he knew the needs of the people, and because he knew their needs he was moved with compassion toward them. He wept with them, and he wept over them; and his benevolence was the outcome of his compassion. His sympathy for the multitudes was the attraction which brought them to his ministry. Jesus "reached the masses" in his ministry, and he did so because he "was moved with compassion toward them." The same is true of the gospel ministry to-day. The ministry which exhibits this divine compassion for men, and which nurtures that compassion into a large expression of benevolence, will reach the multitudes. This is why the gospel is the most potent force that moves among men to-day. It is Heaven's expression of sympathy for sinful man. It is drawing men within its charmed circle of compassion.

Our City Churches.

There are but few people who know, and still fewer who appreciate, the difficulties which our church has to encounter in its operations in this city of New Orleans. That there are "great and effectual doors" open to us no one doubts, but that there are also "many adversaries" very few seem to see. We believe that only the men who have labored here can apprehend the true state of the case. At the same time, these are the men who rejoice in the present attitude of our church and are most hopeful of the future. They have seen our church encounter and overcome many hard difficulties in the past, and they see that her present position is more commanding than ever before, and they believe that the outlook is more hopeful. With a population composed of people almost from "every nation under heaven," and a religious preponderance largely in favor of Roman Catholicism, Protestantism has been of slow growth. We believe a "new era is dawning." The home missionary spirit is awaking in all the churches, and work in this direction is being prosecuted faithfully and earnestly and successfully by the various denominations. Our City Mission is doing what it can under that most terrible of all limitations—scarcity of funds. Our churches are enjoying a good measure of success, which is evidenced by the fact that about 150 persons have been received since the year began. Bro. Sawyer, of Felicity, has had a revival in his church during the last two weeks, in which many have been quickened by the Spirit. Prayer meetings and class meetings are well attended; Sunday-schools, with their mission schools, are growing in numbers and interest, and the pastors are being paid with tolerable promptness. The future is full of promise. All we need now to insure the largest success is that every one of us shall fully realize that the Great Head of the church "expects every man to do his duty."

Items from Mississippi.

We have fallen upon evil times, yet they are the best times we have ever had—times in which the bad is more conspicuous than ever before because so powerfully confronted by and contrasted with the good. The devil was never so manifest as in the personal presence of Christ. Evil is persistent, yet good combats it energetically and hopefully.

I thought a few years ago that manslaughters and murders were decreasing in our Southland, but of late they seem to be getting more frequent. Everybody has heard of many of the killings in Mississippi during the last year or two, and of others they need not be told. The pistol is still doing its devilish and deadly work in spite of the futile laws which forbid a man's carrying one concealed. If a fine of one thousand dollars and imprisonment, at least, twelve months, were the penalty for having, showing or using a pistol in any manner, then pistols would cease to do harm because they would cease to be. Let the shortest lawful firearm be three feet long. Human life would then be at least 50 per cent. safer than it now is in this country.

The people where I travel say if a man steals a pig, he will be apt to go to the penitentiary; but if he commits a great crime, his danger of punishment is slight. If he be convicted, he may have strong hope of pardon. Several lynchings have taken place of late not far away from where I write. No man approves of lynching, yet I am very sorry I could not truthfully proclaim to a lynching mob: "Be patient; you know that the guilty are almost sure to be promptly and duly punished by our laws." When, "Let the law take its course," is almost equivalent to let the accused go free, what can be said to a mob who propose to punish crime in their own way? Lynching is a horrible and abominable, yet inevitable, result of a lax and uncertain administration of law. Yet in spite of all this, and the fact that any man I meet may have a pistol in his pocket, I feel safe; not because any law in Mississippi would or could prevent him from killing me if he wished, but because Mississippi is full of kind-hearted, chivalrous people—the best kind of people—well-bred Christians. The man in Mississippi who carries a pistol does not usually intend to kill anybody, but only to be on an equal footing with any man he meets who he knows may have a pistol. Protection here, I am sorry to say, is not in the law—for you are liable to see a pistol drawn at any time suddenly on the ears or on the public highway—but in the honor and integrity, the high-souled Christian humanity of the great majority of our people. Why, Mississippi has nearly seventy thousand Methodists, besides Baptists more numerous, and Presbyterians many, and others multitudinous, who are strong for God and the right. If, as Bro. Mellen tells us, a whole 500 at a time can be found among our Methodists who do not give more than a cent apiece a year to support the widows and orphans of preachers who lived, labored, suffered and died to serve them in the gospel, yet all the Christians are good-meaning people, and intend to do better and give more, and vote better and make the government better after awhile. True, a few people talk like they would vote to repeal the Decalogue because prohibitory laws don't prohibit, yet the great body of the people believe in prohibition, from Moses' time on to the end, whether it stops the thing or not; and they are going to vote to prohibit everything that's clearly against the honor of God and the good of man—pistols, saloons, Sabbath-breaking, and the like.

Southern Mississippi seems to be a great deal better, viewed in the light of the civil law, than the northern part of the State. The United States grand jury, in Jackson, recently adjourned after a laborious session without finding a dozen indictments, while a similar jury, I am informed, found hundreds of indictments in the northern district of the State.

We are about to have an immigration convention at Jackson. Well, indiscriminate foreign immigration has been a great evil for the last half-century, and now threatens to overthrow our free institutions. If our Southland could induce a few good citizens from other parts of the Union to find homes among us, it might be well. The best way to draw others to our part of the country is to maintain law and order, peace and prosperity among ourselves; then good people will desire to share our section with us. Let the convention be very careful as to what sort of people they invite.

ABOUT THAT HISS.

A hiss is not a very delightful sound, whether coming from fowl or reptile or man; there is something startling and even fearful about it. But the hiss that was given by the General Conference of the Northern Methodist Church, a few days since, in response to an irreverent and sacrilegious attack made upon St. Paul by a certain delegate, was an exception. It was most musical, refreshing and grateful to hear. That hiss represented much that is gratifying and reassuring to the child of God in these Southland regions. It declared that however radical may be certain movements going on in our sister church; that however disposed they may be to part with certain church furniture and certain ecclesiastical features, that the inspired volume itself is not included in that elimination; that, in whole or part—and, indeed, the minutest part—it is God's book to them, and, as such, they propose to stand by it, and protect it alike from the ruthless hand of the open enemy as well as the more insidious and damaging blow of the adversary who stands in their midst as a lamb, but who speaks with the voice of a dragon. This is not the first attack of the kind coming from those calling themselves the defenders of the faith. Such assaults upon the Bible are quite frequent from certain pulpits itching to catch the popular ear, or craving notoriety; and from Swedenborgians, who find all their fanciful theories about the resurrection, judgment and the atonement utterly overwhelmed by the Pauline epistles. To these we must add the attacks of excited individuals clamoring for woman's rights. And, remarkable to say, the onslaught is always upon this man of God, this mouthpiece of the Almighty, this apostle honored above all other servants of Heaven: in that he not only saw Christ in his ascended glory, but was caught up into paradise and permitted to return. And, even more noteworthy, all these diverse elements agree in the use of the same descriptive terms when they allude to him. And he who was filled with the spirit of revelation—he to whom God in his infinite majesty revealed himself six or seven distinct times, and through his lips spoke to the ages and for the ages—he, they say, is a "crank" and "old fogy," and "not up with the times."

Truly, the hiss came in well. It meant belief in Paul, and unbelief in the man that assailed Paul. It meant confidence in and loyalty and devotion to the Scriptures as they have come down to us through the hands of prophets and apostles and fathers to this day. And the hiss worked well with the delegate himself. It brought him to his senses, as the writer has seen a dash of cold water bring one out of a swoon.

The hiss is suggestive. Let us incorporate it in our form of public worship; and when a teacher or preacher assails or denies the Book, let some one arise, and say: "Let us all hiss. Bro. Blank, will you lead us in hissing? Amen to the hiss. Hallelujah! Hiss again, brethren!

The Inauguration.

On last Monday the new State government of Louisiana went into operation by the inauguration of Gov. Nicholls and the State officers. The oath of office was administered to the governor and lieut-governor by Chief Justice Bermudez. The ceremony took place in the presence of a large concourse of people in front of the capitol in Baton Rouge. The governor's inaugural address referred to the contrast between his present inauguration and that of eleven years before, and congratulated the people on the changed condition of affairs in our State. The policy of his administration is thus outlined:

If I can be fortunate in impressing upon the incoming administration those views and measures which are uppermost in my mind, and those hopes which lie deepest in my heart, it shall be an administration devoted to the best interest of the people of our State. I would make it an administration upon which the people could lean with absolute trust in its integrity of purpose and with the feeling that it had for them no undue burdens or selfish purpose. I would make its conduct such as to inspire them with the belief that their contributions of revenue for its support and of service in its maintenance were for the best purpose of government. I would make its educational system such that the blessings of instruction should be the birthright of every child in the land. I would make it alive to the mighty interest of development, improvement and commerce. I would guard its peaceful abodes from the invasion of disease and pestilence by proper sanitary and quarantine regulations, and, by an efficient and enlightened system of riparian levees, I would have it shield those who live and labor upon our alluvial lands from the destruction of the floods, which annually are borne upon the bosom of our great river. I would have it mercifully provide for those upon whom the blighting hand of disease or insanity has fallen without means of self-support by fostering those public charities which have distinguished our State. I would have it characterized by an enforcement of the law and by an enlightened and progressive conduct in the public service, and thus aid in making the fertile soil of our State the continued and increasing abode of morality, comfort and industry, thereby inviting those who live in less favored land to establish homes among us for themselves and for their children. If laws are found to bear unequally or oppressively upon any industry or class, I would have them amended or repealed. By rigidly keeping our expenditures within the limits of our revenues, honestly assessed and promptly collected, I would bring our current affairs to an absolutely cash basis; and by providing promptly for our public debt I would give supremest confidence to the public creditor and would place the credit of the State upon a firm and enduring basis.

The Revised Version gives many helpful changes in the translation of the original Scriptures; but there are some changes made which have rather obscured the meaning. We note one in the fifth chapter of John's gospel. In the Revised Version part of the third and all of the fourth verse is taken out entirely, but the seventh verse is left intact. To our view the seventh verse can not be understood as the passage now stands.

Personals.

Mr. Saukey goes to England for revival work, intending also to visit Ireland and Scotland.

Seth Thomas, the famous clock manufacturer, of Thomaston, Conn., died recently.

Gov. Taylor, of Tennessee, has been nominated by the Democratic Convention for re-election.

Two lady type-writers are employed by the secretary of the Louisiana Senate at a salary of $5 per day.

Rev. Dr. J. W. Lewis, of St. Louis, has been appointed agent of the American Bible Society for the State of Missouri.

Rev. J. W. Flynn, pastor of Memorial Church (Presbyterian), this city, has been elected to the chair of moral philosophy in the South Carolina University.

The degree, "D. D.," was conferred upon Rev. J. M. Roland and Rev. F. Richardson at the late commencement of Hiwassee College. The former is an author of some note; the latter is editor of the Holston Methodist.

Rev. W. W. Pinson, of Austin, Texas, who was recently elected editor of the Texas Christian Advocate, has declined that honor and office. In his letter to the Board of Publication he says:

I accepted on condition of the concurrence of the Bishop. Subsequent advice from Bishop Duncan assures me that I am needed in the pastorate, and convinces me that I can serve the church to better purpose in that capacity. In this judgment I cheerfully acquiesce, and in doing so I am not constrained alone by loyalty to authority, though that would be sufficient, but by the feeling also that it is best for the common cause. I must, therefore, decline the position tendered me by your action, with the feeling that the wisdom of our chief pastor has saved the church from what might have proven your mistake and my folly.

The Board will meet June 2, at Georgetown, to fill the vacancy caused by Bro Pinson's declination.

Hon. Randall L. Gibson, United States Senator, has been re-elected by the Louisiana Legislature.

The Baptists in Louisiana propose to raise, by the time their convention meets in July, the sum of $12,500 for denominational work in the State. Wide awake, they are!

Dr. D. D. Moore, editor of the Standard, of Memphis, Tenn., has been sick for two months, and his friends have little hope of his being able again to take charge of the editorial work of the Standard."

The Raleigh Christian Advocate, of May 16, announces the death of Rev. Dr. N. H. D. Wilson, of the North Carolina Conference. Dr. Wilson was one of the first men in our church, and his death will be felt all through the connection.

Rev. A. G. Miller, of Jackson, La., a supernumerary of the Louisiana Conference, died May 17. He was a native of New York, has lived in East Feliciana forty years and was connected with Centenary College for twenty-five years. A good man gone to his reward.

Dr. E. E. Sheib, president of the State Normal College, at Natchitoches, La., has been elected to fill the chair of pedagogies in the South Carolina University.

President Fitzhugh, of Whitworth College, gave us a call last week. He is busy closing a most prosperous session of his school and laying plans for a larger success in the future.

Mrs. Juliana Hayes has been elected to represent our Woman's Board of Missions at the World's Missionary Conference, to be held in Loudon, June 9-19.

We call the attention of our readers in North Louisiana to the program of the closing exercises of Prof. Smith's excellent school in Arcadia. No doubt it will be a fitting close to a session of durable work.

Bishop Keener returned home last Saturday. He was suffering somewhat from a cold, but expected to be off again in a few days to meet appointments in Alabama.

Bro. Scurlock, our supply for the Lower Coast Mission, reports the outlook encouraging in that direction. He had congregations at Port Eads and Pilot Town of about seventy-five persons each.

Notice.

I am now with Bro. White at Homer in a meeting. I have arranged to stay two months in Louisiana. My time is all filled up but about two meetings. Many brethren asked me to assist them. Let them write me here, and I will give the balance of my time in the State to those who write first and can be reached easiest in the line of my work.

Yours in Jesus,

L. L. PICKETT.

Our Publishing House.

The Book Committee of the Southern Methodist Publishing House met in Nashville, Tenn., May 2, 1888. The financial exhibit for the fiscal year ending April 1, 1888, was as follows:

Total merchandise sales	$114,590 66
Total amount Advocate subscriptions	33,213 88
Total amount Advocate advertising	4,893 13
Total amount S. S. periodical subscriptions	89,166 54
Total amount S. S. periodical advertising	936 72
Total amount subscriptions to Review	2,767 08
Total amount job and contract work	40,993 76
	$286,561 57
Making increase over last year	$ 4,099 56
Net results for the year	$ 53,309 20

April 1, 1887, there were of outstanding bonds $68,400. During the past year the House paid and canceled of this amount $52,700, leaving outstanding, April 1, 1888, $15,700; against which there is a sinking fund in hand (invested in interest-bearing securities) of $14,695, and $10,656 90 cash in bank. This is a good showing, at which we greatly rejoice.

Woman's Work.

The North Mississippi Conference Woman's Missionary Society convenes in Holly Springs, June 28 to July 1, inclusive. Conference sermon, Sunday, July 1, at 11 o'clock A. M., by Rev. J. B. Stone, presiding elder of Corinth district, North Mississippi Conference. Reduced fare on all railroads in North Mississippi will, doubtless, be obtained by the committee now corresponding with the officials. All delegates will please forward their names and addresses to Mrs. Nannie B. Fant, Holly Springs, Miss. Homes provided for all, whether delegates or not, who come to engage in the Master's work. Come praying, come believing, and may the Spirit of Christ guide, direct and control the Conference!

BOOKS.

WOMAN: HER POWER AND PRIVILEGES. By Dr. Talmage. The series is issued quarterly, by J. S. Ogilvie & Co., New York. Price $1 per year.

A series of sermons on the duties of the maiden, wife and mother and of their influence in the home and society.

THE SEMINARY METHOD OF ORIGINAL STUDY IN THE HISTORICAL SCIENCES. By Frank H. Foster, Ph.D. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Wharton and Bro., 3 Carondelet street, New Orleans. Price $1.

An extract from the preface shows the purpose of this little book. "The Seminary is a new institution in this country, and the student needs an introduction to it. He needs explanations of the method in forms which he can employ as models till he has gained for himself an independent grasp of it. It is the purpose of this book to supply the want of such instruction."

THE TABERNACLE: ITS FURNITURE, PRIESTHOOD AND CEREMONIES. Illustrated with colored plates prepared specially for the purpose, with maps and other illustrations of Palestine, for Sunday-school teachers and Bible students. Published by Cranston and Stowe, Cincinnati. Price 25 cents per dozen.

MARZIO'S CRUCIFIX. By F. Marion Crawford. Issued weekly at 50 cents. Quarterly subscription, $6 50. Macmillan & Co., New York.

This is the first number of Macmillan's Summer reading Library.

FRUIT-CANNING MADE EASY. By Mrs. J. L. Wheeler. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price fifteen cents.

This little book tells how to can successfully all sorts of fruits, and also how to preserve them. It has also a chapter on jellies, jams and marmalades. Can be had of the author, Fayetteville, N. C., or our House at Nashville.

PERIODICALS.

—Babyhood, for May, has a fine table of contents. The leading articles are Night Nursing, Milk-Crust, and, Is the Doll Doomed? Babyhood Publishing Company, 5 Beekman St., New York. Price $1 50 per annum.

—The American Magazine, for May, beginning the eighth volume, has a table of interesting contents. It is published by the American Magazine Company, 749 Broadway, New York. Price $3 a year.

—The Quiver, for June, is at hand, full of choice Sunday and general reading. We know of nothing better than this and nothing so cheap. Cassell and Company, New York. Price $1 50 per year.

—The Magazine of Art, for June, is on our table, and it is a superb number, both in matter and illustrations. Published by Cassell and Company, New York. Price $3 50 a year.

—The Studio is a journal devoted to the fine arts, edited by Clarence Cook, and published at $3 by the Studio Publishing Company, New York.

—Cassell's Family Magazine, for June, is a good and sprightly number containing much interesting reading for the family. Cassell & Company, New York. Price $1 50 a year.

—The Chautauquan, for June, is on our table. This is one of the best monthlies of our day. It is the official organ of the Chautauqua Literary and Scientific Circle. Price $1 50. Ten numbers.

The Treasury, for pastors and people, for June, comes laden with a rich cargo of good things. E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York. Price $2 50; clergymen, $2

Captain Force and Guy Norton returned last Tuesday evening from their Southern trip, after making purchases at Crowley, La. Mr. Norton purchased a fine farm near the town, and Capt. Force secured a small tract in the city and will engage in fruit raising and fancy gardening. They expect to return in a few months to make it their permanent home.—St. Paul (Neb.) Phonograph.

Medicine can now be clinched into a man by electricity, whether he wants to take it or not. The electrodes of a battery are saturated with the medicine and applied locally to the skin, and the medicine is absorbed. What is needed next is the discovery of a way of utilizing electricity to compel a man to be honest and pay his debts.

Mr. Philip Werlein has in stock a beautiful selection of organs. Anyone thinking of purchasing should call and see them before purchasing. Mr. Werlein's terms are moderate; he sells cheaper than ever before, and guarantees his instruments as first-class in every respect. There is no better judge of an organ, and anyone in the country can safely leave such a matter to him, and be assured that their order will receive prompt attention and prove satisfactory in every respect.

A small boy surprised his teacher at one of the grammar-schools by asking her how far a procession of the Presidents of the United States would reach if they were placed in a row. On her expressing her ignorance, he calmly announced: "From Washington to Cleveland."

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

At a traveling agency.—To clerk: "Did you ever realize anything in the German lotterie?" "Yes, sir. I tried five times, and realized that I was an idiot."

Lady (who had a sick husband)—Don't you think, doctor, that you ought to bleed my husband? Doctor (absent-mindedly)—No, madam, not until he gets well.

Southern Cultivator and Christian Advocate.

By a special arrangement we are enabled to offer to new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, the Southern Cultivator and Dixie Farmer, combined with the ADVOCATE, for $2 50 for the two publications for one year. The price to old subscribers will remain the same as heretofore—$2 75—with only twenty-five cents extra to either of the above amounts for "Dickson's System of Farming." These rates are postage prepaid. All orders must be accompanied by cash in full; no allowance for commission to agents, and both papers must be ordered at same time. We will, however, fill orders to subscribers who failed to take advantage of the club rate when they last renewed for $1 for the Cultivator for one year.

Our Young People.

ST. DUNSTAN AND THE FIEND.

BY WILLARD G. PARSONS.

St. Dunstan was a goodly man,
A saintly man was he.
He pommeled horse-shoes by the way
Upon his anvil-tree.

He dug a cell beneath the ground,
The cell so small was it.
That big, fat Dunstan, priestly man,
Could just fit in it sit.

Before St. Dunstan was a priest
He had a fiendish friend,
Who in his cell did visit him
The friendship now to mend.

But 'twould be best, so Dunstan thought,
The friendship now to close.
So with his pair of tongues red-hot
He held him by the nose.

He held him till he screamed with pain,
With fright and anger sore,
But Dunstan laughed, till Satan said,
"I'll tempt you never more."

* * * * * * *

When Dunstan's friend doth come to us
(For he lives yet awhile),
Let us not listen to his words,
Nor heed his crafty guile.

But gird our Christian armor on
And use our faithful shield
To quench his fiery, wicked darts,
And he to us will yield.

Letter from Aunt Loretta.

Dear Nieces and Nephews: Perhaps you think that I have forgotten you all; but here I come once more. Our good editor placed an embargo on your letters just before he went to Sour Lake; but the time is out now, and he has come back alive and well, so you can begin to write again. The editor told us so many wonderful things about Sour Lake and sour mud; but I am sure he did not get sour himself. If he had he never would have given us that cheery letter about meeting "an old friend" out there. And that "old friend" was your old friend, too. Every one of you know him like a book. Was it not real funny that a little girl floored our big editor on that easy word, "millinery?" But you know, girls understand the meaning of that word better than boys. Boys have to grow up, get married and foot the bills, before they get into the mystery of that word. Let me tell you that it is a great accomplishment to be a good speller. No sort of beautiful up strokes, or down strokes, graceful curves, grand flourishes with your pen can ever hide the deformity of a misspelt word. Cultivate the friendship of your "blue-backed-speller" (as a certain boy I know put it) if you want to reach the top rung of the ladder of fame.

Gardner Currie, your answer to the puzzle was correct. I think your promise to "be a better boy" will help you, and the promise you selected was such a sweet one. "Our Father" will never forsake his orphan children. It is a precious comfort to me to know that you and your sister "love Aunt Loretta" and "are glad when she writes." Sometimes Aunt Loretta sits up after everybody else is in bed and asleep just to write these letters to the nieces and nephews, because she loves to write and loves the children and wants to help them love Jesus. Some day you will stand on the ramparts and battle for the Lord. I hope that every one of the boys and girls of the ADVOCATE family may be valiant soldiers of the cross and "put on the whole armor of God." "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." If you wish to become wise or great, begin right and "ask the Savior to help you." Ask him to help you in your studies. Ask him to help you to be obedient. Ask him to help you out of your troubles and into peace and joy.

Not long after Rev. Charles Wesley was converted he wrote that never-ending song, "How happy are they who their Savior obey." I call it never-ending, because I believe some one of God's children have been singing that song ever since it was written, and some will sing it as long as the world stands. Of course, you all know it, and now I want you to sing it as if you were trying to make me hear it. If you are not happy it will make you happy. Sing it heartily, and it will ring in your ears all day like a chime of bells. God bless you all, my dear nieces and nephews!

MR. EDITOR: I promised a very dear friend months ago I would write again to the dear old ADVOCATE, and, doubtless, that friend thinks I have forgotten my promise. I have been very sick. Myself and four of my brothers had malarial fever for nearly three months. We had a severe time; but the good Lord remembered us in great mercy and spared our lives, for which I am truly thankful. I am going to school now with my sister and brother. I like my teacher very much; his name is Baten. Mamma promised me a nice present if I am a smart little girl and get my lessons well. I am trying my best. We have a new preacher this year—Bro. Galloway. I like him so much; he is so pleasant and has a kind word for the children, and is a good preacher. Bro. Johns has gone far away. I hope he will find as many friends in his new home as he has left in his old one. I will say to the people at Washington, they are greatly blessed. I hope he will read my letter and remember the little girl that loved to sit by him. Bro. Blocker is not so far. I expect to have the pleasure of seeing him this year and hearing him preach one of his good sermons. I hope he will be appreciated as much as he was here. Bro. Wilkinson is our Sunday-school superintendent; he is the right man on the right place, and we all love him. I have some very dear cousins far away. I hope they will read my letter. I will ask the little cousins a question, and hope some one will answer it: Who was the first bishop? With many kind wishes for you, Mr. Editor, I will close.

Your little friend,

TIOIA J. GREENE.
